DEPENDENCIES.—South Georgia, an island 800 miles east-south-east of the Falkland Group, with an area of 1,450 square miles. An Administrative Officer and other officials reside there. In the South Shetlands, Deception Island contains the harbour at Port Foster, ice-free for about five months in the year. On the South Orkneys the Argentine Government has, with the permission of H.M. Government, established a meteorological station, in connection with a discovery that a cold winter in the Weddell Sea is a precursor of drought in the maize and cereal area of Argentina 3½ years later. The other dependencies, of which the principal units are the South Sandwich Islands and Graham's Land (a peninsula of the Antarctic Continent) are even more inhospitable than those already named, being covered with snow and ice and almost completely destitute of plant life. In spite, however, of the climatic and other disadvantages, the revenue derived from all the dependencies in 1957-58 amounted to £443,050 and the expenditure to £504,263. There is a whaling industry in South Georgia. One British, 1 Argentinian and 1 Norwegian company operated during the 1957-58 season, 191,616 barrels of whale oil being exported. Sealing operations yielded 12,476 barrels of seal oil in 1958. A chain of meteorological stations is maintained in the Dependencies.

The journey from U.K. to Falkland Isles can be accomplished in 8 days travelling to Montevideo by air and thence by local steamer to the Falklands.

FIJI

This is a group of 322 islands (of which only 106 are inhabited) in the South Pacific Ocean, about 1,100 miles north of New Zealand. The gross area of the group, which extends 300 miles from east to west, and 300 north to south, between 15° 45'-21° 10' S. lat. and 176° E.—178° W. long. is 7,083 square miles. Many of the islands are of volcanic origin, with lofty mountains, and well wooded. The principal are Viti Levu, Vanua Levu, Taveuni and Kandavu. The climate is oceanic. Shade temperatures seldom rise above 93°F. or fall below 60° except in the mountains. On the windward sides of the larger islands rainfall is copious and vegetation luxuriant; on the leeward (or dry) sides the vegetation is sparse and scattered. The chief products are coconuts, sugar cane, gold, rice, bananas, pineapples, yams, and dalo or taro (colocasia).

The population (estimated 1958) was 374,284 (184,290 Indians, 157,808 Fijians, 8,273 part Europeans, 8,989 Europeans, 4,708 Rotuman, 5,797 other Pacific Islanders, 4,545 Chinese and part Chinese and 76 others).

The principal exports are sugar, coconut oil, gold, copra, bananas, biscuits, trocas shell and manganese ore. The chief imports are drapery, machinery, motor vehicles, petroleum products, timber, foodstuffs and electrical goods. The tourist industry is growing.

GOVERNMENT

The Governor is appointed by the Crown, and is assisted by an Executive Council. Laws are passed by a Legislative Council (of which the Governor is president) containing 16 official members, 5 European members (3 elected, 2 nominated), 5 Native members (nominated from a panel submitted by the Council of Chiefs), 5 Indian members (3 elected and 2 nominated), and a Speaker (H. M. Scott, C.B.E., D.F.C.).

The executive officer for the native administration is the Secretary for Fijian Affairs, who is responsible to the Governor and, in appropriate matters, to the Legislative Council. The controlling financial authority is the Fijian Affairs Board whose members are the Secretary for Fijian Affairs (Chairman), the five native members of Legislative Council, a legal adviser, and a financial adviser. The Board has power to make regulations affecting the Fijians, but such regulations are subject to approval by the Legislative Council.

It is a base for South Pacific regional air services, covering New Zealand, Western Samoa, New Caledonia, Tahiti, Cook and Norfolk Islands.

GAMBIA

The West African river Gambia, which is navigable for some 300 miles from its mouth, was discovered by the Portuguese in 1447; and in 1588, the year of the Spanish Armada, Queen Elizabeth I. being then at war with Spain and Portugal, gave a charter to a British Company to trade with the Gambia, and as early as 1618 an effort to do so was made, but it was not successful. In 1686 a fort was built upon a rocky island, and, in honour of the new King, was named Fort James; but the English merchants had formidable rivals in the Portuguese and French, and it was not until 1783 that the river was recognized, by the Treaty of Versailles, as British. The Colony had no regular political institutions until 1807, when it was put under the Government of Sierra Leone. The Colony of the Gambia was created in 1843, and was constituted a separate government in 1888. It now consists of the island of St. Mary, British Kombo, Albreda, the Ceded Mile, MacCarthy Island, and various other islands and territories on the banks of the river. The total area is estimated at 4,003 sq. miles. The population of the island of St. Mary, at the census of 1951 was 27,297, and that of the Protectorate was 260,160 (estimated, 1957, 236,421). The climate is unhealthy during the rainy season, viz., from June to October; but during the rest of the year it is pleasant and generally healthy. The rainfall is extremely variable from year to year, ranging between 30 and 59 inches. Internal communication is by motor vessels and launches; there are no railways. There are 5 Government wireless stations.

Education.—Government expenditure on education amounted to about £128,250 in 1958. In Bathurst there are 10 primary schools with an enrolment of 3,400 pupils; but all but one of these schools are financed entirely by Government. Pupils enter school at 5 years of age and have 3 years infants' schooling followed by 4 years primary; some 30 per cent. of the pupils obtain entry to secondary schools and the remainder spend a further 3 years in primary school. There are 4 secondary schools, run by the Missions—2 boys, 2 girls. Enrolment in 1958 was 587 pupils. There is also a technical school and clerical school in Bathurst. In the Protectorate there are 22 District Authority schools and 8 Mission schools with a total enrolment of 1,395 pupils. Pupils enter school at 7-8 years of age for a 4 year course. There is also a secondary modern school at Georgetown.

The chief export is ground-nuts, which form over eighty-nine per cent. of the total exports; practically all of this crop is sent to Europe, where the oil is extracted and used for the same purpose as olive oil. Palm kernels, hides and skins, and beeswax are also exported; and rice, cotton, maize, and a kind of millet called kous are produced in the countries bordering the Gambia, but not in sufficient quantities to meet local requirements. The chief imports are apparel, cotton goods, flour, kola nuts, oil, rice, soap, spirits, metals of all kinds, sugar, tobacco and motor vehicles.

Total tonnage of vessels entered and cleared in 1958 was 988,096.

a rocky promontory, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length, $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile in breadth and 1,396 feet high at its greatest elevation near the southern extremity of Spain, with which it is connected by a low isthmus. It is about 14 miles distant from the opposite coast of Africa. The estimated population (1958) is 25,643.

Ψ Gibraltar is a naval base of vital strategic importance to Great Britain. It was captured in 1704, during the war of the Spanish Succession, by a combined Dutch and English force, under Sir George Rooke, and was ceded to Great Britain by the Treaty of Utrecht, 1713. Several attempts have been made to retake it, the most celebrated being the great siege in 1779-83, when General Elliot, afterwards Lord Heathfield, held it for 3 years and 7 months against a combined French and Spanish force. The town stands at the foot of the promontory on the W. side. Gibraltar is a free port, and enjoys the advantages of an extensive shipping trade. It is a popular tourist centre. The chief sources of revenue are the port dues, the rent of the Crown estate in the town, and duties on wine, spirits, tobacco, beer, motor spirit, perfumery, coffee, fuel oil, motor vehicles, radios, cameras and cinematograph projectors, mechanical lighters, razor blades, watches and clocks.

The Department of Education runs 8 secondary schools and 15 primary and infant schools. There are also 3 private infant schools. Teacher training and University Scholarships have been provided, 4,083 pupils are at present in Government schools, and the Government expenditure on education in 1958 was £135,036.

HONG KONG

The Crown Colony of Hong Kong, consisting of a number of islands and of a portion of the mainland, on the south-eastern coast of China, is situated at the eastern side of the mouth of the Pearl River, between 22° 9' and 22° 37' N. lat. and 113° 52'–114° 30' E. long.

The capital city, Victoria, situated on the island of Hong Kong, is 91 miles S.E. of Canton and 40 miles E. of the Portuguese colony of Macao at the other side of the Pearl River. It lies along the northern shore of the island and faces the mainland; the harbour (17 sq. miles water area) lies between the city and the mainland, on which is situated Kowloon with a population equalling that of Victoria. The total area of the Colony is 301 sq. miles with a population which has varied considerably during recent years owing to unsettled conditions in China. In Dec. 1958 it was thought to be about 2,806,000.

The island of Hong Kong is about 11 miles long and from 2 to 5 miles broad, with a total area of 32 square miles; at the eastern entrance to the harbour it is only separated from the mainland by a narrow strait (Lei Yue Mun), 500–900 yards in width. It was first occupied by Great Britain in January, 1841, and formally ceded by the Treaty of Nanking in 1842; Kowloon was subsequently acquired by the Peking Convention of 1860; and the New Territories, consisting of a peninsula in the southern part of the Kwangtung province, together with adjacent islands, by a 99-year lease signed June 9, 1898.

The island is broken in shape and mountainous, the highest point being Victoria Peak, which is 1,805 feet high. The New Territories contain several peaks higher than this, the highest being Tai Mo Shan, 3,140 feet. The summer weather is continuously hot and humid and often cloudy and showery. During the winter months, from November to March, the climate is cooler, drier, and more invigorating. The mean monthly temperature ranges from 59°F. in February to 82°F. in July, the average for the year being 72°F. The temperature rarely exceeds 95°F. in summer or falls below 40°F. in winter. The average annual rainfall is 84.76 in., of which no less than 75 per cent falls between May and September, when the S.W. monsoon prevails.

wharves and dry docks, capable of holding vessels up to 750 ft. in length. Shipping tonnage for the year ending March, 1959, was 30,921,147. A railway, 22 miles in length, owned by the Government, runs between Kowloon and the Chinese frontier. It forms a direct overland communication with Canton, Hankow and Shanghai, but since October, 1949, all through passenger traffic has been suspended.

Hong Kong Airport is at Kai Tak on the north and west shores of Kowloon Bay, some 4 miles from the centre of Kowloon, and is regularly used by 19 international airlines including a locally registered airlines, which provide frequent services to Europe, U.S.A., Canada, Australia and neighbouring territories, China excepted. The Colony is an important link on the main air routes of the Far East. B.O.A.C. operates 6 services per week to London, two of these being on the longer route via Singapore, two on the more direct route via Bangkok and two via Rangoon. The airport is normally open from dawn to dusk, but can be opened for night flying in emergency. A new runway was completed at Kai Tak in September, 1958, and the completion of approach lighting in June, 1959, permits 24-hour operations by the most modern types of aircraft. A flying boat base is adjacent to the airfield.

Education.—In March, 1959, there were 1,457 schools with 435,774 pupils. 32 per cent. of all schools are financed wholly or in part by the Government. The University of Hong Kong has a full-time residential student strength of 1,126 (including 293 women) in Faculties of Arts, Science, Medicine, Engineering and Architecture. There is also an Institute of Oriental Studies and a new Department of Extra-Mural Studies has been established.

TRADE

Hong Kong's traditional trade with the mainland has declined, but there has developed a different type of entrepôt trade, involving all countries in the Far East, with Hong Kong as an intermediary. Moreover, the rapid growth of domestic industry, mainly manufacturing for consumers, has been a feature of the last few years. The Colony's products include a wide range of cotton piecegoods, cotton yarn, clothing, household enamel and aluminium wares, footwear, toys and dolls, metal torches and batteries, furniture, artificial flowers, linen, plastic articles, vacuum flasks and jugs, lacquers, varnishes and paints, metal lanterns, iron and steel bars and rounds, cement and foodstuffs (including beverages).

The adverse balance on visible trade is offset by a favourable balance on invisible account—remittances from overseas Chinese, exchange, shipping and insurance profits, and the spending of tourists, etc. In 1958 Hong Kong's principal customers for its domestic products, in order of value of trade, were the United Kingdom, U.S.A., Malaya, Indonesia, Thailand, Federal Republic of Germany, Australia and Nigeria. Mainland China continued to be the principal supplier of goods, followed by Japan, the United Kingdom, U.S.A., Thailand and the Federal Republic of Germany.

GOVERNMENT

Hong Kong is administered as a Crown colony with a Governor, aided by an Executive Council, consisting of 6 official and 6 unofficial members, and a Legislative Council, which consists of nine official and eight unofficial members. There is also an Urban Council in which is vested, inter alia, power of making bye-laws in respect of certain matters of public health and sanitation.

KENYA

The Colony and Protectorate of Kenya is bisected by the equator and extends approximately from latitude 4° N. to latitude 4° S. and from longitude 34° E. to 41° E. From the coast of the Indian Ocean in the east, the borders of Kenya are with Somaliland in the east and Ethiopia and Sudan in the north and north-west. To the west lie the Uganda Protectorate and Lake Victoria. On the south is Tanganyika Territory. The total area is 224,960 square miles (including 5,224 square miles of water). The total estimated population in mid 1958 was 6,351,000, including 64,700 Europeans, 165,000 Indo-Pakistanis and Goans, and 35,500 Arabs.

The Territory is divided into 6 Provinces (Nyanza, Rift Valley, Central, Coast, Southern and Northern) and an Extra-Provincial District (Nairobi).

Kenya Protectorate consists of a strip extending 10 miles inland along the coast from the Tanganyika mandated territory frontier to Kipini and the islands of the Lamu Archipelago. The Protectorate also includes the Witu Protectorate, a small tract of country at the mouth of the Tana River.

Production.—Although the Colony lies astride the Equator, the range of altitude from sea level to 17,000 feet enables most types of crops, both indigenous and introduced, to be grown. In the coastal region the principal crops are copra, maize, sisal, sugar and cotton, while the yield of a comparatively new crop, cashew nuts, is steadily increasing. Passing from the coastal strip the country becomes flat, dry and in some places semi-desert of very little agricultural value. At about two hundred and fifty miles inland the first rise of the Kenya Highlands is met. Part of this extremely fertile upland area at altitudes between 5,000 feet and 9,000 feet is cultivated by some thousands of European farmers who produce among other crops wheat, coffee, maize, sisal, wattle, pyrethrum and tea. Extensive herds of native and imported stock are maintained, and there is considerable production of meat and butter. Some 7,000,000 acres are under white occupation in this area. There are also very extensive forests in the Highlands, cedar for the pencil industry being a valuable export. The value of domestic exports in 1958 was £29,300,000. Contributing to this total were sisal (£228,000), coffee (£10,405,000), hides and skins (£1,081,000), tea (£3,217,000), and pyrethrum (£1,289,000).

Prospecting and mining are carried on in many parts of the Colony, the principal minerals at present produced being soda ash, salt, limestone, gold, kyanite and diatomite. The value of the production of main minerals in 1958 was as follows: refined gold, £96,269, soda ash £1,275,826, cement £1,895,542, salt £146,810, diatomite £60,044, carbon dioxide gas £48,629, graphite £32,987.

Hydro-electric power has been developed, particularly on the Upper Tana River and electricity is now available in Nairobi from the Owen Falls Dam scheme in Uganda.

Since the end of the war there has been a great increase in the number of secondary industries, many of which are engaged in processing agricultural produce but which also manufacture an increasing range of products from local and imported raw materials to meet the needs of the East African Territories. Industrial areas are being developed or planned in all the principal towns.

The main imports are manufactured goods, classified chiefly as materials, machinery and transport equipment, mineral fuels, lubricants and related materials.

Communications.—The postal service handled 65,658,904 postal packets in 1958. The telegraph and telephone system has nearly 122,000 miles of line. The number of telephones exceeds 34,000, A cable connects Mombasa with Zanzibar, and a wireless station in Nairobi works direct with the United Kingdom, providing both telegraph and telephone facilities. There is a coast wireless station at Mombasa with a radio-telephone service for the marine mobile service. Telephone and/or telegraph communication by both line and radio exists in the majority of the settled areas of the Colony and to Uganda, Tanganyika, Belgian Congo, Nyasaland and South Africa.

The East African Railways and Harbours are a self-contained and self-financing service of the East Africa High Commission; the railway, which is metre gauge, has a total route mileage of open line of 3,402 miles, made up as follows: Kenya and Uganda Section—Main Line: Mombasa—Kampala—Kasere (1,081 miles); Principal Lines: Nakuru Junction—Kisumu (131), Tororo—Soroti (100), Voi—Kahe Junction (94); Minor and Branch Lines: Rongai—Solai (27), Kisumu—Butere (43), Leseru—Kitale (41), Mbulumuti—Namasagali (19), Kampala—Port Bell (6), Gilgil—Thomson's Falls (48), Nairobi—Nanyuki (145). The Konza-Lake Magadi Line (91 miles) is worked but not owned by East African Railways and Harbours. Tanganyika Section—Main Line; Dar-es-Salaam-Kigoma (779 miles); Principal Line; Tabora-Mwanza (236); Branch Line: Kaliuwa-Mpanda (131). The Tanga Line runs from Tanga to Arusha (273 miles). Southern Province Railway: Mtwara-Nachingwea (132 miles); Chilingula-Masasi (25 miles). In addition the Administration operates a marine service on Lakes Victoria, Kioga, Albert and Tanganyika, and also on the River Nile, with a route mileage of 6,311 miles. There are also 2,685 miles of road services connecting the Central and Tanga Lines and providing regular transport to the Southern and Usambara Highlands, with subsidiary road services in Kenya and Uganda. East African Railways and Harbours control the five seaports of Mombasa, Tanga, Dar-es-Salaam, Lindi and Mtwara. Mombasa, Dar-es-Salaam and Mtwara have deep-water berths and Tanga and Lindi are lighterage ports.

Scheduled trunk airline services during 1957 were operated to or through Kenya, from Embakasi airport near Nairobi, by B.O.A.C., Air India, South African Airways, Air France, Central African Airways, Scandinavian Air Services, Airwork and Hunting Clan, while regional scheduled services were also run by East African Airways, Sabena, Ethiopian Air Lines, Aden Airways and Alitalia.

Road affairs are under the control of the Road Authority. Capital funds are allocated to the Authority by the Colony's Development Committee.

There are in the Colony 3,709 miles of trunk roads, 5,247 miles of secondary roads and 6,695 miles of grant earning minor roads, and in the Northern Frontier Province and African Areas there are in addition approximately 8,900 miles of administrative tracks. Fewer than 500 miles of road throughout the Colony are as yet bitumen surfaced and funds for the extension of this mileage are urgently required, as the gravel (murrum) roads are proving increasingly difficult to maintain in the light of the growing traffic density. At the end of 1958 more than 73,000 vehicles were licensed, an increase of approximately 8 per cent. over the previous year.

Nairobi, the Capital City and seat of Government is situated at latitude 12° S. and longitude 36°8'E. at 5,500 feet above sea level. It is 307 miles by road from Mombasa, the Colony's port and is also the site of Africa's most modern airport, opened in 1958. Mombasa possesses what is perhaps the finest harbour on the East Coast of Africa and is well served by shipping lines from Europe and Asia besides a frequent coastal service. Other centres are Eldoret, Kisumu, Lamu, Nakuru and Nyeri.

LEEWARD ISLANDS

(See WEST INDIES)

THE MALDIVE ISLANDS

The Maldive Islands 420 miles south-west of Ceylon, are a number of islands naturally divided into groups. There are 17 such groups, forming 17 atolls. The total number of islands is over 7,000, some being very small indeed. They are richly covered with coconut palms, and yield millet, fruit and edible nuts. About 215 islands are inhabited. The old form of Government was abolished in 1932, and a new Constitution was introduced. In February, 1954, after a short period of republican government, the Sultanate was restored. The international relations of the Maldives, which is a Protected State, are conducted by the United Kingdom Government, which continues to protect the islands.

Population is from 85,000 to 90,000. The people are Moslems. They are highly civilized and are great navigators and traders.

The Capital of the Maldives is Malé, on King's Island.

MALTA, G.C.

an island in the Mediterranean Sea, 60 miles from Sicily and about 180 from the African coast, about 17 miles in length and 9 in breadth, and having an area of 94.9 square miles. The colony includes also the adjoining island of Gozo (area 25.9 sq. miles): Comino and several islets. The estimated population in January, 1959 was 323,970.

The island of Malta is said to have been converted to Christianity on the occasion of the shipwreck of St. Paul in A.D. 58. In 870 it was taken by the Arabs, its commerce was destroyed, and it was used mainly as a base for piratical expeditions. In 1090 it was again brought under Christian rule, being conquered by the Norman Count Roger of Normandy. It passed successively under the rule of the Angevins and Aragonese, and followed the fortunes of their kingdoms. In 1530 it was handed over to the Knights of St. John, who made of it a stronghold of Christianity. In 1565 it sustained the famous siege, when the last great effort of the Turks was successfully withstood by Grandmaster La Valette. The Knights expended large sums in fortifying the island and carrying out many magnificent works, until they were expelled by Napoleon in 1798. The Maltese rose against the French garrison soon afterwards, and, with the assistance of some British and Neapolitan troops, compelled the French to capitulate in 1800. The islands were then, at their own wish, admitted into the British Empire, the act being confirmed by the Treaty of Paris in 1814.

Malta was again closely besieged in the last war and again withstood the attacks of all its enemies. From June, 1940, to the end of the war, 432 members of the garrison and 1,540 civilians were killed by enemy aircraft, and about 35,000 houses were destroyed or damaged.

The Parliament of the United Kingdom made a free grant of £10,000,000 for restoring war damage, and a further grant of £20,000,000 was subsequently made for the same purpose and for general reconstruction and replanning.

The climate, although not tropical, is hot in summer. The islands are intensively cultivated. The chief export crops are potatoes and onions. Wheat, barley, clover and tomatoes are extensively grown on dry lands, while on irrigated land all the usual temperate climate and sub-tropical vegetables are grown. Tomatoes are grown on irrigated and non-irrigated land. Agriculture and fishing are among the principal occupations of the inhabitants.

Mdina (Notabile), the former capital of the island, contains the ancient palace of the courts of justice, the Cathedral, and the Old Seminary; its population has now dwindled to 836, but its suburb, Rabat, has 12,977 inhabitants. Notabile has been entirely eclipsed in importance by the modern capital, Valletta, which was founded in 1566. The principal harbour is one of the finest in the world; it is very deep, and large vessels can anchor alongside the shore. It is an important port of call for vessels passing to and from the East and the Suez Canal, being about half-way between Gibraltar and Port Said. There is an extensive arsenal and important dockyard, Malta being the headquarters of the Mediterranean Fleet and N.A.T.O. Mediterranean Command.

Malta possesses a University (about 300 students) and 2 Lyceums (1,632 boys); 4 grammar schools (1,558 girls); 109 Government primary schools (55,251 pupils); and 5 technical schools (875 students). There are numerous private elementary and secondary schools. English and Maltese are the only languages taught in the Government primary schools. In religion the Maltese are Roman Catholics. The Maltese language is of Semitic origin, and is held by some to be derived from the Carthaginian and the Phœnician tongues. There is a Maltese order of nobility, recognized by the Crown, consisting of 28 families.

English and Maltese are the official languages of administration and Maltese is the official language in all the Courts of Law and the language of general use in the islands. The Court may order the use of the English language in any proceedings before it where any party or any accused person does not speak Maltese as the principal language to which he is accustomed; but when all parties or accused persons are English-speaking, the use of English is obligatory. Where the proceedings are in a language not known to the party or parties or to the accused they are translated. In 1934, Maltese was substituted for Italian as the principal language of the Courts of Law.

MALTA'S NATIONAL DAY is September 8, commemorating the raising of the sieges of 1565 and 1940-43.

GOVERNMENT

By Letters Patent dated September 5, 1947, self-government was re-established in Malta, on the basis of a division of responsibility between the Maltese Imperial Government (representing the interests of the United Kingdom) and an elected government of Malta. Under this system the Maltese Legislature could not pass laws touching the public safety or defence of Her Majesty's dominions and the general interests of British subjects outside Malta. In addition to this general reservation, certain subjects were specifically withheld from the Legislature's competence. The principal subjects so reserved dealt with the defence of the island and naval, military or air force matters generally, aliens, immigration, currency and treaties and relations with foreign states. Laws dealing with "reserved matters" could be made by the Governor subject to Her Majesty's approval, or by Order in Council.

The Governor was assisted by two Councils: the Executive Council, containing Maltese Ministers, which was in effect a cabinet, and the Nominated Council, consisting of the Lieutenant-Governor, the Legal Secretary (as ex officio members), and the three Heads of Services from the Royal Navy, Army and Royal Air Force. There was also a Privy Council consisting of the members of these two bodies together.

Following protracted and unsuccessful negotiations between the Maltese Cabinet and the United Kingdom Government on economic matters, the then Ministers resigned on April 21, 1958, and the Legislative Assembly was dissolved. The Governor assumed direct responsibility for the administration of the islands and on April 29 proclaimed a state of public emergency in view of the necessity to legislate in the absence of Ministers and of the disturbances which had taken place.

On August 18, 1958, Her Majesty's Government announced its intention of inviting the Maltese political parties to join in discussions on future constitutional arrangements in November of that year. These discussions were duly held in London, but no common basis for progress could be found. In consequence, Her Majesty's Government revoked the 1947 Constitution and introduced on April 15, 1959, a new interim Constitution, whereby the former "dyarchy" disappeared, and a unitary form of government took its place, headed by the Governor himself, who is advised by an Executive Council comprising both officials and nominated members. Her Majesty's Government has announced its intention of holding further constitutional talks with the Maltese political parties, with a view to the restoration of self-government, when the political situation offers the prospect of such discussions proving fruitful.

MAURITIUS

Mauritius is an island lying in the Indian Ocean, 550 miles east of Madagascar, between 57° 17'-57° 46' E. long. and S. lat. 19° 58'-20° 33', and comprising with its dependencies an area of 805 square miles. The resident population at the census of 1952 was 501,415, made up of Indians, Europeans (mainly French), and persons of mixed descent. The total population, including dependencies, was estimated (Dec. 31, 1958) at 632,721.

Mauritius was discovered in 1511 by the Portuguese, but they never formed any settlement on it. The Dutch visited it in 1598, and named it Mauritius, in honour of the Stadtholder, Prince Maurice of Nassau. In 1638 they established a small colony on the shore, but in 1710 they abandoned the island, and in 1715 the French took possession of it and changed the name to Isle de France, but did not settle it until 1721. Under the French it became a great centre of trade. In 1789 the seat of French Government in the East was removed to it from Pondicherry, and it was taken by a British force in 1810. The French language and French law have been preserved under British rule though the ancient name, Mauritius, was restored.

Of the total cultivable area of about 210,000 acres, 197,000 are under sugar, about 2,900 under aloe (regular plantations), 1,000 under maize, 3,600 under tea, 1,000 under tobacco and the rest under other foodcrops and mixed farming. The sugar crop of 1958 was about 526,000 metric tons.

Situated just within the tropics but being a small land mass in a large ocean area, Mauritius has a climate more subtropical than tropical except at low altitudes. In summer, conditions are sometimes trying because of high humidities and light winds rather than because of the relatively high temperatures. The island lies in that region of the South Indian Ocean where tropical cyclones are most frequent. At times, as in 1892, 1931 and 1945 they are very severe and do much damage to crops and buildings.

Railways and Shipping.—There is an excellent harbour on the N.W. coast, on which the capital, Port Louis, stands, and the annual trade of the island passes entirely through Port Louis. The shipping entered in 1958 amounted to 1,456,905 tons, and the shipping cleared to 1,477,891 tons. In 1958 there were 82 miles of railway (4 ft. 8½ in. gauge), 75 post-offices and postal agencies, 48 telegraph offices and 15 telephone-exchange offices in the island, with 210 miles of telegraph, including block telegraph of the railway and 11,040 miles of underground and overhead (Government) telephone wires and 8,761 telephone installations.

Civil Aviation.—The island is linked by air with Africa, U.K. and Europe through the scheduled services of Air France, twice weekly with Super Constellation aircraft. South African Airways, flying DC7B aircraft, and Qantas Empire Airways with Super Constellations, provide scheduled services from South Africa and Australia respectively, via Mauritius and Cocos Islands.

The inhabitants of European descent are mostly Roman Catholic. Educational facilities are available up to University entrance level. Primary education is provided in 420 schools, of which 107 are Government, 76 aided and 237 unaided schools. There are 4 Government secondary schools, 3 for boys (one being a Technical Institute) and 1 for girls, and 62 non-Government secondary schools, 8 of which are grant-aided.

GOVERNMENT

The Government is vested in a Governor with an Executive and Legislative Council. The Mauritius (Constitution) Order in Council, 1958, provides for a Legislative Council consisting of the Speaker (appointed by the Governor from outside the Council), three ex officio members (the Colonial Secretary, the Attorney-General and the Financial Secretary), forty elected members and such nominated members not exceeding 12 in number as the Governor may appoint.

The Colony is divided into 40 single member Constituencies and every person (male or female) has the right to vote who—(a) is a British subject of the age of 21 years or upwards; and (b) has resided in the Colony for a period of at least 6 months immediately before the date of registration or is domiciled in the Colony and is residing therein at that date; and (c) has resided in the constituency in which he claims to be registered as a voter for a period of at least 6 months immediately before the date of registration.

The Executive Council consists of the 3 ex officio members above mentioned and 9 appointed members. The appointed members are persons who are elected or nominated members of the Legislative Council and are appointed by the Governor acting in his discretion. The ex officio members and the appointed members are all styled Ministers. The Ministerial system was established in July, 1957 in anticipation of the constitution provided in 1958.

Rodrigues, 350 miles east-north-east of Mauritius, area, 40 square miles. Population (1958) 17,018.

Cattle, beans, salt fish, sheep and goats are the principal exports. The island is under the administration of a Magistrate and Civil Commissioner from Mauritius, who takes his orders from the Governor of Mauritius. Magistrate, C. Rochecouste.

Other Dependencies.—Most of the scattered groups of coral islands belonging to Great Britain in the Indian Ocean are administered by the Mauritius Government, being visited periodically by two magistrates, whose duty it is to inquire into the condition of the labourers, and settle any disputes which may be referred to them. The chief product is coconut oil. The most important are the Oil Islands Group, the largest of which, Port Diego Garcia (pop. 1958, 625), lies on the direct route from the Red Sea to Australia, and possesses a good harbour; other islands are Six Islands, Peros Banhos, Agalega, St. Brandon, Salomon, and Trois Frères. The total area of the "Other Dependencies" is about 47½ square miles, with a population (1958) of 1,815.

THE NEW HEBRIDES

The New Hebrides Group, in the South Pacific Ocean, situated between the 13th and 21st degrees of South latitude and the 166th and 170th degrees of East longitude, of an area of roughly 5,700 square miles, is administered by a British-French Condominium Government.

The principal islands are Espiritu Santo, Malekula, Epi, Ambrym, Efate or Sandwich, Erromanga, Tanna, Anietyum, Aoba, Macwo and Pentecost. The British Resident Commissioner, exercising powers delegated to him by the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, and the French Resident Commissioner, representing the High Commissioner for France in the Pacific Ocean, are the joint heads of the Administration. They each have small staffs of national officers who assist them in general administrative work and the running of social services (health and education) financed from national funds, part of which come from the Metropolitan Governments. In addition they jointly control the "mixed" public services (posts and telegraphs, public works, mines, meteorology, etc.) which are financed from funds raised in the Territory. The population (Dec. 1958) was 55,713, of which 51,242 is the estimated number of native inhabitants. Principal products are copra, coffee, cocoa, kauri timber and sandalwood. Imports for 1958 totalled £1,463,580, of which £763,500 was the value of imports from Australia. Exports in 1958 were valued at £2,218,552, £1,554,380 being the value of exports to France. Joint revenue, 1958, £520,596; expenditure, £494,352.

Attached to the New Hebrides are the Banks (309 sq. miles, pop. 2,475) and Torres (40 sq. miles, pop. 164) Islands.

Seat of New Hebrides Administration—Ψ Vila, Efate, pop. about 1,900.

British High Commissioner, Sir John Gutch, K.C.M.G., O.B.E.

French High Commissioner, L. Péchoux.

British Resident Commissioner, J. S. Rennie, C.M.G., O.B.E.

FEDERATION OF NIGERIA

The Federation of Nigeria is situated on the west coast of Africa. It is bounded on the south by the Gulf of Guinea, on the west and north by Dahomey and French Niger and on the east by the French Cameroons. A small portion of the old German colony of the Cameroons is administered by the United Kingdom under United Nations' Trusteeship as an integral part of Nigeria. The area including this portion is about 373,250 sq. miles. A belt of mangrove swamp forest 10-60 miles in width lies along the entire coastline. North of this there is a zone 50-100 miles wide of tropical rain forest and oil-palm bush. North of this the country rises and the vegetation changes to open woodland and savannah. In the extreme north the country is almost desert. There are few mountains except along the eastern boundary, where the highest peak is the 13,350-foot Cameroon Mountain. In Northern Nigeria, the central plateau rises to 6,000 feet, with an average level of 4,000 feet. The Niger, Benue, and Cross are the main rivers.

The climate varies with the types of country described above, but Nigeria lies entirely within the tropics and temperatures are high. Temperatures of over 100° in the north are common while coast temperatures are seldom over 90°. The humidity at the coast, however, is much higher than in the north. The rainy season is from about May to October; rainfall varies from under 25 inches a year in the extreme north to 150 inches on the eastern coast line. An area at the foot of the Cameroon Mountain has a freak rainfall of over 350 inches. During the dry season the harmattan wind blows from the desert: it is laden with fine particles of dust.

The 1952-53 Census returns gave a total population of 31,200,000 (Northern Region 16,800,000; Eastern Region 8,000,000; Western Region 6,400,000). It is estimated that at mid-1959 the total population was about 35,000,000. The population is almost entirely African. There are some 17,000 Europeans, Americans, Lebanese and others engaged in Government posts, commerce and Missionary work. The most important towns are Ψ Lagos (pop. 350,000), Ibadan (500,000), Kano (130,000), Iwo (100,000), Ogomosho (130,000), Oyo (72,000), Oshogobo (222,000), Onitsha (77,000), Ife (111,000), Abeokuta (84,000), Ilesha (72,000), Enugu (63,000), Aba (58,000), Yewa (55,000), Katsina (53,000), Port Harcourt (72,000), Sokoto (48,000), Zaria (54,000).

Health Services.—The country has many formidable health problems, chief among which are annual outbreaks of smallpox and cerebrospinal fever (mainly in the Northern Region), and of yellow fever (mainly in the Eastern Region), and the widespread prevalence of malaria, yaws, bilharziasis, intestinal helminth infestations and malnutrition. These are being combated by the expansion of medical facilities as fast as finance and the training of staff will allow, the emphasis being on preventive medicine, raising the standard of living and education of the people. A University undergraduate teaching hospital was opened at Ibadan in November, 1957. Extensive campaigns have been organized against malaria, blindness and leprosy.

Education.—Education is the responsibility of the Regional Governments, the Federal Government retaining responsibility for education in Lagos and for those institutions of higher learning which have Nigerian significance, such as the University College and the University College Teaching Hospital at Ibadan, the Nigerian College of Arts, Science and Technology with branches at Zaria, Ibadan and Enugu, and the Man O' War Training Centre. Free and universal primary education for all children within the 6-12 year age group is now available in West and East Nigeria and in the Federal Territory of Lagos. About 3,000,000 pupils were enrolled at primary and higher schools in 1959.

Production and Industry.—Nigeria is mainly an agricultural country. Five of the country's main agricultural products, viz. palm-oil and palm kernels, cocoa, cotton, bananas (from the Cameroons) and ground-nuts are of the greatest importance in Nigeria's export trade (see figures under "Trade" below). Other crops include benniseed, capsicums, cassava, coffee, copra, guinea-corn, gum arabic, kola-nuts, maize, millet, piassava, rice, rubber, tobacco and yams. There are important tin and coal-mining industries, at Jos and Enugu respectively. The coal is mainly used within the country; in 1958, 860,128 tons were produced. Nigeria is the principal source of supply of the world's requirements of columbite.

Timber and hides and skins are other major exports. Industrial products include soap, cigarettes, beer, margarine, groundnut oil, meal and cake, concentrated fruit juices, soft drinks, canned food, metal containers, plywood, textiles, ceramic products, cotton cloth and rubber shoes.

Railways.—The Nigerian railway system, which is controlled by the Nigerian Railway Corporation, is the most extensive in any British Colonial territory. There are 1,770 route miles of lines. Construction of a 400-mile extension to Maiduguri was begun in Sept. 1958. There are two major bridges, one over the Niger at Jebba and one over the Benue at Makurdi. The latter is 2,624 ft. long, and it is believed to be the second longest in Africa. The North-western main line runs from Lagos to Kano (700 miles) through the important towns of Abeokuta, Ibadan, Ilorin, Jebba, Minna, Kaduna and Zaria. From Kano the line continues for another 143 miles in a north-easterly direction to its terminus at Nguru, and there is a branch line from Zaria via Gusau to Kaura Namoda to serve north-western Nigeria. This line is also linked with Sokoto by a scheduled railway road service from Gusau. The eastern line runs from Port Harcourt deep-water quay on the Bonny river through the thickly populated oil palm area to Enugu, where it serves the collieries. It then crosses the Benue and joins the north-western line at Kaduna, 569 miles from Port Harcourt. A branch line of 63 miles from Kafanchan serves the tin mines at Jos. The railway hauled 2,739,000 tons of freight in 1958, and its passenger traffic totalled over 7,863,000 passengers. Train mileage exceeded 6,988,000.

Roads.—There are 36,907 miles of motorable road. Most of the roads have gravelled or earth surfaces, but about 4,031 miles are tarred. An extensive programme of bituminous surfacing is now being carried out.

Civil Aviation.—Trunk route services operated by British, Netherlands, French and Belgian airlines bring Nigeria within less than 20 hours of the Western European capitals and South Africa. There are also connections to French Africa and the United States. A network of internal air services connects the main internal centres. Passenger traffic on internal services totalled 73,473 during 1958. Comprehensive radio navigational aids are installed at Kano and Lagos airports, and basic radio navigational facilities are provided at the twelve other aerodromes in regular use. There is a network of meteorological reporting stations.

GOVERNMENT

Nigeria is divided into three Regions known as the Northern Region, the Eastern Region and the Western Region (with Regional Headquarters at Kaduna, Enugu and Ibadan respectively), the quasi-Federal Trusteeship Territory of the Southern Cameroons (with Headquarters at Buca), and the Federal Capital of Lagos. Eastern and Western Nigeria became self-governing in 1957 and Northern Nigeria in 1959.

The Federal Council of Ministers is an all-Nigerian body except for the Governor-General of the Federation, who presides over its meetings. A system of Ministries is now established and, with few exceptions, all Government departments are integrated into ministries as divisions. Provision exists for the creation of an upper house or senate.

In Western and Northern Nigeria there are a House of Assembly and a House of Chiefs. The Executive Council in each region is presided over by a Premier, and the Governor in each case has limited power and acts on the advice of his ministers. Eastern Nigeria has a House of Assembly, and legislation has been approved for the creation of a House of Chiefs. The Premier is the chief minister, presiding over the Executive Council, and the Governor acts as above.

The executive authority of the Federation extends to such subjects as external affairs, aviation, banks, census, customs, defence, police, shipping, mines and minerals, posts and telegraphs, trunk roads and railways. Regional Governments have administrative and executive responsibility for regional legislation, development plans, health, education, local government, agriculture, justice, finance, natural resources, regional public works, communications (other than those under Federal control), regional trade, industry and production and welfare.

CAMEROONS

(Trusteeship Territory of the Cameroons)

The German Protectorate of Kamerun on the west coast of Africa between (British) Nigeria and French Congo was obtained by conquest by Franco-British forces during the War of 1914-18.

The approximate geographical limits of the German territory were 2°-12° 30' N. lat. and 8° 30'-16° E. long. and the area was about 177,496 square miles. By the Milner-Simon Agreement of July 10, 1919 the whole area was divided into a British sphere (about 34,081 square miles) and a French sphere (about 143,415 square miles). In 1922 the territories were placed by the League of Nations under British and French Mandates, and in 1946 by the United Nations under British and French Trusteeship. The Cameroons under United Kingdom administration marches the whole distance of the Nigerian Eastern boundary, save for one short break. A census conducted in 1952 and 1953 showed the population of the British sphere to be 1,440,000.

The two narrow strips of territory reach from the Atlantic Ocean to Lake Chad, a distance of 700 miles, and lie diagonally between 4°-12° 30' N. lat. and 8° 30'-14° 45' E. long. The nature of the country varies to a remarkable extent, from the coastal mangrove swamps and thick forest regions to the grasslands at heights of 4,000 ft. to 7,000 ft. and more, and again to sandy and swampy areas in the region of Dikwa and Lake Chad. The highest point is the peak of the Cameroon Mountain, which rises to a height of 13,350 ft. It is volcanic and erupted in 1959, when a considerable volume of lava was discharged without doing any serious damage.

The Cameroons under United Kingdom administration is administered as part of Nigeria. The Northern areas, which are administered as part of the Northern Region of Nigeria, are administered by the Residents of the adjoining Provinces of Adamawa, Bornu and Benue. The Executive Council of the Northern Region of Nigeria includes a Minister with a portfolio for Northern Cameroons Affairs who is a representative of the Territory. The Southern section, formerly administered as two provinces of the Eastern Region of Nigeria, became, on October 1, 1954, quasi-Federal territory within the Federation of Nigeria, with its own Legislature (known as the Southern Cameroons House of Assembly) and Executive Council, competent, subject to the assent of the Governor-General of Nigeria, in all matters reserved to the Regions by the Federal constitution of Nigeria. In 1958 further changes were made in the constitution, the first Premier was appointed and portfolios distributed to unofficial members of the Executive Council. A Commissioner of the Cameroons continues to be responsible for the overall administration of the Southern section as well as acting as the United Kingdom's special representative for the whole territory when Cameroons affairs are before the Trusteeship Council. His headquarters are at Buea.

Cattle breeding and the production of guinea corn are the chief occupations of the population of Dikwa, which consists mainly of Shuwa Arabs and Kanuri. The inhabitants of the areas which for administrative purposes form part of the Adamawa Province are mostly primitive hillmen whose chief occupation is agriculture. Cattle breeding and agriculture, of which coffee is becoming the main economic crop, are the chief occupations in the Bamenda area, which consists mostly of high grassland.

The country nearer the sea-coast is rich in timber, and the volcanic soil of the lower slopes of the Cameroon Mountain is particularly fertile. 250,000 acres of this land, formerly German-owned plantations, have been leased to the Cameroons Development Corporation, which was set up in 1946 for the production of bananas, oil palm products, rubber and cocoa, almost all of which are exported. Profits earned by the Corporation accrue to the general revenue of the Southern Cameroons, in which section the properties operated by the Corporation are situated.

The chief exports from the Territory are bananas, cocoa, rubber, palm oil and kernels, coffee and timber; the chief imports are textiles, motor spirit, provisions, ironware and salt.

A Colonial Development and Welfare allocation of about £1,500,000 will be available for the territory's development plan for 1955-60. The major part of this is devoted to the improvement of the territory's road system. Other schemes will include the provision of water supplies in urban and rural areas, the development of medical and health services and the expansion of educational facilities in the territory.

The seaports Ψ Victoria and Ψ Tiko are connected with Buea and all divisional headquarters by motor road.

The principal groups under the High Commissioner in, over, and for the Western Pacific Islands are (1) The Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony; (2) The British Solomon Islands Protectorate; (3) The New Hebrides; (4) There are also a number of scattered groups and isolated islands, including Caroline, Flint, Malden, Starbuck and Vostock Islands, which are not attached to any group.

The Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony, which includes Ocean, Christmas, Fanning and Washington Islands, besides the Gilbert, Ellice and Phoenix Groups, was formerly a Protectorate, and was formally annexed to the Empire in November, 1915. The total land area of the Colony is about 360 sq. miles with a population (Census, 1947) of 36,000 (304 Europeans, 142 Chinese, 29,923 Micronesians and 5,066 Polynesians), estimated at 42,362 at the end of 1958. Expressed in Australian currency, the estimated revenue of the Colony in 1958 was £582,555; expenditure £553,655.

The Government maintains one boys' boarding school and 18 primary schools. Village school primary education is mainly run by missionary societies, with financial assistance from the Government, and at the end of 1958 these schools were attended by 7,703 pupils.

The Gilbert Group, situated between 4° N. and 3° S. latitude and 172° and 177° E. longitude, consists of 16 islands, Makin, Butaritari, Marakei, Abaiang, Tarawa (Headquarters of the Colony), Maiana, Abemama, Kuria, Aranuka, Nonouti, Tabiteuea, Beru, Nikunau, Onotua, Tamana and Arorae. The area of the group is 114 sq. miles and the population (estimated 1958) 32,832. The Ellice Group of 9 islands (Nanumea, Nanumanga, Niutao, Nui, Vaitupu, Nukufetau, Funafuti, Nukulaelae and Nulikaita) lies between lat. 5° 30' and 12° SE. and long. 176° E. and 180° E. The area of the group is 91 sq. miles and the population (estimated 1958) 4,938. Ocean Island (or Banaba), in lat. 0° 52' S. and long. 169° 35' E. was proclaimed British in 1900. The Line Islands between lat. 4° 40' and 2° N. and long. 160° 20' and 157° W. include Fanning, Washington and Christmas Islands. Fanning and Washington Islands were included in the Colony in 1916, Christmas Island in 1919. Christmas Island is the largest atoll in the Pacific. The boundaries of the Colony were extended (March 18, 1937) to include the Phoenix Islands (Birnie, Canton, Enderbury, Gardner, Hull, McKean, Phoenix and Sydney Islands), between 3° and 5° S. and 170° and 175° W. Enderbury and Canton Islands are for common use of Gt. Britain and U.S.A. for aviation and communications, under an agreement made on April 6, 1939. Canton Island is an international airport on the Trans-Pacific route between Fiji and Honolulu.

In each island of the Gilbert and Ellice Groups (except Niulakita) and in three islands in the Phoenix Group there is a native Government under an appointed native magistrate whose court administers a code of native laws. The Colony is administered by the High Commissioner through a Resident Commissioner.

Resident Commissioner, Gilbert and Ellice Islands, Michael Louis Bernacchi, C.M.G., O.B.E., (1952) (+ allee. £175) £A3,645

The British Solomon Islands Protectorate, established in 1893, now includes all the islands in the Solomons Archipelago S. and S.E. of the large island of Bougainville. The main islands in the Protectorate are Choiseul, Santa Ysabel, Shortland Group, Vella Lavella, Kolombangara, Ganongga, Gizo, New Georgia, Florida, Guadalcanal, Russells, Malaita and San Cristobal, and the outlying islands of Bellona, Rennell, Santa Cruz, Vanikoro, Tikopia, Cherry, Mitre, Utupua, Swallow (or Reef Islands) and Duff Groups, Sikaiana (or Stewart) and Ontong Java (or Lord Howe Atoll). The Protectorate is situated between 5°-13° S. lat. and 155°-170° 20' E. long. It has a total land area of about 11,500 square miles and ocean area of about 270,000 square miles, and an estimated population of 700 Europeans, 650 Chinese, Indians and Fijians, 108,000 Melanesians and 5,000 Polynesians. Estimated revenue (1959) £A1,529,236 (including Colonial Development and Welfare Funds (£A369,400) and Grant-in-Aid from the United Kingdom (£A434,081)); estimated expenditure (1959) £A1,529,236; imports (1959) £A1,646,114; exports £A1,825,828. The main imports are foodstuffs, consumer goods and building materials. Principal exports are copra and timber. The headquarters of the Western Pacific High Commission were moved from Suva in Fiji to Honiara, the capital of the British Solomon Islands Protectorate, in December, 1952, and the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific assumed the direct administration of the Protectorate on Jan. 1, 1953.

SOUTH PACIFIC COMMISSION

The South Pacific Commission, an advisory and consultative body set up by the six Governments responsible for the administration of island territories in the South Pacific region, recommends to the member Governments means for promoting the well-being of the peoples of these territories. It is concerned with social, economic and health matters. Headquarters, Nouméa, New Caledonia.

The Commission was established by an Agreement between the Governments of Australia, France, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, signed at Canberra in 1947 and ratified on July 29, 1948. Until November 7, 1951, the area of the Commission's activities comprised territories lying generally south of the Equator from and including Netherlands New Guinea in the west to the French Establishments in Oceania and Pitcairn in the east. On November 7, 1951, an additional Agreement was signed extending the scope of the Commission to include Guam and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands under United States administration. The Commission consists of twelve Commissioners, two from each Government, and meets once or twice a year. The first Session was held in May, 1948.

There are two auxiliary bodies, the Research Council and the South Pacific Conference. There is a Research Council meeting yearly, which may be either a meeting of the full Council, or of one or other of its three main sections, specializing in health, economic development and social development. Members of the Council are appointed by the Commission and are selected for their special knowledge of the questions with which the Commission is concerned, and the problems of the Territories in these fields. The chief function of the Research Council is to advise the Commission what investigations are necessary. Arrangements to carry out those which are approved are the responsibility of the Secretary-General and other principal officers. The South Pacific Conference, which meets at intervals not exceeding three years, consists of delegates from the territories who may be accompanied by advisers.

Secretary-General, T. R. Smith.

Executive Officers, Dr. A. H. J. Kroon (Economic Development); Dr. R. Seddon (Social Development); Dr. T. C. Lonie (acting) (Health).

FEDERATION OF RHODESIA AND NYASALAND

AREA AND POPULATION

The Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland covers an area of 486,973 square miles (S. Rhodesia, 150,333; N. Rhodesia, 287,640; and Nyasaland, 49,000 square miles), including approximately 12,000 square miles of water.

Population.—The total population of the Federation (December, 1958) is 7,890,000 of all races (S. Rhodesia 2,820,000; N. Rhodesia 2,330,000; Nyasaland 2,740,000).

PHYSIOGRAPHY

Boundaries.—The Federation extends from latitude 22° 30' South to latitude 8° 15' South. On the South it is bordered by the Union of South Africa, on the West by the Bechuanaland Protectorate, and Portuguese West Africa, on the North-West and North by the Belgian Congo, on the North by Tanganyika and on the East by Portuguese East Africa.

Relief.—Most of Rhodesia is at an altitude of between 3,000 and 5,000 feet above sea level, the highest land lying on the eastern border of Southern Rhodesia where some mountains rise above 8,000 feet above sea level. In the large river valleys, the Zambezi, Sabi, Kafue and Luangwa the level of the land falls to below 2,000 feet.

In Nyasaland the level of the littoral of Lake Nyasa and of parts of the Shire River Valley is 1,500 feet above sea level. Elsewhere the altitude varies between 2,500 and 7,000 feet with the crest of the Mlanje Mountain massif rising to 10,000 feet above sea level. Lake Nyasa itself, the greatest depth of which is 1,226 feet, is a southward extension of the Great Rift Valley.

Rivers.—Portions of the Zambezi River, Lake Nyasa, Lake Bangweulu, the Luapula River and the Chambesi River are navigable and are extensively used by waterborne transport. The Federation has, however, no great natural waterways, either to provide access to the sea or to connect major industrial centres, but there are a number of large rivers which could be brought into the service of agriculture for irrigation and of power supplies for hydro-electric schemes. The recently completed Kariba Dam, on the Zambezi, is 184 miles long and 1,800 sq. miles in area, irrigates an area of 2,000 sq. miles, and provides hydro-electric power from the Copper Belt to Bulawayo. The principal rivers, in addition to the Zambezi, are—in Southern Rhodesia: the Sabi River and its tributaries (irrigation and power potentialities); the Hunyani River (already dammed at several points); and the Umfuli River (irrigation potentialities). In Northern Rhodesia: the Kafue River (power potentialities); the Mulungushi and Lunsemfwa Rivers (already supplying hydro-electric power to Broken Hill mine and town); and the Zambezi River at the Victoria Falls (supplying hydro-electric power to Livingstone). In Nyasaland: the Shire River (power and irrigation potentialities).

Climate.—Though the entire Federal area lies within the tropics most of it is at an altitude which gives climatic conditions favouring permanent European settlement. The main rainfall throughout the area is concentrated into a season extending from about November to March. Average rainfall (except for certain somewhat arid low-lying regions on the one hand and some high altitude areas of very heavy rainfall on the other) is in the vicinity of 25 to 30 inches a year.

HISTORY

The Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland came into being on September 4, 1953, when the first Governor-General assumed office. The Order-in-Council authorizing the setting up of the Federation was approved by Her Majesty the Queen on August 1, 1953. An interim Ministry was sworn in on September 7. The first elections to the Federal Assembly took place on December 25, 1953. In the first months of the Federation only the minimum administrative machine was created and the Federal Government assumed its functions from the territories by degrees. By July 1, 1954, the Federal Ministries had taken over most of their duties.

British rule and occupation in Southern Rhodesia followed the march into Mashonaland in 1890 of Cecil Rhodes' Pioneer Column. British influence was extended northwards to Northern Rhodesia from Southern Rhodesia during the nineties and eastwards from Nyasaland where a protectorate had been declared in 1889. Both Rhodesias were administered till 1923 by the British South Africa Company, the Resident Commissioner at Salisbury represented the United Kingdom in respect of both countries, the Rhodesias shared the same railway system and all three countries made use of the same port, Beira. In more recent years the two northern territories provided an important and growing market for the manufactures of Southern Rhodesia and the three countries have shared in the provision of a number of technical services such as airways, currency, statistics, archives, town planning and broadcasting.

The suggestion for closer association seems to have been mooted first in about 1910 and a proposal to amalgamate the Rhodesias was made officially by Dr. Jameson in 1916 on behalf of the British South Africa Company. It was opposed by the settlers of Southern Rhodesia who feared that amalgamation would defer indefinitely hopes of responsible government. The changes of status of the two Rhodesias in 1923 diverted attention for the time being from the question of closer association but the issue was raised a few years later. The Bledisloe Commission, appointed in 1938, reported against immediate amalgamation but recognized the community of interest between the three territories by suggesting the creation of a body to co-ordinate common services. The suggestion was implemented in 1945 when the Central African Council was established. Conferences were held in London and at Victoria Falls in 1951–53 to examine the possibility of a closer working arrangement and to frame recommendations. The final proposals were endorsed by a referendum in Southern Rhodesia in April, 1953, by approximately a two-thirds majority. Later, the proposals were approved by the United Kingdom Parliament and the Legislative Councils of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland, and the final steps to set up the new Federation were taken.

LEGISLATURE

The Federal Assembly consists of 59 members and is composed as follows: forty-four elected members (Southern Rhodesia, 24; Northern Rhodesia, 14; Nyasaland, 6); twelve African elected members (four from each territory); and three European members charged with special responsibility for African interests, of whom one is elected in Southern Rhodesia and the other two appointed, one each by the Governors of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

The main matters on which the Federal Legislature has power to make laws are external affairs, defence, immigration, financial and economic affairs, inter-territorial roads, railways, European agriculture in Southern Rhodesia, posts and telegraphs, education except African primary and secondary education and Federal courts. In addition, there are a number of matters on which both the Federal and Territorial Legislatures have powers to make laws. They include the development of industries, electricity, scientific and industrial research, health, town planning, archives, census, and statistics.

African Affairs Board.—A Standing Committee of the Federal Assembly, known as the African Affairs Board, consists of the three European members representing African interests and one of the elected African members from each territory. The Board makes representations to the Federal Government on matters within the authority of the Federation in the interests of Africans and assists a Territorial Government, at its request, in the study of matters affecting Africans. It is also the function of the Board to draw attention to any Federal legislation of a differentiating character and to ask that it should be reserved for the signification of Her Majesty's pleasure.

Speaker of the Federal Assembly, Hon. T. I. F. Wilson, C.M.G.

Clerk of the House, Col. G. E. Wells, O.B.E., E.D.

FEDERAL SUPREME COURT

The Court, constituted under the Federal Constitution of 1953, came into being on July 1, 1955.

Chief Justice of the Federation, Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Tredgold, K.C.M.G.

Federal Justices, Hon. Sir John Clayden; Hon. F. A. Briggs.

The Chief Justices of Southern Rhodesia, Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland are ex officio members of the Court.

DEFENCE

The regular and Territorial forces of the Federation form the Central African Command which has its headquarters in Salisbury. The regular forces on peace-time establishment include a battalion of The Rhodesian African Rifles, a battalion of the Northern Rhodesia Regiment and two battalions of the King's African Rifles, units of the Rhodesia and Nyasaland Corps of Engineers, the Rhodesia and Nyasaland Corps of Signals, the Rhodesia and Nyasaland Army Service Corps, the Rhodesia and Nyasaland Medical Corps and the Nyasaland Army Pay Corps. In addition there is a Territorial Force comprising three battalions of the Royal Rhodesia Regiment, with headquarters at Salisbury, Bulawayo and Kitwe respectively. There are also three major training establishments. The Federation has its own regular air force, the Royal Rhodesian Air Force, which is equipped with Canberra and Vampire jet aircraft, as well as trainers and transport aircraft.

EDUCATION

The Federal Government is responsible for all education other than that of Africans, that is for European, Asian and Coloured children. In 1958 the numbers of such children at school were as follows: Southern Rhodesia, 44,780 (161 schools); Northern Rhodesia, 15,487 (68 schools); Nyasaland, 3,242 (23 schools). In addition to the Government Schools, there are 60 State-aided private schools, attended by a further 10,112 children.

FINANCE

The sixth Federal Budget was presented on June 25, 1959. Loan vote estimates for 1959-60 totalled £18,215,290. £5,500,000 of the loan vote was applied towards meeting part of the fiscal year's expenditure on the Kariba hydro-electric project. This project is now estimated to cost £80,000,000 in its first stage. A total of £46,600,000 has been secured from external sources the International Bank contributing £28,600,000, the Colonial Development Corporation £15,000,000, the Commonwealth Development Finance Co. Ltd., £3,000,000 and £33,400,000 is being found from internal sources.

Revenue vote expenditure in 1959-60 is estimated at £54,084,848 against a total estimated revenue of £53,137,000.

The public debt amounted to £225,996,953 (provisional) at June 30, 1959.

Currency.—Federal currency is linked to British sterling and currency backing is held in London in balances, in British Treasury Bills and in Government securities issued in the United Kingdom. The Bank of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, which was established by an Act of the Federal Assembly in 1956, is responsible for the issue of the currency.

PRODUCTION, TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Agriculture.—European agriculture in Southern and Northern Rhodesia is the administrative responsibility of the Federal Government, the remainder of the agricultural industry of the Federal area being in the charge of the various Territorial Governments. Sales of principal crops in 1958 were:

Manufactures.—Since 1955-56, the census of industrial production has been held on a federal basis, giving a gross output of £126,117,000 and a net output of £53,405,000 for the year 1957-58. Tobacco, textiles and garments, foodstuffs and metal products remain the most important groups, drawing largely for their materials on local sources.

EXTERNAL TRADE

In 1958, the fifth year for which statistics of external trade were available for the Federation as a single trading entity, total external trade was valued at £330,220,000.

With exports valued at £142,578,000 and imports at £157,642,000, there was a visible adverse balance of trade of £15,064,000.

About 66 per cent. of the exports consisted of minerals—copper, gold, asbestos, lead, zinc, chrome being the most important. About 21 per cent. of all exports consisted of tobacco.

The remaining 13 per cent. was made up of a wide range of products, including manufactured articles of which textiles are the most important.

Forty-six per cent. of imports in 1958 were metals and machinery, a high proportion being mining, electrical and agricultural machinery, railway materials and other durable producers' goods required for the growth of industry, agriculture and basic services such as communications and the provision of electric power.

The most important market for the Federation's products and supplier of its requirements was the United Kingdom. Exports to the United Kingdom in 1958 were made up mainly of copper (£36,000,000), tobacco (£18,000,000), asbestos and tea.

COMMUNICATIONS

Railways.—The two Rhodesias are served by the Rhodesia Railways which connect with the South African Railways at Mafeking. The main line forks at Bulawayo; the northern branch runs via the Victoria Falls through Northern Rhodesia to the Copperbelt and on to the Belgian Congo Border where it connects with the Belgian system. The eastern branch runs along the watershed of Southern Rhodesia to serve the main centres and ends at Umtali where it joins the Portuguese system to provide access to Beira. With branch lines, the total mileage of the Rhodesia Railways is nearly 2,500 miles, but an important new line, linking the Midlands of Southern Rhodesia with the port of Lourenço Marques in Portuguese East Africa was completed in 1955.

Nyasaland is served by the Nyasaland Railway system (the Trans-Zambezi Railway, the Central Africa Railway and the Nyasaland Railways) which connects Beira with Nyasaland. The total length of the system is nearly 500 miles.

Roads.—Main roads, which are in process of modernization, connect all the main centres of the Federation with one another and with adjacent territories, and secondary roads serve rural areas. The total route mileage of roads is over 51,000 miles (28,500 miles in Southern Rhodesia, 18,000 miles in Northern Rhodesia and nearly 5,000 miles in Nyasaland) of which some 11,000 miles are designated as main or principal roads (6,000 miles in Southern Rhodesia, excluding roads in towns, 4,300 miles in Northern Rhodesia and 1,700 miles in Nyasaland). Major bridges, many of which were the gift of the Beit Trustees, span the larger rivers on main roads, the Beit Bridge over the Limpopo, the Ottobert Bridge at Chirundu over the Zambezi and the Birchenough Bridge over the Sabi River being noteworthy.

Air Services.—Civil aviation has made rapid progress in the Federal area since the war. The existing airline was reconstituted in partnership between the three territories as the Central African Airways Corporation. Flying Viscount, Dakota and Beaver aircraft, Central African Airways provide daily services between the major towns of the Federation and between them and Nairobi and Johannesburg, as well as a weekly service to London, and services to out-lying parts of the Federation. Certain other scheduled services, including a daily service between Salisbury, Kariba and Lusaka, are operated by Hunting-Clan African Airways. In addition there are many air charter firms and the major world airlines link the Federation with overseas countries. The new international airport at Salisbury is in full use and the Federal capital is now less than 24 hours from London.

Broadcasting.—During 1957, all broadcasting was taken over by a newly-formed Federal Broadcasting Corporation.

CAPITAL

SALISBURY, the Federal capital, is also the principal city of Southern Rhodesia. It is built round the site where the Pioneer Column ended its march into Mashonaland in 1890. Situated in the north-east of Southern Rhodesia, it is on the main railway line which traverses the more closely settled areas of the Colony. Branch railway lines run north-east and north-west. It is the centre of the tobacco industry—the tobacco auction sales at Salisbury are the largest in the world—and an industrial centre of considerable importance. Estimated population, including townships on the periphery of Salisbury: Europeans, 82,000; Africans, 175,000; Asians and Coloured (mixed race), 3,800.

SOUTHERN RHODESIA

Southern Rhodesia, comprising Matabeleland, Mashonaland and Manicaland, is that part of the territory named after Cecil Rhodes lying south of the Zambezi River, its political neighbours being Northern Rhodesia and Portuguese East Africa on the N.; the Transvaal and Bechuanaland on the S. and W.; and Portuguese East Africa on the E. The total area is 150,333 square miles. The estimated population, at Dec. 31, 1958, numbered 211,000 Europeans, 5,500 Asiatics, 9,400 Coloureds and 2,590,000 Africans, giving a combined total of approximately 2,815,900. In 1958 there were 5,494

European births and 1,285 deaths, giving a birth-rate of 27 and a death-rate of 6 per 1,000.

The majority of the natives of Southern Rhodesia (members of the so-called Bantu race), are known as Mashona. In the Western portion of the Colony are the descendants of the Amandebele who conquered and settled down among the Mashona, and from whom the Province of Matabeleland derives its name.

Southern Rhodesia was administered by the British South Africa Company from the date of occupation (1890) to 1923, when responsible government was granted. On this latter date the Company relinquished all rights and interests in the land of Southern Rhodesia except in those estates which it was already developing on July 10, 1923. A Land and Agricultural Bank grants loans for farm development and acquisition of residential property on easy terms of repayment. Of the Colony's 97,123,000 acres, some 41,950,500 have been set apart for native occupation (Native Reserves) and purchase (Native Purchase Areas).

EDUCATION

Native education is controlled by Government and comes under the Minister for Native Education. Expenditure is now approaching £3,000,000 per annum: Capital expenditure in addition to revenue funds, amounts to more than £120,000. There are over 2,700 schools enrolling 432,000 pupils with 11,643 teachers. Both Mission and Government training centres provide for lower and higher primary teachers' courses. Secondary schools provide a standard of education up to Cambridge Certificate, while post primary schools include such subjects as building, carpentry, agriculture and home craft. In addition three special schools cater for the blind, the deaf and dumb. Eighty per cent. of pupils of school-going age are now able to attend schools.

GOVERNMENT

The Colony obtained self-government in 1923 and has a Parliament of 30 members and a Cabinet of 6 members. The Queen is represented by a Governor who presides over the Executive Council. The Southern Rhodesian Government is responsible for native affairs, bridges, irrigation, roads, power, local government, labour, housing and social welfare. All discriminatory legislation is reserved for the consent of the British Government.

Municipal self-government has been established in the city of Salisbury, the city of Bulawayo, and in the towns of Umtali, Gwelo, Gatooma, Que Que and Fort Victoria. Smaller areas are administered by Town Management Boards. Over the past ten years local self-government among the Africans has been encouraged and by the end of 1956 there were 56 Native Councils raising their own rates.

Governor, Hon. Humphrey Vicary Gibbs, O.B.E. (1959).

SALISBURY, the capital, is situated on the Mashonaland plateau, altitude 4,831 ft., population (estimated) 260,800, including 82,000 Europeans. BULAWAYO, the largest town in Matabeleland, altitude 4,405 ft., estimated population 183,000, including 49,000 Europeans. Other centres are Umtali, Gwelo, Gatooma, Que Que and Fort Victoria.

Salisbury is 5,600 miles from London (air route) transit 24 hours; by sea 17 days (approx.).

NORTHERN RHODESIA

The Protectorate of Northern Rhodesia lies on the plateau of Central Africa between the longitudes 28° E. and 33° 33' E. and between the latitudes 8° 15' S. and 18° S. Its area is 288,130 square miles, and its boundaries are 3,515 miles in length.

With the exception of the valleys of the Zambezi, the Luapula, the Kafue and the Luangwa Rivers the greater part of Northern Rhodesia has a flat to rolling topography, with elevations varying from 3,000 to 5,000 feet above sea level, but in the north-eastern districts the plateau rises to occasional altitudes of over 5,000 feet. In many localities the evenness of the plateau is broken by hills, sometimes occurring as chains which develop into areas of broken country. The highest group of hills is the Muchinga Mountains which form part of the Great Escarpment running down the western edge of the Luangwa River Valley, and of these, individual peaks rise to about 8,000 feet.

Although Northern Rhodesia lies within the tropics, and fairly centrally in the great land mass of the African continent, its elevation relieves it from the extremely high temperatures and humidity usually associated with tropical countries. The lower reaches of the Zambezi, Luangwa and Kafue rivers in deeper valleys do experience high humidity and trying extremes of heat, but these areas are remote and sparsely populated.

The census of May 8, 1956, showed a European population of 64,800, a Coloured population of 1,550 and an Asiatic population of 5,400. At June 30, 1958, the estimated African population was 2,180,000.

With the coming into being of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, the Federal Government assumed, under the Constitution, powers to impose certain important taxes formerly enjoyed by the Northern Rhodesia Government and also took over responsibility for the administration of various departments and services.

GOVERNMENT

Government is carried on by a Governor appointed by the Crown, assisted by an Executive Council of four officials and six unofficial members, of whom two must be Africans. The Legislative Council consists of thirty members, of whom six are official, two are nominated by the Governor and the rest are elected. Of the elected members in the present Council, 14 are European and eight are Africans. The Governor's nominees consist of one African and one Asian, and the official members are all European. The Legislative Council is presided over by a Speaker who is an unofficial but not a member of the Council.

NYASALAND PROTECTORATE

The Nyasaland Protectorate comprises the western shore of Lake Nyasa, with the high tableland separating it from the basin of the Luangwa River, and the region lying between the watershed of the Zambezi and Shire Rivers on the west, and the Lakes Chiuta and Chilwa and the River Ruw (a tributary of the Shire) on the east, including the mountain systems of the Shire Highlands and Mlanje.

The Protectorate is bounded on the North by Tanganyika Territory, on the West by Northern Rhodesia and on the South and East by Portuguese East Africa (Mozambique). The rainy season is from November to March, and it is dry for the rest of the year.

Nyasaland has a total area of 46,257 sq. miles (land area, 36,879) with an estimated population in 1958 of 2,740,100 (2,720,000 Africans, 8,700 Europeans and 11,400 Asians and other races).

The seat of Government is Zomba (est. pop., 1958, 5,750), other centres being Blantyre and Limbe in the Shire highlands, Ψ Fort Johnston (on Lake Nyasa), Lilongwe, Mlanje and Mzimba.

In 1953, the Government of the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland assumed responsibility for the servicing of the public debt of the Protectorate, then amounting to £6,228,488. Since then the public debt has been increased by an estimated £5,477,000. The Nyasaland Government is itself responsible for servicing that part of the debt incurred since 1953.

GOVERNMENT

The Government consists of the Governor and an Executive and Legislative Council. The Executive Council is presided over by the Governor and consists of three ex officio members, two official members and two unofficial members. The Legislative Council is presided over by a Speaker, appointed by the Governor, who is not a member of the Council, and consists of four ex officio members, eight official members and eleven elected members. Six of the elected members are non-African and five are African. The non-African members are elected by direct vote and the African members by electoral colleges.

In 1944 and 1945 African Provincial Councils were established in each of the three provinces. These councils, which are advisory, are composed of chiefs and other responsible African members under the presidency of the Provincial Commissioner.

ST. HELENA,

probably the best known of all the solitary islands in the world, is situated in the South Atlantic Ocean, 955 miles S. of the Equator, 760 S.E. of Ascension, 1,140 from the nearest point of the African Continent, 1,800 from the coast of S. America and 4,477 from Southampton, in $15^{\circ} 55'$ S. lat. and $5^{\circ} 42'$ W. long. It is $10\frac{1}{2}$ miles long, $6\frac{1}{2}$ broad, and encloses an area of 47 square miles, with an estimated population at Dec. 31, 1958, of 4,802. St. Helena is of volcanic origin, and consists of numerous rugged mountains, the highest rising to 2,700 feet, interspersed with picturesque ravines. Although within the tropics, the south-east "trades" keep the temperature mild and equable. St. Helena was discovered by the Portuguese navigator, João de Nova, in 1502 (probably on St. Helena's Day) and remained unknown to other European nations until 1588. It was used as a port of call for vessels of all nations trading to the East until it was annexed by the Dutch in 1633. It was never occupied by them, however, and the English East India Company seized it in 1659. In 1834 it was ceded to the Crown. During the period 1815 to 1821 the island was lent to the British Government as a place of exile for the Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte who died in St. Helena on May 5, 1821. It was formerly an important station on the route to India, but its prosperity decreased after the construction of the Suez Canal. A phormium (flax fibre) and lacemaking industry has been established. Ψ St. James's Bay, on the north-west of the island, possesses a good anchorage.

GOVERNMENT

The government of St. Helena is administered by a Governor, with the aid of an Executive Council of up to 4 official and 3 unofficial members. The Governor is also assisted by an Advisory Council of up to 10 unofficial members chosen to represent, as far as possible, all unofficial sections of the community, the Governor alone making all ordinances.

ASCENSION

An isolated island in the South Atlantic (3,417 miles from Plymouth, 760 from St. Helena, and 900 from Cape Palmas on the African coast), is of volcanic origin, the peak rising to the height of 2,820 feet, situated $7^{\circ} 55'$ S. lat. and $14^{\circ} 25'$ W. long. It is said to have been discovered by João de Nova, on Ascension Day, 1501, and two years later was visited by Alphonse d'Albuquerque, who gave the island its present name. Its extreme length is $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles, and extreme breadth 6 miles, with an area of about 38 square miles, and, being situated in the heart of the S.E. trade winds, its climate is dry and salubrious up to 1,800 feet, but above that height to its limit it is damp and foggy. It remained uninhabited till 1815, when the English took possession of it; on Dec. 31, 1958, the population was 326. Ascension was administered by the Board of Admiralty until 1922, when by Royal Letters Patent it became a Dependency of St. Helena, and was transferred to the Colonial Office. Ψ Georgetown, the capital, is situated in a small bay on the N.W. coast. Ascension is visited from January to May by the sea-turtle, which lay their eggs in the sand; the sooty tern, or "wide-awake," use the island as a nesting-place about every eighth month.

Resident Magistrate, A. R. Harrison, O.B.E.

TRISTAN DA CUNHA

Is the chief of a group of islands of volcanic origin lying in lat. $37^{\circ} 6'$ S. and long. $12^{\circ} 2'$ W., discovered in 1506 by a Portuguese admiral (Tristão da Cunha), after whom they are named. They have a total area of 45 square miles and in 1921 the inhabitants numbered 127, increased in 1958 to 257; they are stated to be very long-lived. The main island is about 1,800 miles W. of the Cape of Good Hope, 3,600 miles N.E. of Cape Horn, and about 1,320 miles S.S.W. of St. Helena. It was the resort of British and American sealers from the middle of the 18th century, and in 1760 a British naval officer visited the group and gave his name to Nightingale Island. On August 24, 1816, the group was annexed to the British Crown and a garrison was placed on Tristan da Cunha, but this force was withdrawn in 1817. William Glass, a corporal of artillery (died 1853), remaining at his own request, with his wife and two children. This party, with two ex-Navy men, Alexander Cotton and John Mooney, and three masons imported for the purpose of housing the garrison, formed the present settlement. In 1827 five coloured women from St. Helena, and afterwards others from Cape Colony, joined the party. The inhabitants are of mixed blood, but the British strain is predominant. In 1885 many of the able-bodied men were drowned through the loss of a boat, and in 1886 a grant of stores and provisions was made by Parliament. The principal settlement (Edinburgh) is in a fertile tract in the north-west of the island, its name being in honour of a visit from the former Duke of Edinburgh in 1867. The inhabitants grow potatoes and some vegetables, and possess cattle, sheep, pigs and donkeys. They are also able to earn money by fishing for the canning factory.

From the death of Corporal Glass until 1933 the oldest inhabitant acted as Governor; in 1933 a council of four was set up (with one of its members as Chairman), the chairman, or chief, acting as island spokesman and conducting marriages in the absence of a chaplain. In 1948 an Administrator was appointed by the Governor of St. Helena. The Council now has 24 members, including the Administrator as President, and 6 women members. The separate women's Council has been abolished. Communications with the outside world were infrequent until the outbreak of war in 1939, but have improved since that time. There is now a South African Government meteorological station equipped with wireless. The recent commencement of operations by a South African fishing company has led to more frequent visits of vessels to the island.

CAPITAL, Ψ Edinburgh.

Administrator, P. A. Day, (1959).

Resident Chaplain, Rev. P. H. Bell.

INACCESSIBLE ISLAND is a lofty mass of rock with sides a miles in length; the island is the resort of penguins and sea-fowl. Cultivation was started in 1937.

THE NIGHTINGALE ISLANDS are three in number, of which the largest is 1 mile long and $\frac{1}{2}$ mile wide, and rises in two peaks, 960 and 1,105 ft. above the sea-level respectively. The smaller islands, Stoltenhoff and Middle Isle, are little more than huge rocks. Seals, innumerable penguins, and vast numbers of sea-fowl visit these islands.

GOUGH ISLAND (or Diego Alvarez), in $40^{\circ} 20'$ S. and $9^{\circ} 44'$ W., lies about 250 miles S.S.E. of Tristan da Cunha. The island is about 8 miles long and 4 miles broad, with a total area of 40 square miles, and has been a British possession since 1816. The island is the resort of penguins and sea-elephants and has valuable guano deposits. There is no permanent population, but there is a meteorological station maintained on the island by the South African Government and manned by South Africans.

By Letters Patent dated January 12, 1938, the Islands of Tristan da Cunha, Gough, Nightingale and Inaccessible in the South Atlantic were made Dependencies of the Island of St. Helena.

SARAWAK

Sarawak is a British Colony on the north-west coast of the island of Borneo, with a seaboard of about 500 miles, an area of about 50,000 square miles, and a population estimated in 1956 at 631,431, composed of various races, of whom the Sea Dyaks (Ibans), Malays, Chinese, Land Dyaks, Melanau, Kayans and Kenyahs are the most numerous. The government of Sarawak was granted in 1841 by the Sultan of Brunei to Sir James Brooke, who became well known as Rajah Brooke of Sarawak. Other concessions were made in 1861, 1882, 1885, and 1890, when the Limbang River was obtained. The Lawas River was added in 1905. In 1864 Great Britain recognized Sarawak as an independent State, and under an agreement of 1888 the State was placed under British protection. In 1901 the centenary of Brooke rule was celebrated throughout the State.

Sarawak was ceded to Great Britain by the Rajah on July 1, 1946.

The territory of Sarawak extends from Cape Datu in the south to the Lawas District, where it touches the boundary of North Borneo. The southern boundary is, except for a few short stretches, formed by outstanding ridges of hills; the eastern boundary is a broken range of mountains with peaks rising to 10,000 feet. The principal rivers are the Rejang (navigable for about 160 miles), the Baram (navigable for about 100 miles), the Batang-Lupar, and the Limbang. Kuching, the capital, stands on a small river (the Sarawak) which is navigable from its mouth to Kuching (23 miles).

The country produces rubber, oil, sago, rice, ilipe nuts, birds' nests, gold, pepper, rattans and jungle produce. There are also known coal and cinabar deposits.

By the Sarawak (Constitution) Order in Council, 1956, a new constitution was granted to Sarawak.

which came into force on April 1, 1957. Under this the Council Negri, in which legislative powers and the control of finance are vested, has a majority of elected unofficial members. There are 24 elected members, 14 ex officio members, 4 nominated members and 2 standing members who were elected for life prior to cession. The new Supreme Council (i.e. Executive Council) has 3 ex officio and two nominated members and 5 members elected by the elected members of the Council Negri by secret ballot from among the elected, nominated or standing members of the Council Negri. The elected members of Council Negri are elected by divisional advisory councils (except for the Kuching Municipal and Sibü and Miri Urban District Councils which each elect one representative directly). The divisional advisory councils are elected by district and other local councils.

SEYCHELLES

The Seychelles Islands, in the Indian Ocean, which number altogether 92, were occupied by the French about 1742, captured by a British ship in 1794, and were finally assigned to Great Britain in 1810. By Letters Patent of Sept., 1903, they were erected into a separate colony. The principal islands of the group are Mahé (56 sq. miles), Praslin (9,700 acres), Silhouette (4,900 acres), La Digue (2,500 acres), Curieuse (900 acres), Félicité (689 acres), North Island (525 acres), St. Anne (500 acres), Providence (500 acres), Frigate (700 acres), Denis (340 acres), Cerf (290 acres), and Bird, or Sea Cow Island (160 acres), and the total area of the Colony, with dependencies, is estimated at 156½ square miles; the dependencies are the Amirantes, Alphonse, Bijoutier, St. François, St. Pierre, the Cosmoledo Group, Astove, Assumption, Coëtivy, Aldabra and Farquhar Island. The population on Dec. 31, 1958, was estimated at 42,415. Although only 4° S. of the Equator, the islands are healthy, the death-rate in 1957-58 being 10.7 per 1,000 and the birth-rate 37.1 per 1,000. There are 35 primary schools, 5 secondary schools, a technical school and a teachers' training college. Aldabra, one of the dependencies of the Seychelles, and about 630 miles from Mahé, is famous for the gigantic land tortoises, while the unique double coconut, Coco de Mer, is found in Mahé, and, in larger quantities, in Praslin, where there is a famous valley. The Governor is assisted by an Executive Council of 4 ex officio members and 4 unofficial members appointed by the Government, and by a Legislative Council of 6 official and 6 unofficial members, 4 of whom are elected.

SIERRA LEONE

The peninsula of Sierra Leone, situated on the West Coast of Africa, was ceded to Great Britain in 1787 by the native chiefs to be used as an asylum for the many destitute negroes then in England. At a somewhat later date the Colony was used as a settlement for Africans from North America and the West Indies, and great numbers of Africans rescued from slave ships have from time to time been liberated and settled there. The Colony, including those portions administered as Protectorate, lies along the coast, extending from the boundary of French Guinea—north of the mouth of the Scarries River—to the boundary of Liberia at the mouth of the Mano River, a distance of approximately 220 miles; having an approximate area of 2,500 square miles. Those portions of the Colony which are strictly administered as Colony (viz. the Sierra Leone Peninsula, Tasso Island, Banana Islands, the township of Bonthe on Sherbro Island and York Island) cover areas totalling approximately 272 square miles, with a population (1949) of approximately 125,000, of whom about 600 were resident Europeans and about 900 resident Asiatics. Of the rest, more than half are the descendants of liberated Africans, while the remainder belong to the neighbouring tribes; a babel of tongues is thus to be heard in the streets of Freetown. The total area of the Colony and Protectorate is about 28,000 sq. miles, and the total population about 1,860,000. In 1896 a Protectorate was declared over the territory adjoining the Colony to the northward and eastward. The extreme depth of the Protectorate from north to south is about 222 miles, lying between 6° 55', and 20° N. lat., and the extreme breadth from east to west is 207 miles, between 10° 16' and 13° 28' W. long. For administrative purposes the Protectorate is divided into 3 Provinces covering 12 Districts, each administered by a Commissioner. The principal peoples are the Limbas and Korankos in the north, the Temnes in the centre, and the Mendis in the south.

Communications.—A railway runs inland from Freetown to Pendembu (227½ miles) and a branch line of 83 miles extends in a north-easterly direction from Bauya to Makeni. There are 2,984 miles of road in the country, of which 1,674 miles are trunk routes, maintained by Government, and 1,310 miles feeder routes, maintained by local authorities. Of the trunk routes, 152 miles are bitumen-surfaced. The Posts and Telecommunications Department maintains a trunk line network of 951 miles of telephone and telegraph routes connecting Freetown with the Colony and Protectorate. Telegraph services exist between Freetown and 60 towns in the Protectorate. Trunk telephone facilities are available between Freetown and 24 centres in the Protectorate by landline, carrier and radio-telephone.

Education.—In 1958 there were 522 primary schools with 46,323 boys and 22,953 girls on the rolls, and 26 secondary schools with 4,159 boys and 2,745 girls enrolled. Fourah Bay College provides University and other post-secondary courses. There are 6 teacher training institutions.

The total expenditure on education in 1958 was approximately £2,165,000.

in 1943 one of 530 carats and in 1945 one of 770 carats. The chief imports are cotton piece goods apparel, ale and stout, artificial silk piece goods, machinery, motor vehicles, petroleum products, potable spirits, wheat flour, tobacco, cement, corrugated iron sheets, sugar, soap, fish and fish preparations, electrical machinery, apparatus and appliances and rice.

GOVERNMENT

Under the Constitution of 1958, there is a House of Representatives consisting of the Speaker (who is not an ex officio member of the House or a person who holds any public office), fifty-one elected members and 2 nominated members. 14 members are elected in the Colony and 37 elected in the Protectorate. The House has full power to legislate for the Protectorate as well as for the Colony. The Governor is advised by an Executive Council of the Premier and not less than 7 other ministers, who shall be elected members of the House of Representatives. The Ministers are appointed by the Governor on the recommendation of the Premier. Ten members of the Executive Council hold ministerial portfolios, and the remaining two are Ministers without portfolio.

SINGAPORE

The State of Singapore consists of the island of Singapore and the adjacent islets with a total area of 244.5 sq. miles.

Singapore Island is situated off the southern extremity of the Malay Peninsula, to which it is joined by a causeway, carrying a road and a railway, across the Straits of Johore which are about three-quarters of a mile in width; its length is 26 miles and its breadth 14 miles; its population in mid-1958 was 1,514,900, comprising 1,141,800 Chinese, 207,300 Malaysians, 129,500 Indians and Pakistanis and 12,100 Europeans, 11,700 Eurasians and 12,500 others.

The present settlement was founded on January 30, 1819, by Sir Stamford Raffles, then Lieut-Governor of Bencoolen, Sumatra. The original lease by the Sultan of Johore and the Dato Temenggong, the Chief of Singapore in 1819, was followed in 1824 by the cession of the island in perpetuity by the Dutch in the Treaty of Holland. The island was surrendered to the Japanese on Feb. 15, 1942; it was restored to British rule Sept. 5, 1945, and returned to civil government on April 1, 1946, at the end of the period of the British Military Administration.

The currency is linked to Sterling and the rate of exchange is $1.00 = 2s. 4d.

PRODUCTION AND TRADE

Tin smelting, rubber milling, the manufacture of rubber goods, sawmills, brickworks, shipbuilding and repair, oil mills and the canning of locally grown pineapples are the more important aspects of industry. Products of secondary importance are beer and soft drinks, biscuits, soap, paints, plywood, ropes, rattanware, furniture, asbestos packing, aluminium manufactures, wearing apparel, glassware, sago starch, etc.; but the prosperity of the colony mainly depends on the production and volume of trade of the surrounding territories. Singapore handles 70 per cent. of the external trade of Malaya (1958 = $7,822 million) and is the chief entrepôt centre for South-east Asia and Indonesia. Its total trade in 1958 reached the value of $5,582 million. 66 major shipping lines and 12 international airlines serve Singapore. The new International Airport, with a runway of 8,000 feet, is now in operation.

GOVERNMENT

Singapore achieved statehood in 1959 after 140 years of British colonial rule. An agreement signed in London on April 11, 1957, provided for the constitution of a State of Singapore with full internal self-government and the creation of a Singapore citizenship. There would be as the Queen's representative a Malayan-born Yang di-Pertuan Negara or Head of State, a Cabinet of 9 members presided over by the Prime Minister and a fully-elected Legislative Assembly of 51 members presided over by a Speaker of their own selection. A draft Order-in-Council was prepared before further talks from May 13 to May 28, 1958, and was the document under discussion during the talks. Meanwhile, the State of Singapore Bill was drafted, and the Royal Assent to it was given on August 1, 1958. To enable elections to be held for an Assembly constituted under the new form, the Singapore Colony (Electoral Provisions) Order-in-Council, 1958, was brought into force on September 18. This preliminary Order included the clause preventing those under detention on nomination day for subversion from taking part in election to the First Assembly. The elections, held on May 30, 1959, returned the People's Action Party with a majority of 43 seats. The remaining seats were shared by the Singapore People's Alliance (4), the U.M.N.O. M.C.A. Alliance* (3) and an independent. The franchise is confined to Singapore citizens. The total electorate is 587,797.

The new constitution came into being on June 3, 1959, by a proclamation of the Governor, Sir William Goode, who thus became concurrently Singapore's first Head of State and the United Kingdom Commissioner. These two offices will, however, after the first six months of the constitution be separate and held by different individuals. The next Head of State must be Malayan-born. The U.K. Commissioner remains responsible for external defence and external affairs other than cultural and commercial matters.

While the Singapore Government is responsible for internal security, an Internal Security Council with 7 members, 3 each appointed by the U.K. and Singapore Government, and one member by the Federation of Malaya (with in effect the casting vote) has over-riding authority on matters of internal security.

The Council of Ministers has been replaced by a Cabinet of 9 elected Ministers presided over by the Prime Minister. The Ministers are collectively responsible to the Legislative Assembly for policy, but have full executive authority over their respective ministries, each of which has a Parliamentary Secretary (an elected Assemblyman), and a Permanent Secretary (a civil servant). There is a Deputy Prime Minister without portfolio.

SOMALILAND PROTECTORATE

The Somaliland Protectorate occupies part of the north-east horn of the African Continent along the south of the Gulf of Aden up to 49° E. longitude. It is bordered to the west by French Somaliland (Djibouti) and Ethiopia, and to the south and east by Somalia (ex-Italian Somaliland). The territory covers an area of approximately 68,000 square miles, and lies between 11° 27' north latitude and 42° 40' and 49° east longitude. The interior of the Protectorate is characterized by an elevated plateau rising towards the north to an altitude of from 2,000 to 7,000 feet, and descending in scarps and broken hills to the coastal plain which varies in width from 30 to 60 miles. Vegetation consists largely of nutritious grasses and thorn and acacia trees, which furnish good grazing for camels, sheep and goats.

The nomadic population is estimated at from 500,000 to 700,000, and consists entirely of various Moslem Somali tribes of the Qadrayeh, Ahmediyeh and Salahiyyeh sects. The life and wealth of the people is centred round their stock (camels, sheep and goats). Agriculture is confined to small but increasing areas with sufficient rainfall. Frankincense and myrrh are found in the east. The coastline abounds in fish, and the presence of oil and minerals is suspected in the interior. The chief exports are meat on the hoof, skins and hides. Game in the Protectorate includes lion, leopard, kudu, ostrich and numerous types of gazelle.

Climatic conditions are governed by the south-west monsoon (Kharif) which blows from May to September, and the north-east monsoon which lasts from November to March. Much of the interior is generally cool and healthy owing to its elevation.

The Egyptians bought the port of Massawa in Eritrea in 1864 and subsequently spread their jurisdiction south to Zeilah and Berbera. As they were pre-occupied by events in the Sudan and the rise of the Mahdi, the Egyptians withdrew from the Somali coast in 1884. On July 20, 1887, the Powers were notified that a British Protectorate had been established on the Somali Coast from Ras Jibuti to Bender Ziada. Its boundaries were later defined by treaties with France, Italy and Ethiopia; but they are still artificial. The frontiers between ex-Italian Somaliland and the Protectorate, save for the Bender Ziada Enclave, and those between Ethiopia and the Protectorate have been demarcated.

The Protectorate was invaded by Italian forces on August 4, 1940; and after resistance against greatly superior numbers the British forces were evacuated on August 18, leaving the Italians temporarily in occupation. British sovereignty was restored in 1941 in the course of the East African campaign.

A treaty signed in November, 1954, reaffirmed Ethiopian sovereignty over the Haud and Reserved Areas, land to the south of the Protectorate, recognized by earlier treaties to be Ethiopian territory but traditionally used by Somali tribes as grazing grounds. Under the 1954 agreement, the Somalis retain their grazing rights and a staff of liaison officers looks after their needs in the areas.

TANGANYIKA

The Trust Territory of Tanganyika (formerly German East Africa, 1884-1918) occupies the east central portion of the African continent, between 2°-11° 45' S. lat. and 29° 20'-40° 38' E. long. The Territory is bounded on the N. by Kenya and Uganda; on S.W. by Lake Nyasa, Nyasaland and N. Rhodesia; on S. by Portuguese E. Africa; on the W. it is bounded by the Belgian trust territory of Ruanda-Urundi and Belgian Congo; on the E. the boundary is the Indian Ocean. Tanganyika has a coast-line of about 500 miles and an area of 361,800 square miles (including 20,650 square miles of water). The coast-line extends from the mouth of the Umba to the mouth of the Rovuma.

The greater part of Tanganyika is occupied by the Central African Plateau from which rise many mighty mountains, including Mt. Kilimanjaro, the highest point in the Continent of Africa (19,340 ft.) and Mt. Meru (14,979 ft.). The Rovuma, Rufiji, Pangani, Wami and Ruwv rivers flow into the Indian Ocean; the Mara and Kagera into Lake Victoria; the Malagarasi into Lake Tanganyika; the Songwe into Nyasa; and the Rungwa and Lupa-Songwe into Lake Rukwa. A National Park, created in the Ngorongoro-Serengeti area of the Northern and Lake Provinces, covers several thousand square miles of the finest game country in Africa.

The native population consists mostly of tribes of mixed Bantu race. The 1957 Census figure for non-African residents is: Asian, 77,000, European, 21,000, other non-African, 25,000. The African population is estimated at 8,365,666. Swahili, the language of the coastal people, is understood throughout the country, and forms an invaluable lingua franca. It has been adopted as the basic standard dialect for literature, both for educational and general purposes.

Expenditure by Government on education in 1958-59 was £4,929,000. Schools for Africans are maintained by Government, the Native authorities and by voluntary agencies, mainly missions, the latter two being subsidized by grants-in-aid paid by Central Government. In 1958 there were 2,600 primary schools, mainly co-educational, with an enrolment of 245,276 boys and 121,414 girls. Of these 729 were maintained by Government and Native authorities and 1,931 by voluntary agencies. There were 246 middle schools for boys and 47 for girls. Government or Native authorities managed 105 of the boys' and 10 of the girls' schools. The enrolments were 30,310 boys and 6,301 girls. There were 12 secondary schools run by Government and 16 by voluntary agencies. The enrolments were 3,193 boys and 306 girls. Seven teacher training centres were maintained by Government and 24 by voluntary agencies. The number of students in training were 1,280 men and 504 women. Facilities for post-secondary education are provided by the University College of Makerere at Kampala where there were 216 Tanganyika students and at the Royal Technical College of East Africa, Nairobi, where there were 25 students. Vocational training is given at Ifundu and Moshi Trade Schools and the Tengeru Natural Resources School and on various departmental courses.

Educational facilities for Europeans are administered by the Education Department in accordance with the policy determined by the European Education Authority and financed from the European Education Fund, which derives its revenue from education tax paid by Europeans, fees in Government European Schools and a contribution from Government.

There are 8 Government primary schools of which 2 are boarding schools and 15 private schools receiving financial assistance from the fund as well as 9 unassisted private schools. There is also a Government correspondence course for children who cannot attend a school. In 1958 there were 2,356 primary pupils. There is one private secondary boarding school which receives financial assistance from the fund. 146 European pupils from Tanganyika attended Secondary schools in Kenya.

As in the case of European education, there is a separate authority for Indian education with its own fund. There are Government primary schools in Dar es Salaam, Tanga and secondary schools in Dar es Salaam, Tanga, Moshi, Dodoma and Lindi, but most of the education facilities for Indians are provided by non-Government schools receiving grants in respect of staff buildings and equipment; in 1958 there were 119 of these assisted schools. In 1958 there were 16,217 pupils in primary schools or classes and 6,992 in secondary classes.

There are 3 Mission schools providing for Goans and other non-natives receiving grants from the Other Non-Native (including Goan) Education Fund, and 1 school run by the Goan community. In 1958 there were 1,319 pupils at these schools. There is also one mission school for half-castes.

Production, etc.—The wealth of the Territory lies mainly in its agricultural produce and minerals, and industry is at present largely concerned with the processing of raw materials for export or local consumption. One of the most important developments in 1958 was the opening of a large new wheat mill in Dar es Salaam.

In recent years there has been a steady expansion also in the general field of secondary industries. Industries other than those concerned with processing include: the making of tin cans and containers, paints, distempers and varnishes, wire nails, insecticides, rubber products, coil matting, furniture, and spares for mining and agricultural machinery; shipbuilding and repairing; brewing and aerated water manufacture. A rayon knitwear factory was established in Dar es Salaam in 1958.

The value of Tanganyika's principal exports in 1958 was: sisal, £10,349,000; coffee, £7,576,000; raw cotton, £7,249,000; diamonds, £4,415,000; cashew nuts, £1,087,000; hides and skins, £1,200,000; meat and meat preparations, £907,000. Other exports include beeswax, beans, peas and pulses, animal feeding stuffs, groundnuts, castor and sunflower seeds, wood and timber, lead, gold, tea and unmanufactured tobacco.

Live Stock.—In 1958 there were 7,415,000 cattle, 2,805,000 sheep, 4,124,000 goats, 17,500 pigs, 12,500 donkeys and 240 horses in the Territory.

Minerals.—The provisional value of mineral production in 1958 was £6,738,000. Principal exports were as follows: diamonds, £4,415,000; gold, £705,000; lead concentrates, £1,023,000; sheet mica, £51,000; salt, £89,000; tin concentrates, £13,000; gypsum, £23,000.

Communications.—The Railways in Tanganyika are operated by the East African Railways and Harbours Administration. They are metre gauge and comprise the following lines:—Tanga Line. Tanga to Moshi, 218 miles, with a branch line 54 miles in length from Moshi to Arusha. There is a connection with the Kenya and Uganda Section at Kahe near Moshi. Central Line. Dar es Salaam to Kigoma on Lake Tanganyika, 780 miles, with branch lines from Tabora to Mwanza on Lake Victoria (236 miles); and Kaliwa to Mpanda (131 miles). Southern Province Line. Mtwara to Nachingwea (132 miles) with a branch to Masasi (24 miles). Steamers run on Lakes Victoria (to Uganda and Kenya) and Tanganyika (to Rhodesia and the Belgian Congo). Railway road services operate over 2,200 miles, the main routes being from Morogoro to Korogwe (178 miles), Dodoma to Arusha (273 miles), Dodoma to Mbeya (406 miles), Itigi to Mbeya (305 miles) and Morogoro to Iringa (200 miles). A first-class bitumen-surfaced road, 131 miles long, runs from Namanga (on the Kenya border) to Himo, via Moshi and Arusha. New roads between Dar es Salaam-Morogoro-Iringa and Tanga-Korogwe have been completed. The Tanganyika section of the Cape to Cairo road, from the Northern Rhodesian border to the Kenya border is 810 miles in length and a new mountain section of this road, north of Mbeya, has just been re-aligned. A section of the East-West road from Morogoro to Dodoma has recently been improved.

Tanganyika has an extensive telephone and telegraph network consisting of 66 telephone exchanges and 215 telegraph offices. These services are available to Kenya and Uganda. A radio telephone service is also available to most countries of the world and to suitably equipped ships in East African coastal waters within a range of 400 miles. There are 174 Post Offices.

There is a once weekly through service to London operated by East African Airways Corporation. Daily services connect with London flights at Nairobi via Zanzibar, Tanga and Mombasa. The Corporation also serves 15 stations in Tanganyika and 10 stations in Southern Africa from Dar es Salaam.

ψ The chief seaports are Dar es Salaam, Tanga, Lindi, Mtwara and Kilwa. Dar es Salaam has three deep-water berths and Mtwara two. Tanga is a lighterage port.

GOVERNMENT

The Trust Territory of Tanganyika is administered by the Governor who is assisted by a Council of Ministers. The Council consists of 3 ex officio members, who are the Chief Secretary, the Attorney-General and the Minister for Finance, and 9 nominated members. On July 1, 1959, when the Council of Ministers was constituted, 4 of the 9 nominated members were official ministers and 5 were unofficial ministers. An Executive Council, which consists of all the 12 ministers and some nominated unofficial members, also gives advice on legislation which has been previously considered in the Council of Ministers and advises the Governor in the exercise of the prerogative of mercy. There is a Legislative Council, presided over by a Speaker. It may consist on the Government side of up to 34 ex officio and nominated members, there being no fixed proportion between officials and unofficials who may be nominated, nor between the members of the various races. There is provision for 30 elected representative members, being 10 Africans, 10 Asians and 10 Europeans, although it should be noted that on July 1, 1959, 5 of these elected representative members were sitting on the Government side of the House as unofficial ministers. There is also provision in the Order in Council for 3 members to be nominated by the Governor for the representation of "general interests"; but the future of these seats is under consideration.

TONGA

The Tongan or Friendly Islands form a self-governing State under the protection of Great Britain. These islands are situated in the Southern Pacific some 300 miles to the E.S.E. of Fiji, with an area of 270 square miles, and population (September 26, 1956) of 56,838, made up of 55,156 Tongans and 1,682 others, including 277 Europeans. The largest island, Tongatapu, was discovered by Tasman in 1643. Most of the islands are of coral formation, but some are volcanic (Tofua, Kao and Niuafoou or "Tin Can" Island). The limits of the group are between 15° and 23° 30' S., and 173° and 177° W. Nukualofa, on the island of Tongatapu, is the seat of government. The present Queen Salote Tubou, G.C.V.O., G.B.E., succeeded her father the late King George Tubou II on April 12, 1918. The constitution provides for a Government consisting of the Sovereign, a privy council and cabinet, a legislative assembly and a judiciary. The legislative assembly has 21 members, with a Speaker, and includes the Ministers of the Crown, the two Governors of island groups, and the representatives of the Nobles and of the people (seven of each), who are elected triennially. Soil generally is fertile, the principal export is copra. Revenue 1957-58 £T739,995; expenditure £T744,094. There is no debt. Total imports (1958) £T1,618,666; total exports £T1,210,590. The total shipping cleared in 1957 was 126,604 tons. Tongan currency is on parity with Australian currency in relation to sterling.

British Commissioner and Consul, Q. V. L. Weston (1959) (and duty allowance £200) £2,700.

THE UGANDA PROTECTORATE

The territories now comprised within this Protectorate came under British influence in 1890. The present limits are approximately as follows:— On the north, the Sudan; on the east, the western boundary of Kenya Colony; on the south, Tanganyika Territory and Belgian Ruanda-Urundi; and on the west, the eastern boundary of the Belgian Congo. Within these boundaries lie Lake Victoria (part), Lake Edward (part), Lake George, Lake Albert (half), Lake Kyoga, Lake Salisbury, and the course of the Nile from its exit from Lake Victoria to the Sudan frontier post at Nimule. Total area, 93,981 square miles, including 13,689 square miles of water.

For administrative purposes, the Protectorate is divided into 4 Provinces:—

(1) Buganda (East Mengo, West Mengo, Masaka and Mubende).

(2) Eastern (Teso, Busoga, Bugisu, Bukedi, Mbale Township).

(3) Western (Bunyoro, Toro, Ankole and Kigezi).

(4) Northern (Acholi, Lango, West Nile and Karamoja).

The estimated population of Uganda (1956) is 5,764,000, composed as follows: Africans 5,695,000; Asians 59,000; Europeans 10,000. About 2,500,000 Africans, who occupy the Central and Southern parts of the Protectorate, speak Bantu languages of which the most important is Luganda (the language of the Baganda tribe, from whom the present name of the Protectorate was originally derived). Ki-Swahili in a debased form is also spoken as a trading language and is used by the Police. The tribes occupying the North of the Protectorate are closely related to various tribes in the South of the Sudan. They speak a series of widely differing languages, now distinguished as belonging to the Sudanian, Nilotic and Nilohamitic clusters.

Development.—A five-year development plan for the period July, 1955–July, 1960 has been drawn up, involving the expenditure of approximately £34,000,000.

A dam has been erected at the Owen Falls on the Nile, near Jinja, to provide hydro-electric power for industrial development. A generating capacity of 105,000 kW. is now available. The potential generating capacity of the dam is 150,000 kW. Power is now available over a wide area.

Mineral resources are mainly concentrated in two widely separated areas. In the west on the slopes of the Ruwenzori Mountains are found limestone, copper, cobalt and salt whilst around Tororo in the east the Sukulu mineral complex includes limestone, magnetite, apatite (phosphate), and pyrochlore (niobium).

In 1952, the Uganda Development Corporation Limited was established with a capital of £5,000,000 now increased to £8,000,000, of which £5,500,000 has been issued. Its object is to promote and assist the further expansion of the economy of the Protectorate by the establishment of enterprises with the co-operation of private capital wherever possible. The Corporation's Technical Development Division also undertakes research into technical aspects of industrial development and its services are available not only to its own associated and subsidiary companies but to industry generally. Developments which the Uganda Development Corporation has sponsored in participation with private enterprise include the mining and production of copper and cobalt from Kilembe, in the Ruwenzori Range, the successful exploration of the apatite and pyrochlore deposits at Tororo, and the manufacture of textiles at Jinja from locally grown cotton.

A subsidiary of the Corporation, the Uganda Cement Industry Limited, at Tororo, can produce sufficient cement to meet all Uganda's requirements with a surplus for export. The Corporation is also concerned through subsidiaries with fish ranching, building, hotel development, cattle ranching and tea growing.

Education.—Separate schools are provided for members of the African, Asian and European communities, though since 1957 an effort has been made to extend multi-racial schools. The majority of African schools are managed by voluntary agencies, especially by Mission Societies. Substantial grants are provided by Government towards teachers' salaries, boarding and equipment, and there are about 314,000 children in grant-aided primary schools and about 18,000 in post-primary institutions, including training colleges and technical schools. There are 19,000 in Government and grant-aided Asian schools. Over 1,000 European children attend Government and grant-aided schools in the Protectorate, but there are no secondary schools in Uganda for European children and the majority of them attend secondary schools in Kenya or the United Kingdom. Approximately £4,500,000 was spent on education, including capital projects, during the financial year 1957-58. Makerere College, the University College of East Africa, is an autonomous inter-territorial foundation. It was granted special relationship with London University in 1949, and London external degrees were awarded for the first time at the end of 1953. In 1958 there were 823 students attending the College, of whom 270 came from Uganda.

Communications.—The main line of the East African Railways in Kenya and Uganda extends from Mombasa, via Nairobi, Tororo, Jinja and Kampala to Kasese near the Belgian Congo border. There are branches from Tororo to Soroti, from Jinja through Mbulamuti to Namasagali on Lake Kyoga, and from Kampala to Port Bell on Lake Victoria. The Railway Administration maintains a regular steamer service on Lake Kyoga between Namasagali and Masindi Port; and on Lake Victoria between Port Bell, Entebbe, Kisumu and Tanganyika Ports. A service is maintained on Lake Albert and the Nile between Butiaba and Nimule (connected by motor road with Juba in the Sudan) and between Butiaba and the Belgian Congo port of Kasenyi. A road transport service operates between Masindi Port and Butiaba, and a freight service between Butiaba and Kampala. A through service is thus provided by the Railway Administration from Mombasa to the Sudan and the Belgian Congo. The Uganda Public Works Department maintains 503 miles of tarmac road and 2,395 miles of all-weather murrum roads connecting the principal towns; the various African local governments between them maintain a further 4,418 miles of all-weather murrum roads and 3,881 miles of lesser murrum roads of variable standard. There is a joint East African Posts and Telecommunications Service which operates throughout Kenya, Uganda and Tanganyika. Entebbe has a first-class international airport, and is a principal stopping place on the main B.O.A.C. routes through East Africa. Other airlines operating regularly through Entebbe include Alitalia, Sabena, Central African Airways, and E.A.A.C., Hunting-Clan and Airwork. It is also a stopping point on many charter flights. There are landing grounds at Jinja, Tororo, Masindi, Gulu, Soroti, Arua, Lira, Mbarara, Moroto, Murchison Falls, Kisenyi (on Lake George) and Kasese. There are hotels at Entebbe, Kampala, Jinja, Tororo, Mbale, Kasese, Masindi, Fort Portal, Kabale, Mbarara, Kichwamba and Masaka.

Production.—Agricultural production is largely in the hands of Africans, the most important crops being cotton, coffee, tobacco, maize and groundnuts. Sugar, coffee and tea are the main crops on non-African estates. The potential mineral wealth is considerable, tin ore, wolfram and copper being won in the Western Province.

GOVERNMENT

The Executive Council consists of the Governor and 12 members. Of these 12 members, the Chief Secretary, the Attorney-General and the Minister of Finance are ex officio members. The remaining places are filled by the Ministers of Local Government, of Natural Resources, of Education and Labour, of Commerce and Industry, of Lands and Mineral Development, of Works, of Social Development and of Health, the Assistant Minister of Social Services and the present Resident, Buganda, in his personal capacity. The Legislative Council consists of 3 ex officio members (the Chief Secretary, the Attorney-General and the Minister of Finance), 14 Ministers and officials and 15 other members (total 32) on the Government side and 30 representative members, of whom 18 are African, 6 Asian and 6 European. The Governor is President of the Council, but the Speaker now normally presides.

The whole territory is under British Administration; but in particular areas local powers are specifically reserved by treaty or "Agreement" to the local tribal government.

There are four "Agreement States," all monarchical in constitution—Buganda, Ankole, Toro and Bunyoro.

Generally throughout the whole country, government has been and still is administered through a system of county, sub-county and parish chiefs, first developed during the latter half of the 19th century in Buganda and extended by British and Ganda influence to all parts of the country. Chiefs consequently are to be regarded everywhere not as hereditary leaders of the original social groups, but as salaried civil servants selected and promoted by merit. Native courts of varying limited jurisdiction deal with cases, both civil and criminal, involving Africans only, but certain classes of cases are reserved to the Protectorate courts. Such native courts are supervised, in Buganda, by a judicial adviser, and elsewhere by the administrative staff, the High Court having appellate powers in such cases in Buganda and exercising appellate and revisional jurisdiction over such courts elsewhere. There are Protectorate Courts dealing with certain reserved offences, and cases in which a non-African is a party. Appeal from these courts lies to the High Court of Uganda and ultimately to the Court of Appeal for Eastern Africa. During the last twenty years a system of councils extending from the parish through the sub-county and county up to the District Councils has been established; the District Councils are being developed as local government bodies which will gradually take over from the Central Government responsibility for certain local services. The Legislative Council of the Protectorate is representative of all races, and has African members from all Districts.

THE WEST INDIES

Trade Enquiry Office in London, Trade Commissioner for the British West Indies, British Guiana and British Honduras, 6-10 Bruton Street, W.1.

The West Indies are a number of islands and islets, some of them mere rocks, situated between 10° to 27° North and 59° 30' to 85° West. The whole archipelago extends in a curve from the Florida Channel (North America) to within 7 miles of the coast of Venezuela (South America), and is divided into three main groups: I. GREATER ANTILLES, which contain the largest islands, Cuba (44,000 sq. miles) and Hispaniola (Haiti and the Dominican Republic) (30,000 sq. miles), Jamaica and Puerto Rico; II. BAHAMAS, which are entirely British. III. LESSER ANTILLES, which are divided among the United Kingdom, France, Netherlands, the United States and Venezuela; the British colonies in the Lesser Antilles are Barbados, Leeward and Windward Islands and Trinidad and Tobago. The total area of the archipelago is nearly 100,000 square miles, of which 72,000 square miles are independent, 12,300 British, 3,800 United States, 1,350 French, 430 Netherlands, and 90 Venezuelan.

The West India Islands that lie nearest the East have been called the Windward Islands; the others the Leeward Islands, on account of the winds blowing generally from the eastern point in those quarters.

CARIBBEAN COMMISSION

Kent House,

Port of Spain, Trinidad, B.W.I.

Co-Chairmen, M. Philippe Grousset (France); Dr. H. R. van Houten (Netherlands); I. P. Garran, C.M.G. (Great Britain); R. L. O'Connor (U.S.A.).

Secretary-General, C. F. Beauregard.

Deputy Secretary-General (vacant).

Administrative Secretary, C. E. P. Erskine-Lindop.

The Caribbean Commission is an international advisory body of which the four member nations—France, Netherlands, the United Kingdom, and the United States—all have departments, colonies or countries associated with them in the Caribbean area. The Commission is an expansion of the original Anglo-American Caribbean Commission which was set up by the Governments of Great Britain and the United States in 1942 "for the purpose of encouraging and strengthening social and economic co-operation between the U.S.A. and its possessions and bases in the area . . . and the United Kingdom and the British Colonies in the same area." The two-nation body was expanded into the present organization when the French and Netherlands Governments accepted invitations to join it at the end of 1945, with the stated purpose of "encouraging and strengthening co-operation among themselves and their territories with a view towards improving the economic and social well-being of the peoples of those territories and . . . of promoting scientific, technological and economic development in the Caribbean area and facilitating the use of resources and concerted treatment of mutual problems, avoiding duplication in the work of existing research agencies, surveying needs, ascertaining what research has been done, facilitating research on a co-operation basis, and recommending further research. . . ." The Commission has two subsidiary bodies—the Caribbean Research Council, which advises the Commission on scientific and technical matters, and the West Indian Conference, a forum attended by the representatives of the peoples of the area, which assembles every two years, and in which matters of common social and economic interest can be discussed. The Commission itself meets approximately once every six months. The most recent meeting was held in Port of Spain, Trinidad, in November, 1958. The Commission issues a monthly magazine, The Caribbean, in French and English, and technical publications and reports. The Commission has also sponsored many technical conferences. The Commission's administrative and executive work is carried on by an international Secretariat with headquarters in Port of Spain.

FEDERATION OF THE WEST INDIES

The Federation of the West Indies was set up on January 3, 1958, by Order in Council as provided for in the British Caribbean (Federation) Act, 1956, and consists of ten colonies with dependencies.

Area and Population.—The Federation has an area of 8,028 square miles and an estimated total population of 3,095,358.

TERRITORIES

	Area sq. miles	Population
Antigua, Barbuda, Redonda . .	171	56,000
Barbados	166	237,000
Dominica	305	66,000
Grenada	133	91,000
Jamaica	4,706	1,651,000
Montserrat	32	14,000
St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla	152	56,000
St. Lucia	233	92,000
St. Vincent	150	82,000
Trinidad and Tobago	1,980	742,000

Government.—The Federal Legislature consists of a Senate and a House of Representatives. The executive authority in the Federation is exercised on behalf of Her Majesty by the Governor-General. Legislation by Order in Council may be enacted for the Federation in the United Kingdom on matters relating to defence, foreign relations or the maintenance of financial stability. As to other internal matters, division of legislative powers between the Federal and Territorial Legislatures is defined in two Legislative Lists, the Exclusive and the Concurrent Legislative Lists. The Federal Government may legislate on matters in either list; Territorial Legislatures have power to make laws for the territory on any subject included in the Concurrent List. In the event of inconsistency between federal and territorial law, the federal law prevails. No federal law is applicable to the Cayman Islands or Turks and Caicos Islands except where explicitly stated.

Governor-General, The Lord Hailes, P.C.

The Senate.—The Governor-General appoints a Senate of 19 members on a basis of 2 members from each Territory except Montserrat (1 member). Senators may not simultaneously be members of the House of Representatives or of the Legislative or Executive Council of a Territory. Bills, other than money bills, may be introduced in the Senate which has a term of 5 years. A quorum of 8 members is required.

President of the Senate, A. S. Cato (Barbados).

The House of Representatives.—On March 25, 1958, elections were held in the Federation for the first House of Representatives. The House consists of 45 members elected for a term not exceeding 5 years: from Jamaica, 17; Trinidad and Tobago, 10; other territories, 2 each, except Montserrat (1). An alternate member is elected for Montserrat who does not sit unless the member is absent or the seat vacant. Principal parties contesting the elections were the Federal Labour Party, which won 25 seats, and the Democratic Labour Party (anti-socialist), 19 seats, the remaining seat being won by the Barbados National Party, 26 per cent. of the electorate of 1,500,000 voted. The quorum of the House is 17, of which 4 members must be elected in different territories. The English language is used in the Senate and House of Representatives. On April 20, 1958, Princess Margaret inaugurated the first Federal Parliament at Port of Spain, on behalf of Her Majesty the Queen.

Council of State.—The Council of State consists of the Prime Minister and ten other Ministers, of whom at least three must be Senators. The Council is the principal instrument of policy for the Federation and advises the Governor-General in the exercise of his functions. Ministers are appointed by the Governor-General on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Constitution provides for three persons holding office in the public service of the Federation to be nominated by the Governor-General to attend any meetings of the Council of State and to take part in discussions at such meetings.

COUNCIL OF STATE

Prime Minister, Sir Grantley Herbert Adams, C.M.G., Q.C.

Minister of Finance, R. L. Bradshaw (St. Kitts.).

Ministers without Portfolio, V. B. Vaughan (Barbados); N. H. Richards (Antigua).

Senators

A. G. Byfield (Jamaica); J. L. Charles (St. Lucia);

J. W. Liburd (Nevis).

Judicature.—The Constitution provides for a Federal Supreme Court with jurisdiction inter alia in proceedings between the Federation and a territory, or between one territory and another; and for the appointment by the Governor-General of a Chief Justice and three Federal Justices. Responsibility for the initiation and conduct of criminal proceedings is vested in the Attorney-General of the Federation.

Finance.—In each calendar year 1958-1962 the Federal Government will derive its revenue from a mandatory levy on the territorial governments, provided that the total amount levied in a year does not exceed $B.W.I.9,120,000. Each territory is required to contribute proportionately.

BARBADOS,

the most easterly of the West India Islands, is situated in $13^{\circ} 4' N.$, and longitude $59^{\circ} 37' W.$ It is nearly 21 English miles long by 14 broad at the widest part, and comprises an area of 166 sq. miles, about 68,000 acres being cultivated. The population (Dec. 31, 1958) was 236,812. The principal exports are sugar, molasses, rum, margarine, lard and laundry soap, and the imports meat, rice, salted fish, dairy products, flour, corn meal, lumber, textiles, animal foods and chemical fertilizers.

GOVERNMENT

Barbados has always remained in the possession of Great Britain, by which it was settled in 1627. The Crown has a veto on legislation. The Legislature consists of the Governor, a Legislative Council of 15 members appointed by the Sovereign, and a House of Assembly of 24 members elected every five years by adult suffrage.

A ministerial system of Government was introduced in 1954 and a cabinet system in Jan. 1958. There are a Premier and five other Ministers, responsible for the executive functions of Government except defence and security, personnel, establishment and external affairs.

JAMAICA,

aboriginally Xaymaca, or Land of Wood and Water—an island situate in the Caribbean Sea, about 90 miles to the south of Cuba, within $17^{\circ} 43' - 18^{\circ} 32'$ North lat. and $76^{\circ} 11' - 78^{\circ} 21'$ W. long.

Jamaica was discovered on May 3, 1494, by Columbus, who called it St. Jago. It was taken possession of by the Spaniards in 1509; but in 1655 a British expedition, sent out by Oliver Cromwell, under Penn and Venables, attacked the island, which capitulated after a trifling resistance. In 1670 it was formally ceded to England by the Treaty of Madrid.

Area and Population.—It is the largest and most valuable island of the Federation of the West Indies, being 146 miles in length and 51 in extreme breadth, containing an area of 4,411 square miles (with Dependencies 4,680 sq. miles). The island is divided into 3 counties (Surrey, Middlesex and Cornwall) and 14 parishes. The census taken on January 4, 1943, shows a total of 1,237,063 persons resident on the island (598,267 males and 638,796 females). The estimated population at the end of 1958 was 1,651,493.

Physical Features.—From the sea-level on all sides of Jamaica a series of ridges gradually ascends towards the central ranges, dividing the large rivers, and attaining, in the culminating Blue Mountain Peak, in the eastern part of the island, an elevation of 7,402 feet. From these mountains at least 70 streams descend to the north and south shores, but none is navigable except the Black River, and that only for small craft.

Communications.—There are several excellent harbours, and the island is intersected by good roads. There are 249 miles of railway open. Telegraph stations and post offices are established in every town and in very many villages. The Palisadoes Airport at Kingston is used by British West Indian Airways Ltd., British Overseas Airways Corporation, Pan-American Airways, K.L.M., Trans-Canada Air Lines, Avianca, RANSA and Aerovias Panama Airways, which provide air communications with Europe, North, Central and South America and the Caribbean Islands. The Montego Bay Airport is also used by many airlines. A number of non-scheduled airlines operate through the Colony for non-traffic purposes in accordance with the provisions of International Air Services Transit Agreement.

Production and Industry.—Most of the staple products of tropical climates are raised. Sugar and rum are manufactured and exported; the latter is still counted the best in the world, and the coffee raised in certain districts of the Blue Mountains is of fine quality and fetches a high price. There is an extensive trade in fruits, chiefly bananas, with the U.K. Citrus (and juices), cocoa and pimento are important export crops. Jamaica has developed a breed of dairy cattle known as the Jamaica Hope which is being exported to other tropical countries on an increasing scale. Good beef cattle are also raised. Jamaica is now the largest producer of bauxite in the world. The bauxite deposits are worked by one Canadian and two American companies; the Canadian company processes bauxite into alumina. Gypsum is also mined, production for 1958 being 600,000 tons compared with 189,000 tons in 1957. Cement is manufactured locally, the output of the factory being 176,000 tons in 1958. There is a textile mill and local factories also manufacture garments, knitted fabrics, shoes, paints, corrugated cardboard containers, small plastic articles, drugs, blankets, aluminum furniture and hollowware, gin, corn meal, soap, condensed milk and beer.

GOVERNMENT

With the coming into effect of the Jamaica (Constitution) Order in Council, 1959, on July 4, 1959, internal self-government was fully attained.

The House of Representatives, whose normal term is five years, has become a 45-seat chamber, the Premier is appointed by the Governor. The Cabinet is nominated by the Premier and is collectively responsible to the Legislature. It consists of 12 ministers, including not fewer than 2 or more than 3 from the Legislative Council. Official members are excluded from the Legislative Council. The Council consists of not fewer than 20 or more than 21 members, of whom 2 or 3 are appointed on the advice of the Premier and are available for appointment as Ministers without Portfolio, while the others are appointed by the Governor after consultation with the different political parties. The Legislative Council's delaying powers for money bills has been reduced from 12 months to one month and it can amend a money bill only if the House of Representatives consents.

The Governor has no reserved powers save in matters which appear to him to affect the Royal Prerogative, international relations or the constitution itself; and Her Majesty retains the power to disallow any law which adversely affects the interests of stockholders in such Jamaican Government Stock, as at the request of the Government of Jamaica, is treated as trustee stock in the United Kingdom. In civil service matters, the Governor is required to act on the recommendation of three Commissions—the Judicial Service, Public Service and Police Service Commissions—save in cases of appeals in disciplinary matters, when he acts on the advice of the Privy Council, which continues in existence. Of the Privy Council's six members, four may be public officers.

TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS

These West India Islands geographically form a sort of annexe of the Bahamas group, from which Government they were separated in 1848. In 1873 they were annexed to Jamaica, from which they are distant about 450 miles. They have an area of about 166 square miles, and a population of about 6,500 of which the principal island, Grand Turk, contains about 1,800. Grand Turk is an important cable station. The islands are celebrated for producing some of the finest salt in the world. Other exports are sisal, crawfish and conches. A considerable number of men are employed overseas in the Bahamas. There is a U.S. Air Force base and a Naval facility at Grand Turk, and a government-owned airstrip at South Caicos, at present used mainly for emergency purposes only.

THE LEEWARD ISLANDS

The Leeward Islands consist of the four colonies of (1) Antigua, with Barbuda and Redonda; (2) St. Christopher, Nevis and Anguilla; (3) Montserrat; and (4) the British Virgin Islands (see p. 768); all having their own Legislature. These colonies are administered by a Governor to whom the Administrators are subordinate. By the Leeward Islands Act, 1956, the federation of the colony of the Leeward Islands was abolished and each of the four presidencies became a colony, and the Federal Executive and General Legislative Councils were dissolved. In each colony there is an elected majority in the Legislature. In Antigua and St. Christopher-Nevis-Anguilla, there is also a ministerial system of Government. The area of the Leeward Islands is 422 sq. miles, with an estimated population at December 31, 1957, of 135,635.

(1) ANTIGUA AND BARBUDA

Antigua is the seat of government and residence of the Governor of the Leeward Islands. It lies in 17° 6' N. lat. and 61° 45' W. long., and is nearly 108 square miles in area with a coast line of about 70 miles. Antigua was first settled by the English in 1632, and was granted to Lord Willoughby by Charles II. It is much less hilly and wooded than the other Leeward Islands, and is largely given up to the cultivation of sugar, for which one central sugar factory has been erected. Cotton is now planted on a large scale and the island also exports molasses, tomatoes and rum. The population, with Barbuda (estimated, 1956) was 54,228.

Barbuda, formerly a possession of the Codrington family, is situated 30 miles N. of Antigua, of which it is a dependency, in lat. 17° 35' N., long. 61° 42' W. Area, 62 square miles. Population, 1,000. The island is flat and mostly stony, producing cotton, corn and ground-nuts. Wild deer are found, and there is good tarpon and other fishing.

Warden, J. H. Joseph (and quarters), £660 to £750.

Redonda is uninhabited.

CAPITAL St. John. Population (1948), 11,000.

(2) ST. KITTS-NEVIS WITH ANGUILLA

The islands of St. Kitts, Nevis, and Anguilla were united in 1882 to form one Presidency, and taken together they have a population (1957) of 56,433, and a total area of about 153 square miles. The climate is decidedly healthy for the tropics, the temperature being from 66° to 88°.

St. Kitts (population 1957, 35,878), the principal island, was the first possession of the British West Indies to be colonized (1623); it is situated in lat. $17^{\circ} 18' N.$ and long. $62^{\circ} 48' W.$, and comprises an area of 68 square miles, its greatest length being 28 miles, and greatest breadth about 5 miles. It is one of the most effectively cultivated sugar islands in the West Indies, a continuous line of green estates sweeping up all round the coast from the sea towards the central range, which rises to a height of 3,711 feet (Mount Misery). Cotton is also grown to a considerable extent. The capital, Ψ Basseterre, is a port of registry.

Nevis (population 1957, 15,446) is separated from St. Kitts by a strait 3 miles wide and has an area of 50 sq. miles. Cotton and coconuts are exported, and cattle and vegetables are raised. Its greatest elevation is 3,596 feet. The chief town, Ψ Charlestown, is a port of entry.

Anguilla (population 1957, 5,109) is about 60 miles N.W. of St. Kitts, 16 miles in length, and varies in breadth from 1 to 3 miles, containing an area of 35 square miles. There are no hills. Salt is the principal product, and small stock are raised.

Government

The Administrator is assisted by an Executive Council and a Legislative Council. The Executive Council consists of the Governor of the Leeward Islands (who seldom sits), the Administrator, two official members, one nominated unofficial member and five members chosen by the Legislative Council from among the elected members of that body. The Legislative Council consists of two official members, three nominated members and eight elected members. Since January 19, 1956, three of the five elected members in the Executive Council have held the portfolios of Ministers of Trade and Production, Public Works and Communications and Social Services respectively.

is situated in $16^{\circ} 45' N.$ lat. and $61^{\circ} 25' W.$ long., 27 miles S.W. of Antigua. It is about 11 miles in length and 7 in breadth, comprising an area of 32½ square miles, population (1957) 14,465. Discovered by Columbus in 1493, it was settled by Irishmen, conquered and held by the French for some time, and finally assigned to Great Britain in 1783. It is justly considered one of the most healthy and beautiful of the Antilles; it contains three active soufrières and several hot springs, while the scenery is charmingly diversified. About two-thirds of the island is mountainous, the rest well cultivated. The chief exports are sea island cotton, tomatoes, carrots, onions, limes and lime products. There is a wireless station on the island.

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Trinidad, the second largest and most southerly of the West Indian Islands, lies close to the north coast of the continent of S. America, the nearest point of Venezuela being 7 miles distant. The island is situated between $10^{\circ} 2' - 10^{\circ} 50' N.$ lat. and $60^{\circ} 55' - 61^{\circ} 56' W.$ long., and is about 50 miles in length by 37 in breadth, with an area of 1,864 square miles, and a population estimated (June 30, 1958), at 788,600 (including Tobago). The racial groups at the 1946 census were: African 47 per cent., East Indian 35 per cent., Mixed or Coloured 14 per cent., European 3 per cent., Chinese 1 per cent. The island was discovered by Columbus in 1498, was colonized in 1532 by the Spaniards, capitulated to the British under Abercromby in 1797, and was ceded to Britain under the Treaty of Amiens (March 25, 1802). Two mountain systems, the Northern and Southern Ranges, stretch across almost its entire width and a third, the Central Range, lies somewhat diagonally across its middle portion; otherwise the island is mostly flat. The highest peaks are in the Northern Range (Aripo 3,085 ft., El Tucuche 3,072 ft.). The climate is tropical with temperatures ranging from 70° to $90^{\circ} F.$ and a rainfall ranging from 100 inches in the north east to 50 inches in the west. There is a well-marked dry season from January to May and a wet season from June to December. The nights are invariably cool. The main tourist season is from December to April.

Oil is the principal export. A remarkable phenomenon is the asphalt lake, 114 acres in extent, near the village of La Brea, from which in 1958 133,042 tons of natural asphalt were removed. The soil of Trinidad is rich and productive, the most important products being sugar, molasses, rum, cocoa, coconuts and coconut products, citrus and coffee. Agricultural exports totalled $55,048,551 in 1958.

In 1958 there were 67 Government and 347 denominational (assisted) primary and intermediate schools, with an enrolment of 166,845 and average attendance of 141,720.

In 1957 the Government of the Colony allocated $11,322,070 for expenditure on medical services for hospitals and clinics, malaria, tuberculosis, dental services, leprosy, hookworm, maternity and infant welfare, nutrition and health education.

There are 109 miles of public railway and the total mileage of main and local roads maintained during 1958 was 2,510. There are 188 post offices and postal agencies, 57 of which transact savings bank and money order business. There is an internal telegraph system and two local broadcasting stations.

Trinidad is well served by steamship lines and there are deep water wharf facilities at Port of Spain. Eleven international scheduled airlines operate to and through Trinidad (Piarco), which acts as a focal point for air traffic between the Americas. There were 12,843 movements of aircraft in 1958. A domestic air service between Trinidad and Tobago is operated by B.W.I.A. Flights in 1958 averaged two per day.

The chief town and port of entry, Ψ Port of Spain (pop. 121,150), is one of the finest towns in the West Indies, with sewerage, electric lighting, trolley-bus and telephone services. Other towns of importance are Ψ San Fernando (pop. 39,800), about 33 miles south of the capital, and Arima (pop. 12,650).

Tobago lies between $12^{\circ} 8'$ and $11^{\circ} 21'$ N. lat. and between $60^{\circ} 30'$ and $60^{\circ} 50'$ W. long., about 75 miles south-east of Grenada, 19 miles north-east of Trinidad, and 120 miles S.W. of Barbados. It was ceded to the British Crown in 1814 and amalgamated with Trinidad in 1888. The island is 26 miles long, and $7\frac{1}{2}$ broad, and has an area of 216 square miles, with a population estimated (1958) at 36,900. It is one of the healthiest of the West Indies and a popular tourist resort. The main town is Ψ Scarborough (estimated pop. 15,000).

Other Islands.—Corozal Point and Icacos Point, the N.W. and S.W. extremities of Trinidad, enclose the Gulf of Paria, and west of Corozal Point lie several islands, of which Chacachacare, Huevos, Monos and Gaspar Grande are the most important. On Chacachacare is a leper settlement, the Medical Superintendent of which appeals for Sunday and weekly editions of British newspapers.

GOVERNMENT

The Colony is administered in accordance with the provisions of the Trinidad and Tobago (Constitution) Order in Council, 1950, as amended in 1956 and 1959, which provides for Executive and Legislative Councils, of which there are unofficial elected majorities. The Cabinet, which is the chief instrument of policy, consists of a Premier, as chairman, 8 Ministers and 2 ex officio members. The Legislative Council consists of a Speaker who presides, 2 ex officio members, 5 nominated members and 24 elected members.

GRENADA AND THE GRENADINES

Grenada is situated between the parallels of $12^{\circ} 13' - 11^{\circ} 58' N.$ lat. and $61^{\circ} 20' - 61^{\circ} 35' W.$ long., and is about 21 miles in length and 12 miles in breadth; it is about 96 miles north of Trinidad, 68 miles S.S.W. of St. Vincent, and 100 miles S.W. of Barbados. Area, about 133 square miles: estimated population (including some of the Grenadines), 90,852 (1957). The country is mountainous and very picturesque, and the climate is healthy. Grenada was discovered by Columbus in 1498, and named Conception. It was originally colonized by the French, and was ceded to Great Britain by the Treaty of Versailles in 1783.

The soil is very fertile, and cocoa, spices, sugar cane, cotton, coconuts, limes and fruit are grown. The imports chiefly comprise dry goods, wheat flour, dried fish, bread-stuffs, hardware, etc.

St. George's (population approximately 7,500), on the south-west coast, is the chief town, and possesses a good harbour.

It comprises an area of 238 square miles with an estimated population (1958) of 92,089. It possesses perhaps the most interesting history of all the smaller islands. Fights raged hotly around it, and it constantly changed hands between the English and the French. It is mountainous, its highest point being 3,145 feet above the sea, and for the most part it is covered with forest and tropical vegetation. The principal exports are sugar, bananas, copra, coconuts, cacao, edible oil, lime oil, fresh fruit and vegetables.

St. Castries, the capital (estimated population, 25,000) is recognized as being one of the finest ports in the West Indies on account of its reputation as a safe anchorage in the hurricane season. The town was greatly damaged by fire in 1948, but the work of reconstruction and rehabilitation has been made possible by a grant from H.M. Government. In 1958, 1,185 vessels with a total gross tonnage of 1,010,365 called at Castries.

In 1846, a large number of Portuguese labourers, amounting to 2,400, entered the island, and proved a valuable acquisition. St. Vincent is more thoroughly English than the three other islands of the group. In 1783 it was secured to Great Britain.

The chief products are arrowroot, cotton, copra, coconuts, rum, sugar, bananas, cassava, cocoa, ground provisions, and spices. Its chief imports are foodstuffs (including canned and pickled meat, salted and pickled fish, butter, rice and flour), cotton and woollen piece goods, hardware, lumber, iron and steel manufactures, cement and fertilizers.

There were 50 primary schools with 19,651 pupils in 1958, and 2 Government secondary schools with an attendance of 467. In addition, there are 2 grant-aided secondary schools with an attendance of 394.

DOMINICA

Dominica, the loftiest of the Lesser Antilles, was transferred from the Leeward to the Windward Group on Jan. 1, 1940. It is situated between 25° 20'—25° 45' N. lat. and 61° 13'—61° 30' W. long., 95 miles S. of Antigua, and is about 29 miles long and 15 broad comprising an area of 305 sq. miles, or 195,200 acres, of which about 35,000 acres are under cultivation. The island is of volcanic origin and very mountainous and picturesque, abounding in streams fairly well stocked with fish, and the soil is very fertile. The temperature varies, according to the altitude, from 55° to 85°. The climate is healthy, and during the winter months very pleasant. Yellow fever is unknown, and from November to June the island is suitable as a health resort for pulmonary and rheumatic invalids. The exports consist almost entirely of agricultural produce, principally bananas, lime oil, lime juice, oranges, bay oil, cocoa, copra and vanilla. The population was (1958), 66,645. Included in this total are about 400 Caribs, of whom about 40 are of pure blood. The principal towns are Ψ Roseau, on the south-west coast, population 15,000, and Portsmouth, population 3,000.

Education.—There are 48 elementary schools, of which 45 are Government and 3 assisted. Of the 4 secondary schools, 3 receive a grant-in-aid and one is maintained by Government.

ZANZIBAR

(The Zanzibar Protectorate)

Sultan, H. H. Seyyid Sir Khalifa bin Harub, G.C.M.G., G.B.E., born Aug. 26, 1879; succeeded Dec. 9, 1911.

Heir-Apparent, Seyyid Sir Abdullah bin Khalifa, K.B.E., C.M.G., born Feb. 12, 1920.

The Zanzibar dominions became independent in 1856 under the rule of Seyyid Majid, a son of Seyyid Said, Sultan of Muscat and Zanzibar. They formerly extended along the mainland as far south as Tungwi Bay and north to Warskeikh; but since the cession of the coast-line from Ruvuma to Vanga, including the island of Mafia, to Germany in 1890, and of the Benadir and Kismayu coasts to Italy in 1904 and 1924 respectively, they are confined to the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, a coastal strip from Vanga to Ras Kiamboni (Dick's Head), the islands of Lamu, Manda, Patta, and Siu, for which His Highness' Government receives annual rentals of £10,000 from the Government of Kenya, and £1,000 from Her Majesty's Government in respect of part of the Somali coast-line.

Zanzibar has an area of 640 square miles with a population of 165,253 (1958 Census); Pemba (380 square miles) population, 133,858; total area, 1,020 square miles; total population, 299,111.

Production, etc.—The islands produce a large percentage of the world's supply of cloves and clove oil (cloves exported in 1958 were valued at £2,656,795 and clove oil at £68,484). They also exported £340,403 of coconut oil, £610,138 of copra, and £127,695 of coconuts in 1958. Other important products are chillies, oil cake, soap, tobacco and coir fibre. Rice and cassava are grown extensively for local consumption. The importance of Zanzibar as a port of transhipment and distribution has decreased, owing to the development of the mainland, to the opening up of the coast ports to direct steamship service with Europe, and to the transfer to Aden of the seat of trade with the adjacent mainland coast.

Education.—There are 60 Government primary schools for Arab and African children and 3 for Indians; the 10 grant-aided primary schools are mainly for Indian girls. Five secondary schools are open to pupils from all communities: they are the King George VI School, the Government Boys Technical School, the H.H. the Aga Khan Secondary School for boys and girls; the St. Joseph's Convent School for boys and girls and the Government Girls Secondary School. Students are sent for higher education, including degree courses, to Makerere College, Kampala, the Nairobi Royal Technical College, and institutions in the United Kingdom, the Sudan and India. There are government training colleges for men and women primary teachers in Zanzibar. The total enrolment in all Government and grant-aided primary and secondary and unassisted schools in November, 1958, was 18,473. The total expenditure from local revenue in 1958 was £397,489.

Communications.—There are 339 miles of road suitable for motor traffic in Zanzibar and 107 miles in Pemba. There are 5 post offices in the two islands and a Government telephone system. The town of Ψ Zanzibar, on the island of the same name, has a population of 45,284. It possesses a magnificent harbour, which presents great facilities for shipping and trade generally. Net tonnage of ocean-going steamers which entered the port in 1954 was 1,558,102. Zanzibar provides the best water supply on the East Coast of Africa, and it is much in demand for shipping supplies.

A civil aerodrome is situated 4 miles south-east of the town, linked with Tanganyika and Kenya by charter and daily scheduled services. There is also a civil aerodrome in Pemba linking the island with Zanzibar, Kenya and Tanganyika by regular services with the East African Airways Corporation.

GOVERNMENT

Zanzibar has been a British Protectorate since November, 1890. On July 1, 1913, the Protectorate was transferred from the Foreign to the Colonial Office.

The government is administered by a British Resident. His Highness the Sultan presides over a Privy Council, and the British Resident presides over the Executive Council, on which there are 4 ex officio, 3 official and 3 representative members, and the Legislative Council of 25 members (4 ex officio, 9 official and 12 representative members). In 1957 the first general election for 6 of the representative members was held in the Protectorate.

THE ARCTIC OCEAN

The Arctic Ocean consists of a deep sea over 2,000 fathoms, on the southern margin of which there is a broad continental shelf with numerous islands. Into this deeper sea there is only one broad channel, about 700 miles, between Greenland and Scandinavia. Behring Strait is only 49 miles wide and 27 fathoms deep. The southern boundary of the Arctic Ocean is the Wyville-Thomson and Faeroe-Icelandic submarine ridge, which separates the North Atlantic from the Norwegian and Greenland Seas. The Norwegian Deep lies between Norway and Jan Mayen and Iceland; it exceeds 1,500 fathoms. The Greenland Deep, of similar depth, lies between Spitsbergen and Greenland. These two depressions are separated by a somewhat deeply submerged ridge from the east of Jan Mayen to Bear Island, south of Spitsbergen. A shallow ridge from the north-west of Spitsbergen to Greenland separates the Greenland Sea from the deep North Polar Basin. This extends from the north of Spitsbergen and Franz Josef Land to the north of the New Siberia Islands and of the North American Arctic Archipelago.

Another more shallow depression is Baffin Bay, less than 1,000 fathoms. This is separated from the North Atlantic by a submarine ridge. Barent's Sea, between Spitsbergen, Norway and Novaya Zemlya, and the Kara Sea, between Novaya Zemlya and the Siberian coast, are respectively below 200 and 100 fathoms.

The total area of the Arctic Sea is about 5.5 million square miles, of which 2.3 million square miles are probably covered with floating ice.

IRELAND

See also Northern Ireland, pp. 687-690; Republic of Ireland, pp. 809-12.

Position and Extent.—Ireland lies in the Atlantic Ocean, to the West of Great Britain, and is separated from Scotland by the North Channel and from Wales by the Irish Sea and St. George's Channel. The land area of the island is 32,408 sq. miles and its geographical position between $51^{\circ} 26'$ and $55^{\circ} 21'$ N. latitude and from $5^{\circ} 25'$ to $10^{\circ} 30'$ W. longitude. The greatest length of the island, from N.E. to S.W. (Torr Head to Mizen Head), is 302 miles, and the greatest breadth, from E. to W. (Dundrum Bay to Annagh Head), is 174 miles. On the N. coast of Achill Island (Co. Mayo) are the highest cliffs in the British Islands, 2,000 feet sheer above the sea. Ireland is occupied for the greater part of its area by the Central Plain, with an elevation of 50 to 350 ft. above mean sea level, with isolated mountain ranges near the coastline. The principal mountains, with their highest points, are the Sperin Mountains (Sawel 2,240 ft.) of County Tyrone; the Mountains of Mourne (Slieve Donard 2,796 ft.) of County Down, and the Wicklow Mountains (Lugnaquilla 3,039 ft.); the Derryveagh Mountains (Errigal 2,466 ft.) of County Donegal; the Connemara Mountains (Twelve Pins 2,695 ft.) of County Galway; Macgillicuddy's Reeks (Carruntuohill 3,414 ft., the highest point in Ireland); and the Galtee Mountains (3,018 ft.) of County Tipperary, and the Knockmealdown (2,609 ft.) and Comeragh Mountains (2,470 ft.) of County Waterford. The principal river of Ireland (and the longest in the British Isles) is the Shannon (240 miles), rising in County Cavan and draining the central plain. The Shannon flows through a chain of loughs to the city of Limerick, and thence to an estuary on the western Atlantic seaboard. The Slaney flows into Wexford Harbour, the Liffey to Dublin Bay, the Boyne to Drogheda, the Lee to Cork Harbour, the Blackwater to Youghal Harbour, and the Sur, Barrow and Nore, to Waterford Harbour. As in Scotland, the principal hydrographic feature is the Loughs, of which Lough Neagh (150 sq. miles) in the north-east is the largest in Ireland and the British Isles, others being the Shannon Chain of Allen, Bodery, Forbes, Ree and Derg, and the Erne Chain of Gowna, Oughter, Lower Erne, and Erne; Melvin, Gill, Gara and Conn in the north-west; and Corrib and Mask (joined by a hidden channel) in the west. In County Kerry, to the east of Macgillicuddy's Reeks, are the famous Lakes of Killarney. The climate of Ireland is more equable than that of Great Britain, the extreme range of temperature readings being from 2° F. to 90° F. (compared with -17° F. to 100° F. over Great Britain). The average annual rainfall varies from 27 inches at Dublin to more than 100 inches in the mountains of Connemara. The rainfall is also more uniform from year to year than in Great Britain.

Primitive Man.—Although little is known concerning the earliest inhabitants of Ireland, there are many traces of neolithic man throughout the island; a grave containing a polished stone axehead assigned to 2,500 B.C. was found at Linkardstown, Co. Carlow, in 1944, and the use of bronze implements appears to have become known about the middle of the 17th century B.C. In the later Bronze Age a Celtic race of Goidels appear to have invaded the island, and in the early Iron Age Brythons from South Britain are believed to have effected settlements in the south-east, while Picts from North Britain established similar settlements in the north. Towards the close of the Roman occupation of Britain, the dominant tribe in the island was that of the Scotti, who afterwards established themselves in Scotland.

History.—According to Irish legends, the island of Ierne was settled by a Milesian race, who came from Scythia by way of Spain, and established the Kingdom of Tara, about 500 B.C. The supremacy of the Ardrí (high king) of Tara was acknowledged by eight lesser kingdoms (Munster, Connaught, Ailech, Oriel, Ulidia, Meath, Leinster and Ossory) ruled by descendants of the eight sons of Miled. The basalt columns on the coast of Antrim, eight miles from Portrush, known as the Giant's Causeway, are connected with the legendary history of Ireland as the remnants of a bridge built in the time of Finn M'Coul (Fingal) to connect Antrim with Scotland (Staffa).

Hibernia was visited by Roman merchants but never by Roman legions, and little is known of the history of the country until the invasions of Northmen (Norwegians and Danes) towards the close of the 8th century A.D. The Norwegians were distinguished as Findgaill (White Strangers) and the Danes as Dubgaill (Black Strangers), names which survive in "Fingall," "MacDougall" and "MacDowell," while the name of the island itself is held to be derived from the Scandinavian Ira-land (land of the Irish), the names of the Provinces being survivals of Norse dialect forms (Ulaidstír, Laiginstír, Mumans-tír and Kunnak-tír). The outstanding events in the encounters with the Northmen are the Battle of Tara (980), at which the Hy Neill king Maelsechlainn II. defeated the Scandinavians of Dublin and the Hebrides under their king Amlaib Cuarán; and the Battle of Clontarf (1014) by which the Scandinavian power was completely broken. After Clontarf the supreme power was disputed by the O'Brians of Munster, the O'Neills of Ulster, and the O'Connors of Connaught, with varying fortunes. In 1152 Dermot MacMurrough (Diarmait MacMurchada), the deposed king of Leinster, sought assistance in his struggle with Ruaidhri O'Connor (the high king of Ireland), and visited Henry II., the Norman king of England. Henry authorized him to obtain armed support in England for the recovery of his kingdom, and Dermot enlisted the services of Richard de Clare, the Norman Earl of Pembroke, afterwards known as Strongbow, who landed at Waterford (Aug. 23, 1170) with 200 knights and 1,000 other troops for the reconquest of Leinster, where he eventually settled, after marriage with Dermot's daughter. In 1172 (Oct. 18) Henry II. himself landed in Ireland. He received homage from the Irish kings and established his capital at Dublin. The invaders subsequently conquered most of the island and a feudal government was created. In the 14th and 15th centuries, the Irish recovered most of their lands, while many Anglo-Irish lords became virtually independent, royal authority being confined to the "Pale," a small district round Dublin. Though under Henry VII., Sir Edward Poyning's, as Lord Deputy had passed at the Parliament of Drogheda (1494) the act later known as Poyning's Law, subordinating the Irish Legislature to the Crown, the Earls of Kildare retained effective power until, in 1534, Henry VIII. began the reconquest of Ireland. Parliament in 1541 recognized him as King of Ireland and by 1603 English authority was supreme.

Christianity.—Christianity did not become general until the advent of St. Patrick. St. Patrick was born in Britain about 389, and was taken to Ireland as a slave about sixteen years later, escaping to Gaul at the age of 22. In 432 he was consecrated Bishop at Auxerre and landed in Wicklow to establish and organize the Christian religion throughout the island.

GOVERNMENT

The Constitution.—The Constitution of Ireland, approved by a plebiscite on July 1, 1937, came into operation on December 29, 1937.

The Constitution declares that Ireland is a sovereign independent democratic State and affirms the right of the Irish Nation to choose its own form of Government, to determine its relations with other nations, and to develop its life, political, economic and cultural, in accordance with its own genius and traditions. The national territory is declared to be the whole island of Ireland, its islands and the territorial seas. Pending the re-integration of the national territory, and without prejudice to the right of the Parliament and the Government established by the Constitution to exercise jurisdiction over the whole of the national territory, the laws enacted by that Parliament shall have the like area and extent of application as those of the Irish Free State, which did not include the six counties of Northern Ireland. The national flag is the tricolour of green, white and orange. The Irish language, being the national language, is the first official language. The English language is recognized as a second official language.

The President.—The President—Uachtarán na hÉireann—is elected by direct vote of the people for a period of seven years. A former or retiring President is eligible for a second term. The President summons and dissolves Dáil Éireann on the advice of the Taoiseach (Head of the Government). He signs and promulgates laws. The supreme command of the Defence Forces is vested in him, its exercise being regulated by law. He has the power of pardon. The President, in the exercise and performance of certain of his constitutional powers and functions, is aided and advised by a Council of State.

The Legislature.—The Parliament—Oireachtas—consists of the President and two Houses: a House of Representatives—Dáil Éireann—and a Senate—Seanad Éireann.

Dáil Éireann is composed of 147 members elected by adult suffrage on a basis of proportional representation.

Seanad Éireann is composed of 60 members, of whom 11 are nominated by the Taoiseach and 49 are elected; three by the National University of Ireland, three by the University of Dublin, and 43 from panels of candidates, established on a vocational basis.

The Executive.—The executive authority is exercised by the Government subject to the Constitution. The Government is responsible to Dáil Éireann, meets and acts as a collective authority, and is collectively responsible for the Departments of State administered by the Ministers.

The Taoiseach is appointed by the President on the nomination of Dáil Éireann. The other members of the Government are appointed by the President on the nomination of the Taoiseach with the previous approval of Dáil Éireann. The Taoiseach appoints a member of the Government to be the Tánaiste who acts for all purposes in the place of the Taoiseach in the event of the death, permanent incapacitation, or temporary absence of the Taoiseach. The Taoiseach, the Tánaiste and the Minister for Finance must be members of Dáil Éireann. The other members of the Government must be members of Dáil Éireann or Seanad Éireann, but not more than two may be members of Seanad Éireann.

CAPITAL

Dublin (Balle Átha Cliath) is a City and County Borough on the River Liffey at the head of Dublin Bay. In April, 1956, its population was 539,476. There are many notable public buildings in the City, among them the two Cathedrals of Christ Church and St. Patrick, the Bank of Ireland (formerly the House of Parliament) and Trinity College (the only constituent College of the University of Dublin). University College is a constituent college of the National University of Ireland. A large export trade of agricultural products passes through the city and there is a considerable brewing industry, while there is an increasing amount of light manufacturing.

Other cities and towns are Cork (pop. 80,011), Dún Laoghaire, formerly Kingstown (47,553), Limerick (50,886), Waterford (28,878), Galway (21,219), Dundalk (20,154), Drogheda (17,008), Sligo (12,947), Wexford (10,838), Bray (10,856), Kilkenny (10,607), Tralee (10,928), Clonmel (10,697) and Athlone (9,393).

THE PRESIDENT

Uachtarán na hÉireann (President of Éire), Eamon de Valéra, assumed office June 25, 1959.

Secretary to the President: Domhnall Ó Donnabháin (Daniel J. O'Donovan).

THE LEGISLATURE

The Legislature (Oireachtas) consists of the President and two Houses—a House of Representatives (Dáil Éireann) and a Senate (Seanad Éireann). Dáil Éireann is composed of 147 Members, elected on the system of Proportional Representation by means of the single transferable vote. All citizens who have reached the age of 21 years and are not disqualified by law have the right to vote. The same Dáil does not continue for a longer period than seven years, but a shorter period of five years has been fixed by existing legislation. The present (16th) Dáil was elected on March 5, 1957, and met on March 20, 1957.

THE JUDICIARY

The Judiciary consists of Courts of First Instance and a Court of Final Appeal called the Supreme Court—Cúir: Uachtarach. The Courts of First Instance include a High Court—Ard-Chúirt—invested with full original jurisdiction in and power to determine all matters and questions, whether of law or fact, civil or criminal, and also Courts of local and limited jurisdiction, with a right of appeal as determined by law. The High Court alone has original jurisdiction to entertain the question of the validity of any law having regard to the provisions of the Constitution. The Supreme Court has appellate jurisdiction from all decisions of the High Court, subject to exceptions and regulations prescribed by law. No law may, however, be enacted excepting the question of the validity of any law from the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

DEFENCE

Under the direction of the President, and subject to the provisions of the Defence Act, 1954, the military command of the Defence Forces is exercised by the Government through the Minister of Defence. To aid and counsel the Minister for Defence on all matters in relation to the business of the Department of Defence on which he may consult it, there is a Council of Defence consisting of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister, the Secretary of the Department of Defence, the Chief of Staff, the Adjutant-General and the Quarter-master-General. Establishments provide at present for a Permanent Defence Force of approximately 13,000 all ranks, including the Air Corps and the Naval Service. The Defence Estimates for the year ending March 31, 1960, provide for approximately 25,000 all ranks of the Reserve Defence Force. Recruitment is on a voluntary basis. Minimum term of enlistment for the Army is three years in the Permanent Defence Force with, in most cases, nine years in the Reserve Defence Force. Suitable men may complete twenty-one years service in the Permanent Defence Force. For the Naval Service, enlistment is for six years in the Permanent Defence Force and six years in the Reserve Defence Force. The Naval Service comprises three corvettes and auxiliary vessels. The Defence Estimates for the year ending March 31, 1960, provide for an expenditure of £6,723,900.

PHYSIOGRAPHY

The contiguous States of the Republic occupy nearly all that portion of the North American Continent, between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, in latitude 25°–49° North and longitude 67°–124° 30' West, its northern boundary being Canada and the southern boundary Mexico.

Its coast-line has an estimated length of about 3,561 miles on the Atlantic, 1,872 miles on the Pacific, 2,968 miles on the Gulf of Mexico, and 2,470 miles on the Great Lakes. The principal river is the mighty Mississippi-Missouri, traversing the whole country from north to south, and having a course of 1,700 miles to its mouth in the Gulf of Mexico, with many large affluents, the chief of which are the Yellowstone, Platte, Arkansas, Ohio, and Red Rivers. The rivers flowing into the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans are comparatively small; among the former may be noticed the Hudson, Delaware, Susquehanna, Potomac, and Savannah; of the latter, the Columbia, Sacramento, and Colorado. The Alabama and Colorado of Texas fall into the Gulf of Mexico, also the Rio Grande, a long river partly forming the boundary with Mexico. The areas of the water-basins have been estimated as follow:—Rivers flowing to the Pacific, 644,040 square miles; to the Atlantic, 488,877; and to the Gulf of Mexico, 1,683,325 square miles, of which 1,257,547 are drained by the Mississippi-Missouri. The chain of the Rocky Mountains separates the western portion of the country from the remainder, all communication being carried on over certain elevated passes, several of which are now traversed by railroads; west of these, bordering the Pacific coast, the Cascade Mountains and Sierra Nevada form the outer edge of a high tableland, consisting in part of stony and sandy desert and partly of grazing land and forested mountains, and including the Great Salt Lake, which extends to the Rocky Mountains. Eastward the country is a vast, gently undulating plain, with a general slope southwards towards the partly marshy flats of the Gulf of Mexico, extending to the Atlantic, interrupted only by the Appalachian Highlands, of inferior elevation, in the Eastern States. Nearly the whole of this plain, from the Rocky Mountains to some distance beyond the Mississippi, consists of immense prairies of luxuriant grass. In the Eastern States (which form the more settled and most thickly inhabited portion of the country) large forests of valuable timber, as beech, birch, maple, oak, pine, spruce, elm, ash, walnut; and in the south, live oak, water-oak, magnolia, palmetto, tulip-tree, cypress, etc., still exist, the remnants of the forests which formerly extended over all the Atlantic slope, but into which great inroads have been made by the advance of civilization. The Mississippi valley is eminently fertile. The mineral kingdom produces much ore of iron, copper, lead, zinc, and aluminium, the non-metallic minerals include immense quantities of coal, anthracite, petroleum, stone, cement, phosphate rock, and salt. Precious metals include gold and silver, mined chiefly in Colorado, California, and Alaska (gold), and Colorado, Montana, Utah, and Idaho (silver). The highest point is Mount Whitney at 14,495 feet above sea-level, and the lowest point of dry land is in Death Valley, 282 feet below sea-level; these two points are in California, only 86 miles apart. The mean elevation of the contiguous States is approximately 2,500 feet.

GOVERNMENT

The United States of America is a Federal Republic consisting of 50 States and 1 Federal District (of which 13 are Original States, 7 were admitted without previous organization as Territories, and 30 were admitted after such organization), and of 1 organized Territory. (Hawaii formally entered the Union as the 50th State on Aug. 21, 1959, from which date the flag of the United States has 13 stripes and 50 stars in 9 horizontal rows of six and five alternately.)

THE CONSTITUTION.—By the Constitution of Sept. 17, 1787 (to which ten amendments were added on Dec. 15, 1791, and eleventh to twenty-second Jan. 8, 1798, Sept. 25, 1804, Dec. 18, 1865, July 28, 1868, March 20, 1870, Feb. 25, 1913, May 31, 1913, Jan. 29, 1919, Aug. 26, 1920, Feb. 6, 1933, Dec. 5, 1933 and Feb. 27, 1951), the government of the United States is entrusted to three separate authorities—the Executive, the Legislative, and the Judicial.

THE EXECUTIVE

THE Executive power is vested in a President, who is elected every four years, and is eligible for re-election to one additional term. The mode of electing the President is as follows:—Each State appoints, in such manner as the Legislature thereof directs (they are now elected by popular vote on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of the year preceding the year in which the Presidential term expires), a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or anyone holding office under Government, shall be appointed an elector. The electors for each State meet in their respective States on the first Monday after the second Wednesday in December following, and there vote for a President by ballot. The ballots are then sent to Washington, and opened on the sixth day of January by the President of Senate in presence of Congress, and the candidate who has received a majority of the whole number of electoral votes cast is declared President for the ensuing term. If no one has a majority, then from the highest on the list (not exceeding three) the House of Representatives elects a President, the votes being taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote. There is also a Vice President, who, on the death of the President, becomes President for the remainder of the term. Under the XXth Amendment to the Constitution the terms of the President and Vice President end at noon on the 20th day of January of the years in which such terms would have ended if the Amendment had not been ratified, and the terms of their successors then begin. In case of the removal or death of both President and Vice President, a statute provides for the succession.

The President must be at least 35 years of age and a native citizen of the United States. He receives a taxable salary of $100,000 with a taxable expense allowance of $50,000 and a non-taxable travelling allowance of not exceeding $40,000. Under the XXIInd Amendment to the Constitution, the tenure of the Presidency is limited to two terms. Executive duties:—

(1) He is Commander-in-Chief of the Army and of the Navy (and of the Militias when they are in Federal service), and he commissions all officers therein.

(2) With the consent of the Senate, he appoints the Cabinet officers and all the chief (and many minor) officials.

(3) He exercises a general supervision over the whole Federal Administration and sees that the Federal Laws are duly carried out. Should disorder arise in any State which the authorities thereof are unable to suppress, the aid of the President may be invoked.

(4) He conducts the Foreign Policy of the Republic, and has power, "by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate, to make Treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur." The Declaration of War rests with Congress.

(5) He makes recommendations of a general nature to Congress, and when laws are passed by Congress he may return them to Congress with a veto. But if a measure so vetoed is again passed by both Houses of Congress by a two-thirds majority in each House, it becomes law, notwithstanding the objections of the President.

THE PRESIDENT

President of the United States (January 20, 1953, to January 20, 1961), DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER, born Oct. 14, 1890, sworn in as President (in succession to Harry S. Truman) Jan. 20, 1953, Republican.

Vice-President, Richard Milhous Nixon, of California, born Jan. 9, 1913, elected Nov. 4, 1952. Republican.

THE CABINET

Secretary of State, Christian A. Herter, of Boston (born Mar. 28, 1895), appointed April 18, 1959.

Secretary of the Treasury, Robert B. Anderson, of Texas (born June 4, 1910), appointed May 29, 1957.

Secretary of Defence, Neil H. McElroy, of Ohio (born Oct. 30, 1904), appointed Aug. 7, 1957.

Attorney-General, William P. Rogers, of Maryland (born June 23, 1913) appointed Jan. 1958.

Postmaster-General, Arthur E. Summerfield, of Michigan (born Mar. 17, 1899), appointed Jan. 21, 1953.

Secretary of the Interior, Fred. A. Seaton of Nebraska (born Dec. 11, 1909), appointed May 29, 1956.

Secretary of Agriculture, Ezra T. Benson, of Utah (born Aug. 4, 1899), appointed Jan. 21, 1953.

Secretary of Commerce, Frederick H. Mueller (born Nov. 22, 1893), appointed Aug. 6, 1959.

Secretary of Labour, James Paul Mitchell, of New Jersey (born Nov. 12, 1900), appointed Oct. 9, 1953.

Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, Dr. Arthur S. Fleming, of Ohio (born June, 12 1905), appointed

THE CONGRESS

The Legislative power is vested in two Houses, the Senate and the House of Representatives, the President having a veto power, which may be overcome by a two-thirds vote of each House. The Senate is composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof for the term of six years, and each Senator has one vote; and Representatives are chosen in each State, by popular vote, for two years. The number of Representatives for each State is allotted in proportion to its population—at present 1 for 307,164. The Senate consists of 98 members. The salary of a Senator is $22,500 per annum, with mileage at 20 cents per mile each session. The House of Representatives consists of 437 Representatives, and a resident commissioner from Puerto Rico. The salary of a Representative is $22,500 per annum with mileage as for Senators. By the XIXth Amendment, sex is no disqualification for the franchise. On July 1, 1950, there were 47,860,228 men and 49,556,137 women of voting age, excluding members of the armed forces overseas.

THE EIGHTY-SIXTH CONGRESS

Noon of Jan. 3, 1959, to Noon of Jan. 3, 1961.

President of the Senate, Richard M. Nixon, Calif. $30,000

Speaker of the House of Representatives, Sam Rayburn, Tex. $30,000

Secretary of the Senate, Felton M. Johnston, Miss.

Clerk of the House of Representatives, Ralph R. Roberts, Ind.

Members of the 86th Congress were elected on Nov. 4, 1958.

The 86th Congress is constituted as follows:

Senate.—Democrats, 64; Republicans, 34. Total, 98.

House of Representatives.—Democrats, 282; Republicans, 153. One vacancy. Total, 435.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

(National Library).

Capitol Hill, Washington, D.C.

The Library of Congress was established in 1800 and destroyed by fire in 1814. In 1815, Congress purchased Thomas Jefferson's library of some 6,000 volumes as the basis for a new collection, which was partially destroyed by fire in 1851. Since that date increased (1) by regular annual appropriations by Congress; (2) by deposits under the copyright law; (3) by gifts and exchanges. The collection is the largest in the Western Hemisphere and one of the largest in the world. Exclusive of unbound newspapers and parts of serials awaiting binding, its collections contained, on June 30, 1959, more than 38,123,000 items. These included more than 11,779,000 volumes and pamphlets; 163,000 bound newspaper volumes; 16,185,000 manuscripts; 2,469,000 maps and views; 43,000 microcards; 173,000 reels and strips of microfilm; 124,000 reels of motion pictures; 2,018,000 pieces of music; 107,000 phonograph records; 429,000 "talking books" for the blind; 2,981,000 photographic negatives, prints and slides; 583,000 fine prints and reproductions and 951,000 other items such as broadsides, photostats, posters, etc. The main building was first occupied in 1897. Considerable additions, including an annex completed in 1939, have brought the total cost to approximately $18,880,000 and the floor space to 1,563,189 square feet (nearly 36 acres), with more than 250 miles of shelving. During the fiscal year 1959, $19,095,656 was available for use by the Library. Of this sum $13,389,191 was appropriated directly by Congress; $4,332,665 was transferred from other Government agencies and $1,373,800 was derived from gifts. During the fiscal year 1959, the Library registered copyright claims for 241,735 works and received $979,942 as earned fees. The sale of 30,093.915 catalogue cards to approximately 10,000 subscribers produced $2,043,099. Receipts from these sales are transferred to the U.S. Treasury. As the national library, the Library of Congress serves other Government agencies, other libraries throughout the world, scholars, and the general public as well as the Congress. In addition to providing reference service on the materials in its collections and publishing catalogues and other guides, the Library administers a national programme to provide books for the blind, participates in international professional and cultural activities, and (through gift funds) sponsors music concerts, literary readings, and other cultural affairs.

THE JUDICATURE

The Federal Judiciary consists of three sets of Federal Courts: (1) The Supreme Court at Washington, D.C., consisting of a Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices, with original jurisdiction in cases affecting Ambassadors, &c., or where a State is a party to the suit, and with appellate jurisdiction from inferior Federal Courts and from the decisions of the highest Courts of the States. (2) The United States Courts of Appeals, dealing with appeals from District Courts, and consisting of the Justice of the Supreme Court for the Circuit and all the Circuit and District Judges within the circuit. (3) The 93 District Courts, served by 199 District Court Judges.

DEFENCE

Department of Defence.

Secretary of Defence (in the Cabinet), Neil H. McElroy (Oct. 9, 1957).

Secretary of the Army (not in the Cabinet), Wilbur M. Brucker.

Secretary of the Navy (not in the Cabinet), William B. Franke.

Secretary of the Air Force (not in the Cabinet), James H. Douglas.

The Defence Reorganization Act, making important changes in the organization of the United States armed forces, came into effect on Jan. 1, 1959. It provided for unified command of the three services and their central control by the Defence Department, which also became responsible for research and development of new weapons. The Secretary of each service, Army, Navy and Air Force, became responsible to the Secretary of Defence for the operation and efficiency of his department. Existing practice by which service chiefs and individual departments might approach Congress on their own initiative was, however, continued. The Secretary of Defence assumed powers under the Act to abolish, merge or transfer functions of the individual services, provision being made for proposals of this kind to be laid before Congress and the Senate for thirty days, with the possibility of a veto if objections were raised.

Unified Defence Commands

U.S. European Command, Paris.—Cdr., Gen. Lauris Norstad (concurrently NATO Supreme Allied Commander)

Caribbean, Panama Canal Zone.—Cdr., Lt.-Gen. Ridgely (U.S. Army).

Atlantic, Norfolk, Virginia.—Cdr., Adm. Jerauld Wright (U.S. Navy) (concurrently NATO Supreme Allied Commander, Atlantic).

Pacific, Pearl Harbour.—Cdr., Adm. Harry D. Felt (U.S. Navy).

E. Atlantic and Mediterranean, London.—Cdr., Adm. James L. Holloway (U.S. Navy).

Continental Air Defence Command, Colorado Springs.—Cdr., Gen. Earle E. Partridge (U.S.A.F.)

Strategic Air Command, Omaha.—Cdr., Gen. Thomas Power (U.S.A.F.).

Alaska Command, Elmendorf Air Base, Alaska.—Cdr., Gen. Frank A. Armstrong, jr. (U.S.A.F.)

Army.—The Army of U.S. had a strength of 8,291,336 on V.E. Day, reduced by June 30, 1950, to 591,700 (excluding Air Corps). The strength on April 30, 1959, was 873,008. Strategic Army Corps (STRAC).—It was announced in May, 1958, that a force of over 150,000 paratroopers and infantry ready to deal with "limited war" situations in any part of the world had been created. Organized in two airborne and two infantry divisions, it is trained and equipped for combat in jungle, arctic or any other conditions and is operationally ready at all times. A new standard rifle, the T-44, will be issued to troops in 1960. It is capable of automatic fire at a rate of about 700 rounds per minute or semi-automatic fire.

Navy.—The peak strength of the Navy (including Marine Corps) in the summer of 1945 was 3,855,497. The strength on June 30, 1950, was 454,800, and on April 30, 1959, it was 804,119.

In May, 1959, there were also 3 escort aircraft carriers, 1 small aircraft carrier and 487 patrol ships, mincraft, amphibians and auxiliaries.

A nuclear-powered submarine, the George Washington, designed to fire ballistic missiles either from the surface or submerged, was launched by President Eisenhower on July 9, 1959. With a displacement of 5,400 tons, length 380 feet, the new submarine cost about $100,000,000 and carries 16 vertical tubes of Polaris missiles (see below).

A further nuclear submarine, the Skipjack of 2,830 tons, capable of submersion to 400 feet and a speed of at least 20 knots was commissioned in April, 1959.

Aircraft Carriers.—4 of the Forrestal Class of aircraft carrier (60,000 tons) have now been commissioned—Forrestal (1955), Saratoga (1956), Ranger (1957) and Independence (1959). The last vessel of this class, Constellation, was under construction in 1959. Each has a crew of 3,000 to 4,000 men, can carry 100 jet aircraft and costs about $190,000,000. They are powered by conventional engines. A contract was placed in 1957 for an atomic-powered carrier with a displacement of 75–85,000 tons and a length of 1,088 feet. Guided Missile Carriers. A nuclear powered cruiser, Long Beach (14,000 tons), designed to carry Talos and Terrier guided missiles (see below) was launched on July 14, 1959. Powered by two nuclear reactors the new cruiser will have a speed of over 30 knots and almost unlimited cruising range. The cruisers Boston and Canberra (13,600 tons) have been converted to carry guided missiles and recommissioned. The Gyatt, a destroyer of 2,250 tons, has been converted to carry Terrier missiles and two conventional powered submarines Growler and Grayback to carry Regulus missiles. New atomic depth charges have been successfully tested and a rocket-assisted anti-submarine torpedo has been adopted for operational use.

Air.—The U.S. Air Force was formerly the Army Air Corps and directly under command of the War Department. In 1947 an independent Department of the Air Force was established under a Secretary of the Air Force. The Navy and Marine Corps retained separate air organizations. Strength of the Air Force (April, 30, 1959), 841,889.

On June 27, 1958, a nation-wide radar screen against possible air attack came into effect on a 24-hour basis; known as SAGE (Semi-automatic ground environment) it includes radar equipment in towers built off the coast. Information gathered is collated and interpreted electronically. It has been stated that, by the ultra-long-range radar system, instant warning can be given of intercontinental ballistic missiles at a range of 3,000 miles.

Guided Missiles

Details of test firings of the more important guided missiles Atlas, Titan, Snark and Thor (U.S.A.F.), Jupiter (U.S. Army) and Polaris (U.S. Navy) were given on July 1, 1959, by the U.S. Defence Department.

The following table lists the various types of missile now in use or under development. Missiles shown in italic type are under development. Plans for the construction of four Bomarc missile bases sites were announced in 1957 (planned eventual number of sites, 30) and for a Snark missile base at Presque Isle, N. Maine. Six sites of ICBM had been chosen by October, 1958, and two Titan launching sites were under construction in 1959. The principal missile range extends 6,000 miles from Cape Canaveral, Florida, to Ascension Island and construction of a new National Pacific Missile Range to be operated by the Navy was planned to commence in 1959.

Air to Surface Missiles.—Two types are believed to be under development, the Bull Pup (range, 3 miles; speed, 1,200 m.p.h.) and a new air to ground missile the Hound Dog, with a range of several hundred miles.

CAPITAL OF THE U.S.

In 1790 Congress ratified the cession of 200 sq. miles by the States of Maryland and Virginia as a site for a Federal City to be the national capital of the United States. In 1791 it was decided to name the capital Washington and in 1793 the foundation-stone of the Capitol building was laid. In 1800 the seat of government was removed to Washington, which was chartered as a city in 1802. In 1846 the Virginia portion was retroceded and the present area of the District of Columbia (with which the City of Washington is considered co-extensive) is 69.245 square miles, with a population at the Census of 1950 of 802,178.

The District of Columbia is ruled directly by the President and Congress through a Board of Commissioners appointed by the President.

The City of Washington, the Capital of the United States, is considered co-extensive with the District of Columbia. It is situated on the west central edge of Maryland, opposite the State of Virginia, on the left bank of the Potomac at its confluence with the Anacostia, 107 miles from Chesapeake Bay and 186 from the Atlantic Ocean.

NATIONAL COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS

Interior Dept. Building, Washington, D.C.

The Commission of Fine Arts was created by Congress May 17, 1910, to advise generally upon the location, selection, and erection of statues, fountains, and monuments in the District of Columbia, and also to advise generally upon questions of art when required to do so by the President or by any committee of either House of Congress. Under this latter provision its functions have been enlarged by Executive Order to cover all works of Art with which the Federal Government is concerned, including designs of public buildings and public parks, within the D.C. An expenditure not exceeding $35,000 in any one year is authorized by Congress for travelling and other expenses. The members serve without remuneration.

Chairman, David E. Finley.

Members, Felix W. de Weldon; Wallace K. Harrison; Emily L. Muir; Douglas W. Orr; William G. Perry; Michael Rapuano.

Secretary and Administrative Officer, L. R. Wilson.

FINANCE

Estimated revenue and expenditure for the fiscal year 1959 showed a deficit of $12,871,000,000, compared with the actual deficit of $2,819,000,000 in 1958.

PUBLIC DEBT

On June 30, 1958, the Federal Public Debt of the United States stood at $276,343,000,000; the level at the end of the fiscal year 1957 was $270,527,000.

COST OF LIVING IN U.S.A.

The Consumer Price Index (for city wage-earner and clerical worker families in 46 cities representative of all cities in the United States) showed a monthly average during the calendar year 1958 of 123.5 (the basic figure of 100 being the 1947-49 average). The average of consumer prices for the first four months of 1959 was: January, 123.8, February, 123.7, March, 123.7 and April, 123.9.

According to figures prepared by the Bureau of Labour Statistics, the index of consumer prices (all items) rose from 122.3 to 123.7 during the calendar year 1958, displaying a persistent upward movement. Most groups increased. Transportation rose from 138.7 to 144.3, medical care from 121.7 to 127.6, and food from 118.2 to 128.7. Personal care rose from 127.8 to 129.0, apparel from 106.9 to 107.5, rent from 136.8 to 138.7, and reading and recreation from 116.6 to 116.9. During the first four months of 1959, the consumer price index for food fell from 119.0 to 117.6, but all other major groups increased: reading and recreation from 117.0 to 117.7, medical care from 124.0 to 129.6, personal care from 129.4 to 130.0, rent from 138.8 to 139.3 and transportation from 144.1 to 145.3.

The wholesale price index showed a monthly average during 1957 of 117.6 (the average for the years 1947-49=100). The monthly average rose to 119.2 in 1958 and rose further to 119.8 in May, 1959. Wholesale prices for farm products rose from 90.9 in 1957, to 94.9 in 1958, but declined to 90.8 in May, 1959. Industrial prices rose from 125.6 in 1957 to 126.0 in 1958, and further to 128.3 in May, 1959.

PERSONAL INCOMES IN U.S.A.

Personal incomes in the United States rose from $347.9 billion in 1957 to $354.4 billion in 1958. Decreases registered in this period in various types of income: labour income fell by $0.9 billion, business and professional income by $0.4 billion, dividends by $0.1 billion. Personal interest income rose by $0.6 billion, transfer payments by $4.4 billion, and farm proprietors' income by $2.6 billion. Preliminary estimates for May, 1959 (seasonally adjusted annual rate) showed personal income at $376.2 billion, an increase of $21.8 billion over the 1958 level. Labour income rose from $246.2 billion in 1958 to $265.4 billion in May, 1959, an increase of $19.2 billion. Transfer payments rose from $25.9 billion in 1958 to $26.3 billion in May, 1959, business and professional incomes rose from $31.0 billion in 1958 to $33.5 billion in May, 1959, and personal interest income rose from $19.4 billion in 1958 to $20.5 billion in May, 1959. All other types of personal income also rose from 1958 to May, 1959, except farm proprietors' income, which fell from $14.2 billion to $13.2 billion.

PRODUCTION

AGRICULTURE AND LIVE STOCK

Agriculture.—The total land surface, excluding island possessions and Alaska, is 1,903,824,640 acres of which about 61 per cent. is in farms. The total number of farms in 1954 (1954 Census of Agriculture) was 4,782,416. The cash income from crops in 1952 was $14,380,000,000; in 1953, $14,193,000,000; in 1954, $13,669,000,000; in 1955, $13,676,000,000; in 1956, $14,235,000,000; in 1957, $12,381,000,000; and in 1958, $14,360,000,000. Cash income from livestock and livestock products in 1952, $18,252,000,000; 1953, $16,933,000,000; in 1954, $16,284,000,000; in 1955, $15,880,000,000; in 1956, $16,304,000,000; in 1957, $17,376,000,000 and in 1958, $18,846,000,000.

Good weather in 1958 raised crop production to a new high level—11 per cent. larger than the previous record established in 1957, 1956, and 1948. The all-crop production index reached 118 (1947-1949=100), compared with 106 reached by the 3 former best production years. High yields per acre were mainly responsible for increased production, as harvested acreage was the third lowest in over 20 years and planted acreage was the smallest in 40 years. New yield per acre records were set by all of the major crops and the yield per acre index reached 143, up almost 13 per cent. from the former record of 127 attained in 1957. The harvested acreage of 1959 crops totalled 321,110,000 acres, up slightly from 1957.

The index of livestock and poultry numbers on farms and ranches on January 1, 1959, increased 5 per cent from a year earlier. Meat animal numbers were up 5 per cent., poultry was up 4 per cent., while cattle kept for milk were down 2 per cent. and horses and mules down 8 per cent.

MINERALS

The value of mineral production in continental United States in 1958 totalled an estimated $16.4 billion. The comparable value for 1957 was $18.3 billion and for 1956 $17.5 billion.

Nearly three-quarters of the mineral production of the United States (in value) consists of fuels. In 1958 U.S. production of crude petroleum amounted to 2,447 million barrels, 467,000 barrels less than in 1957. The decline reflected lower export demands and a reduction in stocks of crude oil.

Bituminous coal and lignite produced in 1958 totalled 397,000,000 tons, 19.4 per cent. less than in 1957. The average value of soft coal at the mine was estimated at $5 a ton (1957, $5.08).

MANUFACTURES

The leading five States according to value added by manufacture (unadjusted) at the 1957 Annual Survey were: New York ($16,092,000,000), Pennsylvania ($12,921,000,000), Ohio ($12,439,000,000), Illinois ($12,154,000,000) and California ($629,000,000).

The average number of employees in 1957 for the United States as a whole was 17,105,000, salaries and wages totalling $52,582,000,000. The value added by manufacture (value of output less cost of materials and supplies) was $144,518,000,000.

LABOUR IN THE UNITED STATES

Organized Labour.—On December 5, 1955, the American Federation of Labour (AFL), founded in 1881, and the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO), formally established in 1938, merged into an organization called the American Federation of Labour and Congress of Industrial Organizations. The combined membership is now 16,900,000 (including 987,000 members in Canada). There are also 1,580,000 members of unions not affiliated to the AFL-CIO.

Approximately one-third of the non-agricultural labour force of the United States is estimated to be organized.

Work Stoppages.—There were 3,694 stoppages recorded in 1958, involving 2,060,000 workers. There were 23,900,000 man-days of idleness, representing 0.22 per cent. of estimated working time of all workers.

Employment and Unemployment.—The civilian labour force (working population) was 68,639,000 in April, 1959. This includes self-employed, wage and salary-earners, employed and unemployed. Unemployment was estimated at 3,627,000 (5.3 per cent.). In addition there were 2,017,000 temporarily stopped, and 11,846,000 working fewer than 35 hours a week.

Wages.—In Feb., 1959, gross average weekly earnings by industry ranged from $137.58 per week in electrical work to $44.37 in the manufacture of workshirts (37.6 hours and $1.18 average hourly earnings). The average for all manufacturing was $88.00, more than a three-fold increase since 1939 but in terms of 1947-49 purchasing power, the increase was 1½ times.

A minimum wage of $1 an hour is set by federal law for employees engaged in interstate commerce or in the production of goods for interstate commerce, or in activities directly essential to such production. The act requires time and a half for all hours over 40 a week. While national averages by industry are generally above the minimum, rates for individuals in some occupations are close to the minimum.

In addition to cash wages, most workers receive some type of "fringe" benefits—the most common forms being paid vacations, and public holidays, various types of insurance and health funds financed by the employer or by employer and employees jointly.

RECLAMATION

Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, Interior Building, 18th and 19th Streets (between C and E streets), N.W., Washington, D.C. Commissioner, Floyd E. Dominy.

The Bureau of Reclamation constructs and operates irrigation, power and other multiple-purpose projects in the area west of the 97th meridian and is the Federal agency with principal responsibility for water conservation in this region. Eight million acres of lands in the arid and semi-arid west can be irrigated by works constructed by the Bureau. In June, 1959, the Bureau had in operation, under construction or authorized, 129 irrigation and multiple-purpose projects. Among them is the Missouri River Basin project, with 237 units, authorized by the Flood Control Acts of 1944 and 1946. In 1956 construction started on the Colorado River Storage Project which will permit economic expansion in five Western States—Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, and New Mexico—in an area of rich resources now virtually untapped. The total harvest from all reclamation projects in 1958 was valued at $987,441,504, increasing the cumulative value of all reclamation harvests since 1902 to $14,265,102,495.

Grand Coulee Dam, on the Columbia River in the State of Washington, the largest concrete structure in the world by volume (10,585,000 cubic yards), and with the greatest hydro-electric power-plant capacity in the U.S., began operating in March, 1941; its installed capacity is 1,974,000 kW. The dam will provide storage for the ultimate irrigation of 1,029,000 acres in the Columbia Basin project.

Hoover Dam (Arizona and Nevada), on the Colorado River, is the highest dam in the United States (726 ft.), and has an operating power plant with a capacity of 1,249,800 kW., and an ultimate capacity of 1,344,800 kW.

Shasta Dam (602 ft. high), on the Sacramento River in California, is the second highest in the United States. It was completed in 1944, and the power plant has a rated capacity of 379,000 kW.

Hungry Horse Dam, completed in 1952, on the Flathead River in Montana, is 565 ft. high, the third highest in the United States. It has a power capacity of 285,000 kW.

Glen Canyon Dam, just south of the Utah-Arizona line on the Colorado River, was started in October, 1956. When completed in 1965 its power plant will have a capacity of 900,000 kW.

POST, TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES

On June 30, 1958, there were 36,308 post offices and postal branches and several thousand stations in the U.S., handling 60,129,911,000 "pieces" of mail matter. The postal revenue was $2,564,319,185, and the expenditure $3,440,810,346 for the fiscal year of 1958. The telegraphs and telephones are operated by private companies.

On June 30, 1958, the postal savings deposits amounted to $1,212,671,942, compared with $1,462,268,304 on June 30, 1957.

On May 27, 1958, the President signed a measure, enacted by Congress, which granted a general increase in postage rates. This included an increase from 3 cents to 4 cents an ounce on ordinary first class mail, and from 6 cents to 7 cents an ounce on air mail letters. First class letters and air mail comprise approximately 75 per cent. of all mail in the U.S.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

North Capitol and H. Streets, Washington, D.C.

The Office was established by Congress in 1860 and has been in continuous operation from that time. It carries out all the printing and binding ordered by Congress and the departments, independent establishments and agencies of the Federal Government, and provides them with stationery. It also distributes Government publications as required by law, maintains the necessary catalogues and a library of these publications, and prints for sale to the public such documents as are not confidential.

ROADS

In 1957 there were 3,453,118 miles of roads and streets in the United States, of which 3,063,923 miles were in rural areas and 389,195 miles were in urban areas. Surfaced roads and streets account for 2,371,426 miles of the total; 1,081,692 miles are unimproved and graded and drained. State primary roads, including extensions in urban areas, total 429,082 miles (423,648 surfaced). Other roads under State control total 252,560 miles (211,502 surfaced); 2,672,956 miles are under local control (1,713,717 surfaced); and 98,520 miles (22,559 surfaced) are under Federal control.

An estimated total of $9,414,000,000 was spent in 1958 for roads and streets in the United States. Of this total $6,259,000,000 was spent for State highways, $1,641,000,000 was spent for county and local rural roads, $1,338,000,000 was spent for city streets, and $176,000,000 was spent on roads in Federal areas. Capital outlay accounted for 65.9 per cent. of the total expenditures; 23.6 per cent. was spent for maintenance; 4.1 per cent for administration; 2.6 per cent. for highway police and safety; and 3.8 per cent. for interest on highway bonds.

Motor Vehicles and Taxation.—The number of motor vehicles registered in 1958 in the United States was 68,299,408, an increase of 1.7 per cent. over the 1957 total of 67,131,071. In 1941 the registrations in the U.S.A. were 34,894,134. The State Governments received $1,468,554,000 in 1941 and $4,666,386,000 in 1958, respectively, from motor-fuel, motor-vehicle and motor-carrier taxes. In 1958 the Federal Government received $3,332,093,000 from excise taxes on motor vehicles and parts, tyres and tubes, gasoline, diesel and special fuels and lubricating oil.

Accidents.—In 1958 there were 37,000 deaths caused by motor vehicle accidents. The death rate per 100,000,000 miles of travel was 5.6 in 1958 compared with 6.0 in 1957.

SHIPPING

The active ocean-going Merchant Marine of the U.S. on June 1, 1959, consisted of 947 vessels of 1,000 gross tons and over, of which 916 were privately owned and 31 were government-owned ships under charter or general agency agreement with private companies. There were 2,065 government-owned vessels in the reserve fleets. Of the active vessels, 639 were dry cargo ships, 37 were combination passenger and cargo and 271 were tankers.

AIR TRANSPORT

United States domestic and international scheduled airlines in 1958 were estimated to have carried 49,075,000 passengers over 31,481,900,000 passenger miles. The combined express and freight flown by the scheduled airliners during 1958 totalled 559,428,000 ton-miles. In addition, the airlines flew 177,430,000 tons-miles of mail.

Seven principal classes of commercial air carriers can be distinguished in the United States, (a) The Domestic Trunk Lines (12); (b) Local Service Lines, operating the low-density traffic routes between the smaller traffic centres and between small and large centres (13); (c) The International and Overseas Group, including all U.S. flag air carriers authorized to operate between the U.S.A. and foreign countries, between foreign countries and into Mexico and the Caribbean (18); (d) Territorial Air Carriers, operating in Hawaii (2) and in Alaska (15); other classes are (e) Certificated All Cargo Lines (6); (f) Helicopter Airmail Operators (3); and (g) Non-Certificated Air Carriers, including supplemental and irregular transport carriers (43), air freight forwarders (71), air taxi operators and Alaskan pilot-owners and air carriers.

703 stations of the United States are served by domestic trunk and local service airlines. In 1958, 142,869 persons were employed by the domestic and international airlines.

The Federal Aviation Act, 1958, set up the Federal Aviation Agency to provide for the safe and efficient use of the airspace by both civil and military operations, and to provide for the regulation and promotion of civil aviation in such manner as to foster its development and safety. The new Agency incorporates the Civil Aeronautics Administration, the Airways Modernization Board and the safety-rules authority of the Civil Aeronautics Board. The Administrator has authority to regulate and operate air navigation facilities; to prescribe air traffic rules; and to conduct related research and development.

Administrator, E. R. Quesada.

State School Systems

Almost every State in the Union has a compulsory school attendance law. In general, children are obliged to attend school from 7 to 16 years of age, and those from 14 to 16 must attend school or be lawfully employed. In the States there are, connected with the local administrative units, officers charged with enforcing the compulsory attendance law, known in the majority of States as the truant or attendance officers.

In 1956-57 the total number of children in the United States of 5 to 17 years of age was 38,683,000, of whom 32,334,000 were enrolled in public elementary and secondary schools. The average daily attendance in the public schools was 28,871,000, the average length of school term was estimated at 178.0 days, and the average number of days attended by each pupil enrolled at 159. In 1956-57, 1,203,000 teachers were employed. The average annual salary of all teachers was $4,200.

The total revenue receipts for school purposes, excluding balances on hand, was about $10,157,000,000. Of this amount, about $378,000,000 was received from Federal sources, $4,042,000,000 from State sources and $737,000,000 from county and local sources. Current expenditure was $9,214,576,000. $2,648,877,000 was expended for sites, buildings, furniture and equipment and $249,602,000 for interest.

Institutions of Higher Education

In the autumn of 1958 enrolment in institutions of higher education numbered 3,258,556.

Institutions of higher education include universities, colleges, professional schools, teachers' colleges and normal schools, and junior colleges. The 1958 survey of enrolments covered 1,903 institutions classified as follows: 1,404 universities, colleges and professional schools enrolling 2,872,045 students; and 499 junior colleges enrolling 386,511 students. There are 101 institutions of higher education attended predominantly by Negroes, enrolling 84,822 students included in the foregoing figures.

During the school year 1957-58, 365,748 bachelor's degrees were conferred, 242,948 to men and 122,800 to women; 65,614 masters' degrees, 44,252 to men and 21,362 to women; and 8,942 doctor's degrees, 7,978 to men and 964 to women. Education, Business and Commerce, and Engineering, were, in that order, the fields in which most students received baccalaureate degrees. There were 82,892 bachelor's degrees in Education, 51,254 in Business and Commerce, and 35,332 in Engineering. The three leading fields of study for the master's degree were Education (30,972), Engineering (5,788) and Business and Commerce (4,042). The most popular fields of study on the doctorate level were Education (1,638), Chemistry (939) and Engineering (647).

Particulars of some of the Universities are: Harvard (13,569 students, including 1,996 women in 1958), founded at Cambridge, Mass., on Oct. 28, 1636, and named after John Harvard of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, England, who bequeathed to it his library and a sum of money in 1638; Yale (7,743 students, including 605 women, in 1958), founded at New Haven, Connecticut, in 1701; Bowdoin, Brunswick, Me. (founded 1794) (811 men); Brown, Providence, R.I. (founded 1764; 3,933 students, including 1,091 women, in 1958); Columbia, New York, N.Y. (founded 1754; 25,865 students, including 9,936 women, in 1958); Cornell (founded at Ithaca, N.Y., 1865; 11,184 students, including 2,696 women, in 1958); Dartmouth, Hanover, N.H. (founded 1769; 3,052 men in 1958); Georgetown, Washington, D.C. (founded 1789; 5,860 students, including 753 women, in 1958); North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N.C. (founded in 1789; 7,523 students, including 1,534 women, in 1958); Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. (founded 1740; 17,629 students, including 4,554 women, in 1958); Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa. (founded 1787; 15,583 students, including 4,204 women, in 1958); Princeton, Princeton, N.J. (founded 1746; 3,758 men); Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn. (founded 1794; 15,560 students, including 5,186 women, in 1958); William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va. (founded 1693; 10,338 students, including 4,305 women, in 1958); New York University, founded in 1831 at New York, had 32,990 students, including 7,928 women, in 1958.

Private Schools and Colleges

In 1956-57 it was estimated that there were about 4,267,000 pupils in private kindergarten and elementary schools, 866,000 pupils in private high schools and academies, an estimated 50,000 pupils in elementary and secondary departments of private universities and colleges, and 1,395,000 students in privately controlled institutions of higher education. In addition there were some 10,000 pupils enrolled in privately controlled elementary and secondary schools for exceptional children.

WEIGHTS, MEASURES AND CURRENCY

The Weights and Measures in the United States in common use are of British origin and in the case of weights and linear units correspond in large part with those now employed in Great Britain. The short ton of 2,000 pounds (20 hundred weight of 100 pounds each) is generally used instead of the long ton of 2,240 pounds. The old "Winchester" bushel and the wine gallon and their subdivisions are used instead of the British Imperial units of capacity; 1 U.S. bushel = 0.6809 British bushel, and 1 U.S. gallon = 0.83268 British gallon. The U.S. liquid quart is divided into 32 fluid ounces. The Metric System of Weights and Measures is permissive, but is not extensively used except in scientific and pharmaceutical work. The unit of currency is the dollar of 100 cents. The rate of exchange with sterling will be found on p. 84.

INDIAN POPULATION

On Jan. 1, 1956, the enumerated and estimated Indian population of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, was 483,662. There are many persons of Indian blood who are not enrolled with any recognized tribe, have no rights in tribal property and receive no services from the Government. The States with the largest resident Indian population are: Arizona, 77,300; Oklahoma, 56,300; New Mexico, 53,100; South Dakota, 25,000; Montana, 15,850.

STATE AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT

State Government

Each State has a constitution drafted to suit its own problems. States vary greatly in size, population and character but they are in most respects similar in the form of government organization. Like the National Government, State governments have three branches, legislative, executive and judicial.

State Legislatures.—With one exception, State legislatures consist of two Houses, a Senate and a House of Representatives; Nebraska has a single legislative body. The basis of representation in both Senate and House is the county, counties being combined or divided into districts which return one Senator and one or more Representatives. With a few variations, Senators serve for four and Representatives for two years. Sixteen states, including Hawaii, now meet in annual sessions. In addition, the Legislative Assembly of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico also meets annually. Many states whose regular sessions are biennial have special sessions in between.

Most of the business of the State legislature is carried on by committees. A bill, introduced either in the Senate or the House of Representatives, is first considered by a committee of the same house. Public hearings are usually held by committees at which representations may be made by opponents and supporters of the measure. If the committee approves the bill it makes a report to the house, when the bill may be further debated before a vote is taken. When passed by one house it is sent to the other where treatment is much the same. A bill which has been changed by the second house is sent to a "conference committee" of both houses for adjustment and if this is successful the bill is voted on favourably by both houses and sent to the governor for signature when it becomes law. Failing a report by the committee, a bill is not considered by the legislature unless a majority of the house votes for consideration without a committee report. In every State except North Carolina the governor may veto a bill and, ordinarily, prevent it from becoming law. The legislators have a right to vote again on a bill to decide whether it shall become law without the governor's approval; in some cases a two-thirds majority is required.

State Executives.—The chief executive of the State is the governor, who is elected by popular vote for a four year, or, in some States, a two year term. His powers are outlined in the State constitution. The governor may advise the legislature on new laws which he considers necessary and may call special sessions of the legislature to consider such laws. He appoints members of many boards and commissions, subject in some cases to Senate approval. He is head of the National Guard of his State and may use it to keep order if need arises. The governor may pardon persons convicted of crimes by the State courts or reduce sentences. In most states, the Governor and a Lieutenant Governor are elected at the same time. In two states, Alaska and New York, the Governor and Lieutenant Governor are elected as a political unit. Ten states do not have Lieutenant Governors. The regular duty of the Lieutenant Governor is to preside over the Senate and he succeeds if the governor dies or is removed from office.

Other important officers of the executive are the Secretary of State, whose duties concern the official records of the State, publication of the State laws and elections; the attorney-general, chief law officer of the State; the State auditor or comptroller and the State treasurer. There are also many departments and commissions such as labour boards, boards of health, banking commissions and highway commissions. In some States the governor has a considerable control over the work of the other State officials and in others little or none. A civil service system, intended to put much of the work of government offices into the hands of qualified workers not subject to political control and change, has been adopted by some States.

State Courts.—The simplest form of State court is usually presided over by a justice of the peace and hears minor civil and criminal cases. In large cities this work is done by police courts or special municipal courts. More important cases are dealt with in district courts, superior courts, circuit courts or common pleas courts, all dealing usually with both civil and criminal matters. Supreme courts of States deal largely with appeals and references from lower courts. Some States have a large number of special courts such as probate, children's, domestic relations and small debts courts. Judges, usually elected (but in some States appointed by the Governor or by the State legislature) preside over all trials. Many of the court practices in the United States have come from the English courts.

Local Government

Cities.—There is a number of different forms of government organization. Usually there is an elected central council with a mayor or manager to act as head of the organization. The three main forms of city government are (1) The mayor-council plan. The oldest type of city government, this compares with National and State organizations. The mayor is elected and usually appoints the heads of departments and many other officers, sometimes subject to the council's confirmation. He may sign or veto city ordinances and in general is responsible for putting them into effect. The mayor may also be required to produce a budget. The council passes the city laws which must not violate the city charter or conflict with State or National laws or constitutions. (2) The commission form of government. Three or more commissioners are elected from the city as a whole, rather than from districts or wards, and are given both law-making and law-enforcing powers. One of the commissioners is chairman and is usually called the mayor although his powers may be no greater than those of the other commissioners. Each commissioner supervises the work of one or more of the departments and is responsible for them. (3) The City-Manager plan. A small elected council makes city ordinances and decides general policy. It appoints a professional administrator as city-manager. The city manager appoints the heads of departments and some of the other officers; he advises the council on the needs of the city, suggests plans for finance and city improvements and enforces city ordinances. In most cases he holds office as long as the council is satisfied with his work.

County and other Local Governments.—The county, a subdivision of the State usually containing two or more townships and a number of villages, is administered by a board of commissioners or supervisors elected by the voters of the entire county. In recent years a number of counties have appointed County Managers to be responsible to a small board for the county government as a whole. In many townships, officials such as justices of the peace, constables and road supervisors are elected. The voters of some New England townships meet once a year and make their own laws on purely local matters, fix rates, decide how the money is to be spent and elect officials. Village or town government is usually in the hands of a council of elected members and some villages elect a president or mayor and employ local officials.

TERRITORIES AND PRINCIPAL ISLAND POSSESSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES

The territories and the principal islands and island groups under the sovereignty of the United States of America comprise: Palmyra Island; Kingman Reef (about 1 sq. mile); Johnston (or Cornwallis) Island and Sand Island (about 1 sq. mile in all); Canton and Enderbury Islands (jointly administered with Great Britain); Midway Islands; Wake Island; Guam; Howland, Baker and Jarvis Islands (about 3 sq. miles in all); American Samoa (including the island of Tutuila, the Manua Islands, and all other islands of the Samoan group east of longitude 171° west of Greenwich together with Swains Island); the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico; the Virgin Islands of the United States, and Navassa Island (2 sq. miles).

The Canal Zone is under the jurisdiction of the United States.

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands is under the jurisdiction of the United States pursuant to a trusteeship agreement between the U.S. Government and the Security Council of the United Nations. It consists of the Mariana (except Guam), Caroline and Marshall Islands, with a land area of 687 square miles and a population of 70,594 in 1958. Nine individual languages are spoken in the Territory. Copra is the only export of importance.

There are certain small guano islands, rocks, or keys which, in pursuance of action taken under the Act of Congress, August 18, 1856, subsequently embodied in Sections 5570-5578 of the Revised Statutes, are considered as appertaining to the United States. Responsibility for territorial affairs generally is centred in the Office of Territories, Dept. of the Interior, Washington, D.C.

CANTON AND ENDERBURY

Under the Anglo-American Pact of Aug. 10, 1938, Canton and Enderbury (of the Phoenix Island Group in the Central Pacific) were declared to be for the common use of Gt. Britain and U.S.A. for aviation and communications. The islands are about midway between Hawaii and Australia.

On April 6, 1939, the U.S. and Great Britain agreed to set up a joint regime for Canton and Enderbury Islands. Provision for the joint control of these islands was made by exchange of notes between the two Governments on April 6, 1939.

GUAM

Guam, the largest of the Ladrone or Mariana Islands in the North Pacific Ocean, lies in 13° 25' N. lat. and 144° 39' E. long., at a distance of about 1,506 miles east of Manila. The area of the island is estimated at 217 square miles, with a population of 68,900 (1955); Guamanian population in 1958 was estimated at 38,000. The Guamanians are of Chamorro stock mingled with Filipino and Spanish blood. The Chamorro language belongs to the Malayo-Polynesian family, but has had considerable admixture of Spanish. English is the language used throughout the island, although Chamorro is also used in Guamanian homes.

Guam was occupied by Japanese in Dec., 1941, but was recaptured and occupied throughout by U.S. forces before the end of August, 1944. Under the Organic Act of Guam of August 1, 1950 (Public Law 630 of the 81st Congress), Guam has statutory powers of self-government, and Guamanians are United States citizens. A governor is appointed for a four-year term. A 21-member unicameral legislature is elected biennially. There is also a District Court of Guam, with original jurisdiction in cases under federal law.

Governor, Richard Barrett Lowe.

Secretary, Marcellus Boss.

WAKE AND MIDWAY ISLANDS

Wake Island, annexed in 1898, has an area of about 1 sq. mile and lies in the N. Pacific about 2,300 miles from Hawaii on the direct route to Hong Kong. Wake Island was occupied by Japanese Dec. 27, 1941; it was re-occupied by U.S. on Sept. 15, 1945.

Midway Islands, with a total area of 22 sq. miles and a population (1940) of 437, lie in the N. Pacific about 2,300 miles from Hawaii. There is no indigenous population. The group is under the jurisdiction of the U.S. Navy.

PUERTO RICO

Puerto Rico (Rich Port) is an island of the Greater Antilles group in the West Indies, and lies between $17^{\circ} 50' - 18^{\circ} 30'$ N. lat. and $65^{\circ} 30' - 67^{\circ} 15'$ W. long., with a total area of 3,435 square miles and a population of 2,264,000 at the census of 1955. The majority of the inhabitants are of Spanish descent and Spanish and English are the official languages. The island is about 100 miles from west to east, and 40 miles from north to south at the western end, narrowing towards the eastern extremity. The capital is 1,399 miles distant from New York, and 963 miles from Key West. Puerto Rico was discovered in 1493 by Christopher Columbus. It was explored by Ponce de León in 1508. It continued a Spanish possession until Oct. 18, 1898, when the United States took formal possession as a result of the Spanish-American War. It was ceded by Spain to the United States by the Treaty ratified on April 11, 1899. Sugar is grown along the coastal plain and tobacco and coffee on the slopes of the hills; fruits, cotton, maize, sweet potatoes, and yams are also grown. The trade is principally with the U.S. 4,283 miles of paved roads were in use in 1955. There are good harbours at San Juan and Ponce. The Constitution approved by the Congress and the President of the United States, which came into force on July 25, 1952, establishes the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico with full powers of local self-government. Legislation functions are vested in the Legislative Assembly, which consists of 2 elected houses; the Senate of 27 members (2 from each of 8 senatorial districts and 11 at large) and the House of Representatives of 51 members (1 from each of 40 representative districts and 11 at large). Membership of each house may be increased slightly to accommodate minority representatives. The term of the Legislative Assembly is 4 years. The Governor is popularly elected for a term of 4 years. A Supreme Court of 5 members is appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate. There are 8 similarly appointed Secretaries at the head of permanent departments, but the selection of the Secretary of State must be approved also by the House of Representatives. The Governor appoints all judges. Puerto Rico is represented in Congress by a Resident Commissioner, elected for a term of 4 years, who has a seat in the House of Representatives, but not a vote. Great improvement has been made in the progress, industrialization and welfare of the island during the present century. A programme of tax exemption has raised income from industry to a level higher than that from agriculture. Public schools are established throughout—enrolment in 1956 reached 700,000. The capital, Ψ San Juan, had 368,756 inhabitants in 1958, other major towns being Ψ Ponce 126,810, Ψ Mayaguez 87,307, Caguas 60,132, Ψ Arrecibo 75,361 and Bayamón 48,000.

AMERICAN SAMOA

American Samoa consists of the island of Tutuila, Aunu'u, Ofu, Olosega, Ta'u, Rose and Swains Islands, with a total area of 76.5 square miles and a population of 20,154 in 1956, distributed as follows:—Tutuila and Aunu'u 27,307; Rose Island, uninhabited; Manu'a Group (Ofu and Ta'u Islands) 2,767; and Swain's Island (annexed May 13, 1925) 80.

Tutuila, the largest of the group, has an area of about 40 square miles and contains a magnificent harbour at Ψ Pago Pago (pop. 1950, 3,531), the capital and seat of government. The remaining islands have an area of about 30 square miles. Tuna and copra are the chief exports.

Under an Executive Order of the President, which became effective on July 1, 1951, civilian administration under the Department of the Interior replaced the Naval administration which had existed since 1900. At present the Government consists of an executive, an advisory bicameral legislature and a judiciary. Most of the Samoans are U.S. nationals, but some have acquired citizenship through service in the United States armed forces.

Governor, Peter T. Coleman.

Secretary, Alan M. MacQuarrie.

TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands consists of the Mariana (excluding Guam), Caroline and Marshall Islands which extend from latitude 1° to 20° north and from longitude 130° to 172° east. They cover an ocean area of 3,000,000 square miles but have a total land area of only 687 square miles. There are 96 separate islands and island groups in the Trust Territory. The population in 1958 was 70,594. The inhabitants of the Trust Territory are broadly classed as Micronesians. The native cultures vary markedly among island groups and even more among islands and atolls in the same geographic area. Nine mutually unintelligible languages are spoken in the territory.

The Trust Territory is administered by the United States pursuant to a Trusteeship Agreement with the Security Council of the United Nations of July 18, 1947. From the cessation of hostilities to that date, the area was administered under United States Military Government. On July 18, 1947, the islands were placed under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Navy. On July 1, 1951, civilian government was established with the transfer of responsibility for the Trust Territory to the Secretary of the Interior. By July 17, 1953, responsibility for the administration of all the islands in the Northern Marianas, except Rota, had been re-transferred to the Secretary of the Navy.

For administrative purposes, the territory is divided into seven districts: Saipan, Rota, Palau, Yap, Truk, Ponape and the Marshalls. Local governments exist within each district.

High Commissioner, Delmas H. Nucker.

Deputy High Commissioner, Joseph C. Putnam.

Temporary seat of government: Agaña, Guam.

VIRGIN ISLANDS

Purchased by the United States from Denmark for the sum of $25,000,000, and proclaimed, January 25, 1917. The total area of the islands is 132 sq. miles, with a population in 1958 of 30,530. St. Thomas (28 sq. miles) has a population of 15,987; St. Croix (84 sq. miles) has a population of 13,723; St. John (20 sq. miles) has a population of 809. St. Croix exports sugar and rum; Ψ St. Thomas is famous for its harbour.

CAPITAL, Ψ Charlotte Amalie contains one of the finest harbours in the West Indies, accommodating vessels of large draught, and has a large coaling and oil refuelling station. The climate of the Virgin Islands is delightful at all times, and particularly so during the winter months.

Governor, John D. Merwin.

Government Secretary, Roy W. Bornn.

THE PANAMA CANAL

The Panama Canal and its adjuncts, including the related commercial enterprises in the Canal Zone, are operated by the Panama Canal Company, which was formed on July 1, 1915, under the provisions of the Panama Canal Company Act. The Canal Zone is governed by the Canal Zone Government, which was established simultaneously with the new Canal Company. Both organizations are headed by Major-General W. E. Potter, U.S.A., who holds the joint title of Governor of the Canal Zone and President of the Panama Canal Company.

The first suggestion for a canal across the Isthmus of Panama was made by a Spanish engineer in 1530, and surveys were actively engaged upon by various private companies between the years 1825 and 1890. In 1876 a concession for the construction of a canal was granted to a French promotion corporation which conducted surveys during a period of two years and reported to an international congress held at Paris in May, 1879, over which Ferdinand de Lesseps presided. This congress advised the construction of a canal at sea-level, and in 1881 the work was undertaken by the Universal Interocceanic Panama Canal Company, of which de Lesseps was nominal head. The amount of work to be accomplished proved to be greater than was estimated, and resulted in the failure of the company, a receiver being appointed in 1889. A new company was formed to carry on the work, and excavation was resumed in 1894. This was continued until May 4, 1904, when the United States Government acquired the effects of the French company in Panama.

Congress authorized the President in 1902 to purchase the rights and property of the French company for $40,000,000. Meanwhile, a treaty was negotiated with the Government of Colombia for the cession, upon payment of $10,000,000, of the territory through which the canal was to be constructed. The failure of the Colombian Government to ratify this treaty led to the secession of Panama on November 3, 1903. The new Government was immediately recognized by the United States, and a treaty was ratified on February 26, 1904, in which rights of sovereignty over a strip of land ten miles in width, extending across the isthmus, were ceded to the United States. The U.S. guaranteed the Republic of Panama's independence and agreed to pay it $10,000,000 and an annuity which was to begin nine years after the ratification of the treaty. The canal is built through the centre of this territory. Under the terms of a treaty between Panama and the United States, signed at Panama in January, 1955, the United States increased its annual annuity to Panama from $430,000 to $1,930,000 and agreed to hand over to the Republic land and railroad yards valued at $25,000,000, to construct a high-level bridge over the Pacific entrance to the Canal at a cost of about $25,000,000 and to extend various commercial and other privileges to the Republic.

The canal is fifty statute miles long (44.08 nautical miles), and the channel is from 300 to 1,000 feet wide at bottom. It contains 12 locks in twin flights; 3 steps at Gatun on the Atlantic side, 1 step at Pedro Miguel and 2 at Miraflores on the Pacific side. Each lock chamber is 1,000 feet long and 110 feet wide. Transit from sea to sea usually takes 8 hours. The least width is in Gaillard Cut, and the greatest in Gatun Lake, where the channel can be made much broader at any time by the cutting down of trees and a small amount of dredging. The Panama Canal Company is engaged in a $20,000,000 Canal improvement programme. The water depth when the surface of Gatun Lake is at 85 feet above sea-level varies from 85 feet in some parts of Gatun Lake to 42 feet in the Atlantic entrance. The depth through Gaillard Cut is 45 feet.

Including only ocean-going commercial vessels, 300 Panama Canal net tons measurement or over, against which tolls were collected, the volume of commercial traffic passing through the Canal during each of the last 23 fiscal years is shown below:—

Fiscal Year	No. of Transits	Canal. * Net Tons	Cargo Tons

The United Nations

CHARTER OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The foundations of the Charter of the United Nations were laid at the Conference of Foreign Ministers in Moscow in 1943, and upon those foundations a structure was built at the meetings at Dumbarton Oaks, Washington, D.C., Aug. 21-Oct. 7, 1944. The design was discussed and criticized at San Francisco from April 25 to June 26, 1945, on which date representatives of 50 Allied Nations appended their signatures to the Charter.

The United Nations formally came into existence on October 24, 1945. It was later decided that its seat should be in the United States. Permanent headquarters have been erected at Manhattan, New York.

The following eighty-two States are members of the United Nations:—

Afghanistan, Albania, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burma, Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Cambodia, Canada, Ceylon, Chile, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Ghana, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, Iceland, India, Indonesia, Iraq, Republic of Ireland, Israel, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Laos, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Luxembourg, Malaya, Mexico, Morocco, Nepal, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Persia, Peru, Philippines, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, Salvador, Saudi Arabia, Spain, Sudan, Sweden, Thailand, Tunisia, Turkey, Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Union of South Africa, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Arab Republic, United Kingdom, United States of America, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yemen, Yugoslavia.

The principal organs of the United Nations are:—(1) The General Assembly; (2) The Security Council; (3) The Economic and Social Council; (4) The Trusteeship Council; (5) The International Court of Justice; (6) The Secretariat.

1. The General Assembly

The General Assembly consists of all the Members of the United Nations. Each Member is entitled to be represented at its meetings by five representatives, but has only one vote. The General Assembly meets once a year in regular session normally beginning on the third Tuesday in September. Special Sessions may also be held.

The work of the General Assembly is divided between seven Main Committees, on each of which every Member has the right to be represented:—(1) Political and Security (including the regulation of armaments); (2) Economic and Financial; (3) Social, Humanitarian and Cultural; (4) Trusteeship (including Non-Self Governing Territories); (5) Administrative and Budgetary; (6) Legal. There is also a Special Political Committee, to relieve the burden on the first Committee.

The Main Committees consider items referred to them by the General Assembly and recommend draft resolutions for submission to the Assembly's plenary meetings.

The Assembly has two procedural committees—a General Committee and a Credentials Committee; and two standing committees—an Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and a Committee on Contributions.

The General Assembly appoints such ad hoc committees as may be required from time to time for special purposes. The Assembly is also assisted in its work by subsidiary bodies such as a Board of Auditors, an Investments Committee, a United Nations Staff Benefit Committee, and an International Law Commission.

2. The Security Council

The Security Council consists of eleven Members, each of which has one representative and one vote. There are five permanent Members (China, France, U.K., U.S.A., U.S.S.R.) and six non-permanent Members elected for a two-year term.

The Security Council bears the primary responsibility for the maintenance of peace and security. Decisions on procedural questions are made by an affirmative vote of seven Members. On all other matters the affirmative vote of seven Members must include the concurring votes of the permanent Members, and it is this clause which makes the Veto possible. The only exception to this rule is that in regard to measures for peaceful settlement a party to a dispute must refrain from voting.

Until 1952 two separate Commissions, the Atomic Energy Commission and the Commission for Conventional Armaments, reporting to the Security Council, dealt with different aspects of the armaments problem. On January 11, 1952, the General Assembly approved the establishment of a new Disarmament Commission, bringing atomic and conventional armaments under one body. A sub-committee of the Disarmament Commission, consisting of representatives of Canada, France, U.K., U.S.A. and U.S.S.R., held its fourth session in London in 1957. During the first half of 1958, the Disarmament Commission and its sub-committee were virtually inactive, owing to the refusal of the U.S.S.R. to take part in their work in their present form.

A Committee on the Admission of New Members was set up by the Security Council on May 17, 1946, for the purpose of examining applications for admission to membership in the United Nations which may be referred to it by the Security Council. It is composed of a representative of each of the members of the Security Council.

The Security Council also establishes ad hoc committees and commissions which may be required from time to time for special purposes.

3. The Economic and Social Council

This body is responsible under the General Assembly for carrying out the functions of the United Nations with regard to international economic, social, cultural, educational, health and related matters.

It has established the following Commissions: Statistical, Human Rights, Social, Status of Women, Narcotic Drugs, Population, International Commodity Trade, Regional Economic Commissions for Europe, Asia and the Far East, Latin America and Africa. The Council also supervises and co-ordinates the work of twelve specialized agencies established to cover the main fields of international co-operation.

United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF), London Office, 24-25 Stratford Place, W.1.—Established by the United Nations in 1946, to meet the emergency needs of children, particularly in war-devastated countries. In 1950 emphasis was shifted to long-range needs of children in under-developed areas. In 1953 the United Nations General Assembly approved unanimously the indefinite extension of the Fund's mandate, UNICEF is financed by voluntary contributions from Governments and from the public, which amounted to £8,214,000 in 1958 and assisted 368 projects in 105 countries and territories.

4. Trusteeship Council

The establishment of a Trusteeship Council in connexion with territories placed under United Nations supervision through individual Trusteeship Agreements was made possible after the General Assembly on December 13, 1946, approved the following eight Trusteeship Agreements: New Guinea (agreement submitted by Australia); Ruanda-Urundi (agreement submitted by Belgium); French Cameroons and French Togoland (agreements submitted by France); Western Samoa (agreement submitted by New Zealand); British Cameroons, British Togoland, and Tanganyika (agreements submitted by the United Kingdom); a ninth agreement was afterwards approved concerning Nauru (administered by Australia on behalf of Australia, New Zealand and U.K.).

A Trusteeship Agreement for the former Japanese mandated islands, the Marshall, Marianas and Carolinas, was submitted by the United States to the United Nations, and after approval by the Security Council, came into force on July 18, 1947.

A Trusteeship Agreement for the former Italian Colony of Somaliand was approved by the General Assembly on Dec. 2, 1950.

The Trusteeship Agreement for British Togoland ceased to have effect in March, 1957, when that country was united with Ghana.

The Trusteeship Council is composed of countries administering Trust Territories, permanent members of the Security Council, and enough other countries (elected by the General Assembly for three-year terms) to make an equal division between countries which administer Trust Territories and countries which do not.

The Trusteeship Council considers reports from administering authorities; examines petitions in consultation with the administering authority; makes periodic inspection visits; and checks conditions with an annual questionnaire on the political, economic, social, and educational advancement of the inhabitants of trust territories.

5. International Court of Justice

The International Court of Justice is the principal judicial organ of the United Nations. The Statute of the court is an integral part of the Charter and all Members of the United Nations are ipso facto parties to it. The Court is composed of 15 judges, no two of whom may be nationals of the same State, and meets at The Hague.

If any party to a case fails to adhere to the judgment of the Court, the other party may have recourse to the Security Council.

THE SECRETARIAT

The Secretariat is composed of the Secretary-General, who is the chief administrative officer of the Organization, and an international staff appointed by him under regulations established by the General Assembly. The Secretary-General is appointed for a term of five years.

Secretary-General, Dag Hammarskjöld (Sweden).
Executive Assistant to Secretary-General, Andrew W. Cordier (U.S.A.).

Under Secretaries, Ralph J. Bunche (U.S.A.) (Special Political Affairs); C. V. Narasimhan (India).

Do. (Conference Services), Victor Hoo (China).

Do. (Economic and Social Affairs), Philippe de Seynes (France).

Do. (Trusteeship and Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories), Dragoslav Protitch (Yugoslavia).

Do. (Political and Security Council Affairs), Anatoly F. Dobrynin (U.S.S.R.).

Director of Personnel, W. A. B. Hamilton (U.K.).

Commissioner for Technical Assistance, Roberto M. Heurtematte (Panama).

Executive Chairman, Technical Assistance Board, David Owen (U.K.).

U.N. European Office, Pier P. Spicelli (Italy).

U.N. Information Centre, 14-15, Stratford Place, W.1.

BUDGET OF THE UNITED NATIONS

The financial year coincides with the calendar year. On February 13, 1946, the General Assembly established a Working Capital Fund of $25,000,000 (U.S.).

For the year 1959, the gross appropriation was $59,006,000. The scale of assessments for the 1959 budget for British Commonwealth countries was: Australia, 1.79 per cent.; Canada, 3.11 per cent.; Ghana, 0.07 per cent.; India, 2.46 per cent.; Malaya, 0.17 per cent.; New Zealand, 0.43 per cent.; Pakistan, 0.40 per cent.; Union of South Africa, 0.56 per cent.; United Kingdom, 7.78 per cent. The United States contribution was 32.51 per cent.; U.S.S.R. was 13.62 per cent.; France was 6.40 per cent.; and China was 5.01 per cent.

INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY

Kärntnerring 11-13, Vienna III.

Set up on July 29, 1957, to accelerate and enlarge the contribution of atomic energy to peace, health and prosperity throughout the world and to ensure that assistance provided by it is not used to further any military purpose. Agreement concerning the Agency's working relationship with the United Nations was reached in 1957. In 1959, 65 states were in membership.

A General Conference of all members meets in regular annual session and in such special session as may be necessary. A Board of Governors (23 members) carries out the functions of the Agency. Director-General, W. Sterling Cole (U.S.A.).

INTERNATIONAL AGENCIES

Twelve other international organizations, having wide responsibilities in economic, social, cultural, educational and other related fields, carry out their functions in co-operation with the United Nations under agreements made with a standing committee of the Economic and Social Council.

International Labour Organisation (ILO) Geneva (London Office, 38-39 Parliament Street, S.W.1.).—Established in 1919 as an autonomous institution associated with the League of Nations and recognized in 1946 by the United Nations as a special agency, the ILO exists to contribute to the establishment of lasting peace by promoting social justice and by international action to improve labour conditions and living standards, and to promote economic and social stability.

A General Conference, composed of national delegations of two government delegates, one delegate representing management and a fourth representing labour, meets annually and formulates international social standards.

A 40-member Governing Body, composed of the representatives of 20 Governments, ten worker members and ten employer members, supervises the work of the International Labour Office and of the various committees and commissions. Ten Governments hold seats on the Governing Body because of their industrial importance. These are at present Canada, China, France, Federal Republic of Germany, India, Italy, Japan, U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom and the United States.

The International Labour Office provides the Secretariat of the Organization, collects and distributes information, assists governments upon request in drafting legislation on the basis of decisions of the Conference and issues publications.

Director-General, David A. Morse (U.S.A.).

Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), Viale delle Terme di Caracalla, Rome.—Established on October 16, 1945, to advance the raising of levels of nutrition and standards of living, to secure improvements in the efficiency of the production and distribution of all food and agricultural products and by bettering the condition of rural populations to contribute towards an expanding world economy. FAO collects, analyses, interprets and disseminates information relating to nutrition, agriculture, forestry and fisheries. Among its many activities the Organization promotes the global exchange of new types of plants, combats epidemics of animal diseases in many countries and provides technical assistance in such fields as nutrition and food management, soil erosion control, re-forestation, irrigation engineering, control of infestation of stored foods and production of fertilisers. The expenditure for 1959 was estimated at $8,500,000.

The policy of the Organization is directed by a two-yearly Conference of the 76 member nations. A council (24 members) acts for the Conference between its sessions.

Director-General, B. R. Sen (India).

United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), 9 Place de Fontenoy, Paris, 7ème.—Unesco was established on Nov. 4, 1946, to contribute to peace and security by promoting collaboration among the nations through education, science and culture in order to further universal respect for justice, for the rule of law and for the human rights and fundamental freedoms which are affirmed for the peoples of the world, without distinction of race, sex, language or religion, by the Charter of the United Nations; to collaborate in the work of advancing the mutual knowledge and understanding of peoples, . . . to give fresh impulse to popular education and to the spread of culture, . . . to maintain, increase and diffuse knowledge.

The three main bodies of the Organization are: a General Conference which meets every two years to approve the programme and budget, an Executive Board of 24 members and the Secretariat. In addition, National Commissions are set up in Member States to serve as a link with Unesco and carry out the programme of the Organization.

The programme of Unesco is now of a continuing nature, with priority tasks. Its principal sections relate to education, natural sciences, social sciences, cultural activities and mass communication. Three major projects on which special efforts are being concentrated are the development of compulsory primary education in Latin America, research on the problems of arid lands and the mutual appreciation of Eastern and Western cultural values. Unesco also seeks to increase the international exchange of persons. The Budget for 1959-60 is $25,907,463.

Director-General, Vittorino Veronese (Italy).

World Health Organization (WHO), Palais des Nations, Geneva. Established on April 7, 1948, the World Health Organization exists to forward the attainment by all peoples of the highest possible level of health. Its services are of two kinds—advisory, to spread knowledge and help to train personnel on such subjects as malaria, tuberculosis, venereal diseases, maternal and child health, nutrition, and environmental sanitation—and technical, including such services as biological standardization and unification of pharmacopoeias, collection and dissemination of epidemiological intelligence, special international research projects on parasitic and virus diseases, and publication of technical and scientific works. Expenditure in 1959 was estimated at $14,287,600. Membership (June, 1959), 87; Associate Members, 3.

Organs are a World Health Assembly meeting annually to frame policy, an Executive Board (18 members), meeting at least twice a year, and a Secretariat.

Director-General, Dr. M. G. Candau (Brazil).

International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, 1818 H Street, Washington, 25 D.C.—Established on Dec. 27, 1945, to assist in the reconstruction and development of territories of members by facilitating the investment of capital for productive purposes; to promote private foreign investment and, when private capital is not readily available on reasonable terms, to supplement private investment by providing loans for productive purposes out of its own capital, funds raised by it, and its other resources; and to promote the balanced growth of international trade and the maintenance of equilibrium in balances of payments by encouraging international investment for the development of the productive resources of the International Bank's members. Loans made or guaranteed by the Bank since its inception to June 30, 1959, totalled $4,522,000,000.

The Board of Governors consists of one Governor and one alternate appointed by each of the 66 member countries.

Sixteen Executive Directors exercise all powers of the Bank except those reserved to the Board of Governors. The President, selected by the Executive Directors, conducts the business of the Bank, with the assistance of an international staff.

President, Eugene R. Black (U.S.A.).

International Finance Corporation (IFC), 1818 H Street, Washington 25, D.C.—Established in 1956, and a special agency in relationship with the United Nations since Feb. 20, 1957, IFC exists to encourage the growth of production private enterprise in its member countries, particularly the less developed areas. It invests in private enterprises, in association with private investors and without government guarantee of repayment, in cases where sufficient private capital is not available on reasonable terms; serves as a clearing house to bring together investment opportunities, private capital and experienced management; and helps to stimulate the production investment of private capital both domestic and foreign. Total authorized capital $100,000,000.

IFC is controlled by a Board of Directors consisting of the President (Chairman) and those Executive Directors of the International Bank who represent at least one government which is a member of IFC. A President is selected by the Board of Directors.

President, Robert L. Garner (U.S.A.).

International Monetary Fund, 19 and H Streets, Washington 25, D.C.—Established on Dec. 27, 1945, the Fund exists to promote international monetary co-operation and the expansion of international trade; to promote exchange stability, maintain orderly exchange arrangements and avoid competitive exchange depreciations; and to assist in the establishment of a multilateral system of payments in respect of current transactions between members and in the elimination of foreign exchange restrictions which hamper world trade. Total transactions of the Fund in the financial year to April 30, 1959 amounted to $804,976.500.

The Board of Governors consists of one member and one alternate from each member country. Five of the Executive Directors are appointed by members having the largest quotas and other twelve are elected by the Governors of the remaining member countries. A Managing Director is elected by the Executive Directors.

Managing Director, Per Jacobsson (Sweden).

International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), 1080 University Street, Montreal, 3.—Established on April 4, 1947, to study problems of international civil aviation and the establishment of international standards and regulations for civil aviation, ICAO encourages the use of safety measures, uniform regulations for operation, and simpler procedures at international borders. It promotes the use of new technical methods and equipment. With the co-operation of members, it has evolved a pattern for meteorological services, traffic control, communications, radio beacons and ranges, search and rescue organization, and other facilities required for safe international flight. It has secured much simplification of government customs, immigration, and public health regulations as they apply to international air transport. 74 states are now members of ICAO. The net budget for 1960 was $3,865,000 (Canadian).

An Assembly of delegates from member states meets annually. A Council of 21 members is elected by the Assembly, taking into account the countries of chief importance in air transport and the need for representation of the main geographical areas of the world. The Council is the executive body, working through subsidiary committees.

Secretary-General, R. M. Macdonnell (Canada).

Universal Postal Union (UPU), Schosshaldenstrasse 46, Bern.—Established on July 1, 1875, UPU exists to form a single postal territory of all the countries, members of the Union, for the reciprocal exchange of correspondence in order to secure the organization and improvement of the various postal services and to promote in this sphere the development of international collaboration. Every member agrees to transmit the mail of all other members by the best means used for its own mail. The Union comprises all the countries of the world with the exception of the Maldives and Laccadive Islands. Budget, 1959, $615,187.

A Universal Postal Congress meets at five-yearly intervals. An International Bureau is the central office of the Union.

Secretary-General, Dr. Fritz Hess (Switzerland).

International Telecommunication Union (ITU), Palais Wilson, Geneva.—Founded at Paris in 1865 as the International Telegraph Union, ITU was re-organized in 1947 and since 1954 has been governed by the Convention adopted by the Buenos Aires Conference held in 1952. It exists to set up international regulations for telegraph, telephone, and radio services to further their development and extend their utilization by the public, at the lowest possible rates; to promote international cooperation for the improvement and rational use of telecommunications of all kinds; the development of technical facilities and their most efficient operation. ITU allocates the radio frequency spectrum and registers radio frequency assignments. It studies, recommends, and collects and publishes information on telecommunication matters. The budget for 1959 was $1,851,250.

Organs of the Union are a plenipotentiary Conference, an Administrative Council (28 elected members), meeting at least annually and a General Secretariat. Other permanent organs are the International Frequency Registration Board (I.F.R.B.), the International Telegraph and Telephone Consultative Committee (C.C.I.T.T.) and the International Radio Consultative Committee (C.C.I.R.).

Secretary-General, Gerald C. Cross (U.S.A.) (Acting).

World Meteorological Organization (WMO), Avenue de la Paix, 2, Geneva.—Established on March 23, 1950, WMO exists to facilitate world-wide cooperation in establishing networks of stations making observations related to meteorology, and to promote the establishment and maintenance of centres providing meteorological services; to promote the establishment of systems for the rapid exchange of weather information; to promote standardization of meteorological observations and to ensure their uniform publication; to further the application of meteorology to aviation, shipping, agriculture, and other human activities; to encourage research and training in meteorology and to coordinate their international aspects. The budget for 1960-63 is $2,694,484.

A World Meteorological Congress meets at least once every four years. An Executive Committee (24 members), meeting at least annually, carries out the resolutions of the Congress, initiates studies and makes recommendations on matters requiring international action. Other organs are six Regional Meteorological Associations (Africa, Asia, S. America, N. and Central America, Europe and South-West Pacific), technical commissions and a Secretariat.

Secretary-General, D. A. Davies (U.K.).

Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO), Chancery House, Chancery Lane, W.C.2.—Established on March 17, 1958, to provide machinery for cooperation among governments in the field of governmental regulation and practices relating to technical matters, including those concerning safety at sea; to encourage the removal of discriminatory action and of unnecessary restrictions by governments; to consider matters concerning unfair restrictive practices by shipping concerns; to consider any matters concerning shipping that might be referred to it by any organ or specialized agency of the United Nations; and to provide for the exchange of information among governments. In June, 1959, membership consisted of 33 nations. Budget, 1959-61, $726,000.

An Assembly of all members meets every two years. A Council (16 members) acts for the Assembly between sessions. Other organs of IMCO are a Maritime Safety Committee and a Sub-Committee on Tonnage Measurement.

Secretary-General, Ove Nielsen (Denmark).

International Trade.—A draft charter for an international trade organization was completed in 1948, but it became clear that the leading trading powers would not ratify it without considerable delay. The organization has not yet been established.

An international treaty to which 37 countries are parties, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) was signed in 1947, with the object of lowering and stabilizing tariffs. Four tariff conferences have since been held at which members have reduced or frozen their tariffs on various items. In 1955 the basic objectives of the Agreement were adapted to meet changed conditions, particularly the expectation of convertibility of major currencies; validity of tariff schedules was extended. The parties agreed that an Organization for Trade Co-operation should be set up. At present GATT is administered at Geneva by a small secretariat.

Executive Secretary, E. W. White (U.K.).

2nd Secretary, Mohammed Aziz Rahim.

Afghanistan lies to the N. and W. of Western Pakistan. Its ancient name was Aryana, by which title it is referred to by Strabo, the Greek geographer who lived in the 1st century B.C. The estimated area is 250,000 sq. miles, and the population is estimated (1946) at about 10 to 12 millions. The population is very mixed. The most numerous race is the Pathan which predominates in the South and West, the main divisions being the Durrani, from whom the Royal family springs, and the Ghilzais. Then come the Tajiks, an Iranian people mainly cultivators and small traders. There are also Uzbeks and Turkomen in the North, Hazaras in the centre, Baluchis in the South-West and the Kafirs who live near the Chitral border. All are Sunni Moslems, except the Hazaras and Kizilbashs, who belong to the Shia sect.

Afghanistan is bounded on the W. by Persia (boundary fixed 1857 and 1904), on the S. by Baluchistan (now W. Pakistan) (boundary fixed 1896-7), on the N. by Asiatic Russia (boundary fixed 1886-7 and 1893-5), and on the E. by the N.W. Frontier Province (now W. Pakistan) (boundary fixed 1895). The northern boundary runs from Zulfikar on the Persian frontier to Kushk, the Russian railway terminus, to the Oxus (or Amu Darya, "Mother of Rivers") which forms the boundary from Khamiab to Lake Victoria, whence the line to the Chinese frontier on the branch line from Merv, and thence N.E. was fixed by the Pamir agreement of 1895. The Russo-Afghan frontier was demarcated by the Tashkent Boundary Commission in 1948. The Indo-Afghan frontier was settled by the Durand agreement of 1893. On this frontier from the Pamirs to the Gomal Pass are many Pathan tribes, who have a strong tradition of independence and are much influenced by mullahs.

Mountains, chief among which are the Hindu Kush, cover three-fourths of the country, the elevation being generally over 4,000 feet. There are three great river basins, the Oxus, Helmand, and Kabul. The climate is dry, with extreme temperatures.

Afghanistan is divided into seven major provinces, Kabul, Mazar-i-Sharif, Kandahar, Herat, Nengrahar (formerly Eastern), Paktya (formerly Southern) and Qataghan, and eight minor provinces, Parwan, Ghazni, Farah-Chakhansur, Girishk, Maimana, Badakhshan, Shibarghan and Ghore. Each province is under a Governor (called in major provinces Natib-ul-Hakumah, and in minor provinces Hakim-i-Ala).

Government.—Amir Abdurrahman (1880-1901) established a strong central government, with a regular civil and military organization, including offices for public works, posts, police, finance, trade, &c. The Army has been reorganized and is recruited by annual calls; service is for two years with the colours and eight with the reserve. The peace strength is about 64,000. A military academy and military colleges are located in Kabul; and provision is made for training of regular officers abroad. A small Air Force is maintained. All military and air force equipment is now of Russian pattern. Factories for munitions and for various commercial products have been erected in Kabul and elsewhere.

As the result of a British mission to Kabul in 1904-5, the engagements which had existed with the Amir Abdurrahman since 1880 were renewed by the treaty of March 21, 1905. By the Anglo-Russian Convention of August, 1907, Russia declared Afghanistan outside the Russian sphere of influence. Afghan troops crossed the Indian frontier on May 2, 1919, on which the Indian Government took immediate steps to expel them; fighting followed and Dacca was occupied by British troops, but overtures were made by King Amanulla of Afghanistan and a treaty of peace was signed in August. By this treaty Afghanistan is left formally free and independent. By treaty of Nov. 22, 1921, Great Britain and Afghanistan agreed to respect one another's internal and external independence; to recognize boundaries then existent, subject to a slight re-adjustment near the Khyber; and to establish Legations and consular officers. As successor state to the British Government, Pakistan has agreed that her relations with Afghanistan shall be based on the 1921 treaty.

Under the Constitution of Oct. 31, 1931, there is a Senate of 43 nominated members and a National Council of 171 elected members, with a Grand Assembly (Loe Jirgeh) which is summoned on important occasions. The administration is entrusted to a Council of Ministers.

The laws of Afghanistan are based on the "Shariat," or Islamic law, and tribal custom.

Production.—Agriculture and sheep raising are the principal industries. There are generally two crops a year, one of wheat (the staple food), barley, or lentils, the other of rice, millet, maize, and dal. Sugar beet and cotton are grown. Afghanistan is rich in fruits. Sheep, including the Karakuli, and transport animals are bred. Silk, woollen and hair cloths and carpets are manufactured. Salt, silver, copper, coal, iron, lead, rubies, lapis lazuli, gold, chrome and talc are found.

The following main roads are open to motor traffic. (a) Internal: Kabul-Kandahar (310 miles); Kandahar-Farrah-Herat (400 miles); Herat-Maimana to Mazar-i-Sharif (500 miles); Mazar-i-Sharif-Kabul (380 miles). Also Kabul-Khanabad-Faizabad (450 miles); Kabul-Gardez (80 miles); Kabul-Bamian (140 miles). The road from Kabul to the North is being shortened by cutting through the Salang pass. (b) Roads to the frontiers: Kabul-Khyber (175 miles); Kandahar-Chaman (70 miles) and roads from Herat to the Russian and Persian borders. Work on the metalling of the Kabul-Khyber road by American engineers has begun and a new metalled road from Kabul to Kandahar and Spin Baldock is shortly to be constructed under an I.C.A. contract. The Pakistan North-Western Rly. is to extend a spur from Chaman to Spin Baldock. An agreement has recently been signed with the Soviet Government for the construction of a road from the Russian border at Kusk to Herat and Kandahar. Otherwise roads are unmetalled. A network of minor roads fit for motor traffic in fine weather links up all important towns and districts.

Goods are still conveyed by pack animals, but motor transport is rapidly taking the place of pack transport as the chief means of conveyance. The chief trade routes to Pakistan and India are the Khyber Pass route, from Kabul to Peshawar (190 miles), and the road from Kandahar to Chaman (70 miles).

Language and Literature.—The languages of the country are Persian and Pushtu and Turki (spoken by Uzbaks and Turkoman tribes in the North). Education is free and nominally compulsory, elementary schools having been established in most centres; there are secondary schools in large urban areas and a university (established in 1932) at the capital.

FINANCE

Afghanis.

National Income 2,000,000,000

The annual revenue consists largely of payments in kind. There are taxes on land, sales of animals, a grazing tax, customs duties, stamps, fines, receipts from State lands, monopolies, and factories and mining royalties; in addition certain businesses and individuals have now become eligible for income-tax.

There are various official rates of exchange for the Afghani which apply mainly to government departments trading in certain commodities. The free rates fluctuate as much as 20 per cent. or more but in June, 1959, were approximately as follows:

900 Afghanis = 100 Indian Rupees.
640 Afghanis = 100 Pakistani Rupees.
135 Afghanis = £1.
49 Afghanis = $.

TRADE WITH U.K.

Imports from U.K.	£437,588	£430,628
Exports to U.K.	4475,098	3,593,260

Exports are mainly Persian lambskins (Karakuli), fruits, cotton, raw wool, carpets and spices, while the imports are chiefly cotton yarn and piece goods, metals, leather goods, tea, sugar, jute manufactures, paper and cement.

CAPITAL. Kabul (about 300,000). The chief commercial centres are Kabul and Kandahar (77,000). Other provincial capitals are Herat (75,000), Mazar-i-Sharif (42,000), Jalalabad (22,000) and Khanabad (18,000).

ALBANIA

Head of the State, Hadji Lechi, assumed office, July 24, 1953.

Prime Minister, General Enver Hodja, recognized by Gt. Britain, U.S.A. and U.S.S.R., Nov. 10, 1945.

Situated on the Adriatic Sea, Albania is bounded on the north and east by Yugoslavia and on the south by Greece. The area of the Republic is estimated at 10,700 sq. miles, with a population (1955) of 1,394,000.

On Nov. 20, 1945, the British, U.S.A. and U.S.S.R. governments decided to recognize the Albanian administration under Colonel-General Enver Hodja as the provisional government of Albania on the understanding that free elections would be held at an early date, in order that a truly representative government could be formed. Elections were held in December, 1945, on Jan. 11, 1946, the Constituent Assembly declared Albania an independent Republic, and on Aug. 7, 1946, Albania applied for admission to the United Nations, but its entry was vetoed by Great Britain and the U.S.A. It was admitted in 1955. United Kingdom diplomatic relations with Albania ceased in 1946.

Albania is almost entirely an agricultural country and the staple crops are wheat and maize.

CAPITAL: Tirana (pop. 50,000).

ANDORRA

A small, neutral principality situated on the southern slopes of the Pyrenees, between Spain and France with an approximate area of 180 square miles and population of approximately 6,000. It is surrounded by mountains which attain an altitude of from 6,500 to 10,000 feet. Historians place the origin between the eighth and ninth centuries. Andorra is divided into six Parishes each of which has four Councillors elected by popular vote to the Valleys of Andorra Council of Twenty-four. The Council is presided over by a President who is in charge of the Government of the country, with the support of a co-sovereignty between the Bishop of the Seu d'Urgell and the Head of the French Republic (this last as successor in the name of the Count of Foix). Each co-Prince nominates his own representative and has a Permanent Delegation and a Supreme Tribunal for the hearing of civil causes. These two Tribunes together form the Supreme Courts. The official language of the country is Catalan. Spanish pesetas and French francs are the accepted currency. A good road crosses the Valleys from Spain to France. Andorra has abundant deposits of iron and quantities of alum and lead, stone quarries, granite, jasper and marble. Timber includes pine, fir, oak, birch and box-tree. Potatoes and cereals are produced in the highlands and tobacco in the plains. The climate is naturally cold for six months, but mild in spring and summer. The mountain slopes are suitable for skiing, and it is estimated that 400,000 tourists visit the Valleys during the year. The imports from U.K. during 1958 were £38,280.

CAPITAL: Andorra la Vella (population 2,200).

FLAG: Three horizontal bands, azure, yellow, red; crown on yellow band.

ARABIA

Arabia is a peninsula in the south-west of the Asiatic continent, forming the connecting link between Asia and Africa, and lies between 30° 30'—60° E. long. and 12° 45'—34° 50' N. lat. The north-western limit is generally taken from Akaba at the head of the Gulf of Akaba, to a point in the Syrian Desert about 150 miles north-east, and thence northwards to a point about 50 miles due east of Damascus. The remaining land boundaries are in the form of a horse-shoe, encompassing the Syrian Desert, and descending in a south-easterly direction to the head of the Persian Gulf, and thus excluding the whole of Mesopotamia and the Euphrates Valley. The other boundaries of Arabia are the Red Sea and Gulf of Aden, the Arabian Sea, and the Persian Gulf and Gulf of Oman. Generally speaking, the peninsula consists of a plateau sloping from south-west to north-east towards the Euphrates Valley, except that the broad south-eastern promontory, which encloses the Persian Gulf, contains a coastal range in the Sultanate of Muscat and Oman.

The total area is estimated at 1,200,000 sq. miles (of which nearly one-half is occupied by the Syrian, Nafud, Dahana, and Rub Al Khali deserts) and the total population is believed to be about 30,000,000.

Language and Literature.—Arabic is spoken not only in Arabia, but in many other countries, either as the principal or auxiliary tongue, notably in Egypt and the Sudan, Libya, Morocco, Algeria, Iraq, Jordan, Syria, Lebanon; and to some extent also in Nigeria, Madagascar and Zanzibar. Owing to Moorish incursions it was formerly spoken in Spain, the Balearic Islands and Sicily. There are anthologies of pre- and post-Islamic poetry and a considerable prose literature, including popular romances and story cycles (such as "The Thousand Nights and One Night"), historical and biographical studies, and resulting from the westernizing movement, there is a general revival of learning among Arabic speaking peoples. Many daily newspapers are published in Arabic and there is a native Arabic drama.

EMBASSY IN LONDON.

(Diplomatic relations suspended.)

The Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, so named since Sept. 20, 1932, is a personal union of two countries, the Sultan of Nejd being also King of the Hejaz.

By the Treaty of Jeddah (May 20, 1927) Great Britain recognized Ibn Saud as an independent ruler, King of the Hejaz and of Nejd and its Dependencies.

The total area of the Kingdom is about 927,000 sq. miles, with an estimated population of not more than 6 millions.

In the 18th century Nejd was an independent State and the stronghold of the Wahhabi sect. It subsequently fell under the Turkish yoke, but in 1913 Ibn Saud threw off Turkish rule and captured from the Turks the Province of Hasa. In 1921 he added to his dominions the territories of the Rashid family of Jebel Shammar, which he captured by force of arms; in 1925 he completed the conquest of the Hejaz, and in 1926 accepted the surrender of the greater part of Asir, the whole of which is now part of the Kingdom.

Nejd ("Plateau") has no definite frontiers, but may be said to extend over about 800,000 square miles of Central Arabia, including the Nafud and Dahana Deserts, and reaches eastward to the Persian Gulf (Hasa). The population is largely nomadic and is estimated at close on 3,000,000, the majority being Moslems of the Wahhabi movement. There is little agriculture, but wheat and barley are grown, and there is an experimental farm, irrigated from natural deep pools and covering 3,000 acres, at al-Kharj, about 50 miles south of Riyadh. The principal occupation of the bulk of the population is camel and sheep raising, but oil makes by far the largest contribution to the economy of the country. Oil was found in commercial quantities at Dammam, near Dhahran in the Hasa in 1938, and by 1955 production of crude oil from field storage amounted to over 350,000,000 barrels per annum. Exports other than oil are negligible. The capital is Riyadh (100,000), and the principal trading centres are Hofuf (the chief town of the Hasa province) (100,000), Ψ Al Khobar and Ψ Dammam on the Persian Gulf littoral, Anaiza, Buraida, Hail (20,000), and Jauf. The old ports (Persian Gulf) were Ψ Qatif, Ψ Uqair and Ψ Al Khobar, which were suitable only for sailing craft, but the Arabian-American Oil Company, which is exploiting the Hasa oil under a 60 years' lease, has built a deep-water port for its own purposes at Ψ Ras Tannura, and a civil deep-water port, with a pier seven miles long, was brought into use at Ψ Dammam in 1950. A railway is now in operation from Dammam through Hofuf to Riyadh.

The Hejaz ("The Boundary"—between Nejd and Tihamah) extends from Asir in S. to Transjordan in N., and from the Red Sea, the Gulf of Akaba in the W. to the ill-defined boundaries of Central Arabia. The coastline on the Red Sea is about 800 miles, and the total area is about 112,500 sq. miles, with a population of from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000, including many nomad tribes. On the coast are the small ports of El Wejh, Yanbu', Rabegh, Gizan and Ψjedda, the main port of Saudi Arabia. Jedda contains the ruins of the reputed "tomb of Eve, the mother of mankind"; and inland are many settlements through which runs the course of the disused Saudi-Arabian section of the Hejaz Railway which is scheduled for reconstruction. The Oasis of Khaibar, east of the railway, contains a considerable population, descendants of former negro slaves, with a centre at Kasr el Yahudi. The importance of the Hejaz depends upon the pilgrimages to the holy cities of Medina and Mecca. Medina (al Madinah al Munawwarah, "The City of Light"), once the terminus of the Hejaz Railway, 820 miles from Damascus, has a permanent population of about 20,000 and is celebrated as the burial place of Muhammad, who died in the city on June 7, 632 (12 Rabi'a, A.H. 11). The Mosque of the Prophet (500 feet in length and over 300 in breadth) contains the sacred tomb of Muhammad. Mecca, the birth-place of the Prophet, is 45 miles east of the seaport of Jedda, by road, and about 200 miles south of Medina, and has a fixed population estimated at 100,000. The city contains the great mosque surrounding the Kaaba, or sacred shrine of the Muhammadan religion, in which is the black stone "given by Gabriel to Abraham," placed in the south-east wall of the Kaaba at such a height that it may be kissed by the devout pilgrim. Ψjedda (200,000) is the principal port and commercial centre.

Asir ("The Inaccessible") extends, geographically, from a line drawn inland from Birk on the southern limit of Hejaz to the northern boundary of the Yemen, some 12 miles N. of the port of Meidl. Its breadth extends about 180 miles eastwards to Bisha in the north and to the boundary of the Beni Yam in the south. According to ancient Arab geographers, Asir used to be considered as a part of the Yemen. The territory includes the Farsan Islands, where prospectors have searched for oil, but without success. The maritime lowland is interspersed with fertile areas near the wadis, which afford pasturage and bear grain. Capital, Abha.

Trade and Finance.—Formerly the annual pilgrimage to the Holy Places of the Hejaz provided Saudi Arabia with virtually the whole of her means of payment for imports; it is estimated to have brought £10,000,000 in foreign exchange to the Hejaz in each of the years 1948-50. It is therefore not surprising that the foreign trade of the country was largely conducted by the merchant communities of Jedda and Mecca. Industry was, and is, almost non-existent. Imports are estimated to have averaged about £2,500,000 annually before 1939, of which the United Kingdom contributed less than £100,000. India was traditionally Saudi Arabia's principal commercial connection; and indeed the legal tender of Saudi Arabia, the silver riyal, is of the same weight and fineness as the old Indian rupee. Religious objections to usury have affected the development of banking in Saudi Arabia. Though paper money is widely used, it is not officially recognised as currency. It has virtually supplanted gold as a means of payment for transactions nevertheless. Exchange rates, which were formerly subject to violent fluctuations, have now been given a considerable degree of stability by the operations of the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency. The country shared the inflationary experiences of other Middle East countries during the war years. The effect of oil developments and of investment, mainly American, in Saudi Arabia has been to revolutionize the country's foreign exchange position and greatly to increase the size of the market.

Imports from U.K. ...	£7,561,962	£7,979,679
Exports to U.K.	5,585,398	7,478,906

Communications.—The railway from the new port of Dammam to the oilfields at Abqaiq and through Hofuf to Riyadh was opened late in 1951. The only completed metalled road, apart from those in the oilfields area, connects Mecca with its Port of Jedda, but a new road from Jedda to Medina (about 410 miles) was partially completed by a British firm and the remainder has been completed by a local contractor. The Saudi Arabian Government employs Transworld Airlines to pilot and maintain the Government-owned Saudi Arabian Airlines with Dakota, Skymaster, Convair and Bristol aircraft. Scheduled services are flown between Jedda, Taif, Riyadh, Hofuf and Dhahran. There are first-class airports at Dhahran, originally built by the United States Army as a military base, and at Jedda. The other airfields named are being developed. Saudi Arabian airlines also maintain regular services to Cairo and Beirut. Twice-weekly services operated by Aden Airways, Arab Airways (both subsidiaries of B.O.A.C.), Air Liban and Misrair call at Jedda, the route of Aden Airways including Cairo-Luxor-Jedda-Port Sudan-Asmara-Kamaran-Aden and return.

Education.—There are over 300 Government schools, mostly primary, but including seven secondary schools and one preparatory school, which prepares students who have completed their secondary course for University training, in Egypt or elsewhere. There is no University in Saudi Arabia. With three exceptions, all schools are maintained by the Government. Instruction is given to boys only. There are no girls' schools.

SAUDI ARABIAN FLAG: Green oblong, white Arabic device in centre: "There is no God but God, Muhammad is the Prophet of God," and a white scimitar beneath the lettering.

CAPITAL, Riyadh, population about 100,000.

Saudi Arabia severed diplomatic relations with the United Kingdom on November 6, 1956. The Government of Pakistan has assumed responsibility for the protection of British interests in Saudi Arabia.

THE SHAIKHDOM OF KUWAIT

Ruler, Shaikh Sir Abdullah as-Salim as-Sabah K.C.M.G., C.I.E., born 1895, acceded Jan. 28, 1950

Kuwait is an independent Arab Shaikhdom in special treaty relations with Her Majesty's Government. It extends along the shore of the Persian Gulf from Iraq to Saudi Arabia, with an area of about 5,800 square miles and a population, according to a census taken in 1957, of just over 206,000. The total European and American population was about 3,100 in 1957. The port of ΨKuwait, the capital (pop. about 180,000), is an entrepôt for goods for the interior, and for the export of pearls (in diminishing quantities), skins and wool. Imports for the year 1958 amounted to approximately £75,000,000, while exports, including re-exports, amounted to £5,000,000, excluding oil. Kuwait was traditionally the show-building centre for the Persian Gulf, but the craft is declining. The centre of the Kuwait Oil Company's production is at Burgan, south of Kuwait town. An oil port has been constructed by the company at Mina-al-Ahmadi, about five miles from Ahmadi, the company's administrative and residential centre. Production of crude oil in 1958 totalled 69,117,138 tons. The Company is jointly owned by the British Petroleum Company and the American Gulf Oil Corporation. It employs over 9,000 men, including British, Americans, Indians, Pakistanis, Kuwaitis and Arabs from neighbouring territories. Oil was also struck in the Kuwait-Saudi Arabian Neutral Zone to the South of the State early in 1953. Concessions for this area are held by the American Independent Oil Co. from Kuwait and the Getty Oil Company from Saudi Arabia. Total production of crude oil in the neutral zone in 1958 was approximately 4,000,000 tons. The Arabian Oil Company, of Japan, having been awarded in 1958 the oil concession for the Neutral Zone offshore sea-bed by Kuwait and Saudi Arabia for their respective half shares, commenced exploratory drilling in the summer of 1959.

As a result of the very considerable oil revenues, the Kuwait Government has embarked on a large scale development scheme and plans for social services. Education and medical treatment are free. New hospitals and schools continue to be built. In 1958-59 there were nearly 21,800 boys and nearly 12,600 girls in 77 schools. Kuwait has a domestic water supply from a State-owned sea water plant which operates on waste natural gas from the oil fields. The plant can produce over 4,000,000 gallons of fresh water daily and a further capacity of 2,000,000 gallons per day is to be added in 1960. For storage there are two 15,000,000 gallon reservoirs and one of 3,000,000 gallons. The power station has a capacity of 70,000 kw. and additional capacity of 90,000 kw. is being installed. The town is now served by a network of dual carriage way roads and more are under construction.

Ships of British, Dutch and other lines make regular calls at Kuwait. B.O.A.C., Kuwait Airways and several Middle Eastern airlines operate regular air services, and other companies make non-scheduled flights to Kuwait under charter. Wireless communications, telephone and postal services are conducted by the Kuwait Government. Banking is carried out by the British Bank of the Middle East and the National Bank of Kuwait. The currency is the Indian rupee.

THE SULTANATE OF MUSCAT & OMAN

Sultan, Said bin Taimur, born, Aug. 13, 1910, succeeded his father (as 13th of his dynasty to be Sultan of Muscat and Oman), Feb. 10, 1932.

The independent State of Muscat and Oman is situated at the easterly corner of Arabia. Its sea-board is nearly 1,000 miles long and extends from near Tibba on the west coast of the Musandam Peninsula round to Ras Darbat Ali. Ras Darbat Ali marks the boundary between the Sultanate and the territory of the Sultan of Qishn and Soqatra, a Sultanate within the Aden Protectorate. A small strip of the coast on the east side of the Musandam Peninsula from Dibbah to Khor Kalba belongs to chiefs of Trucial Oman. The Sultanate extends inland to the borders of the Rub'al Khali or "Empty Quarter" as the South-Eastern Arabian Desert is called. Physically, the Sultanate consists of 3 divisions, a coastal plain, a range of hills and a plateau. The coastal plain varies in width from 10 miles in the neighbourhood of Suwaiq to practically nothing in the vicinity of Matrah and Muscat towns, where the hills descend abruptly into the sea. The mountain range runs generally from north-west to south-east, reaching its greatest height in the Jebel Akhdar region where heights of over 9,000 feet occur. The hills are for the most part barren, but in the high area round Jebel Akhdar they are green and there is considerable cultivation. The plateau has an average height of 1,000 feet. With the exception of oases there is little or no cultivation. North-west of Muscat the coastal plain is known as the Batinah. It is fertile and prosperous, the date gardens extending for over 150 miles, Batinah dates (which ripen in the first half of July, well before the Basra dates) being famous for their flavour. The coast-line between Muscat and the province of Dhofar is barren and forbidding. The fertile province of Dhofar lies on the south-eastern coast of Arabia. Sugar cane is grown and cattle can be raised in this province. Frankincense is also exported. Its principal town is Salalah on the coast, while Ψ Murbat is the port, Ψ Gwadar, situated on the Baluchistan coast, formerly belonged to the Sultanate, but was transferred to Pakistan on September 8, 1958.

The town of Muscat is the capital and seat of Government of the Sultanate of Muscat and Oman. Possessing a natural harbour, though exposed to the north-west wind (Shumal), and at one time a town of some commercial importance, it has lost most of its trade, which has been transferred to the adjacent town of Matrah. Matrah is the starting point for the trade routes into the interior. Other ports on the Gulf of Oman are Sohar, Khaburah and Sur. None, however, provides sheltered anchorage.

The area of the Sultanate has been estimated as about 82,000 square miles and the population as 550,000. The inhabitants are for the most part Arab, but there is a strong infusion of negro blood, especially along the coast. The towns of Muscat (pop. 3,500) and Matrah (pop. 8,500) are composed of one third Indian, one third Baluch and one third Negro. The Baluchis have originally mostly migrated from Mekran and the Negroes from Zanzibar. There are few Arab residents in these two towns. In the valleys of the interior, as well as on the Batinah, date cultivation has reached a high level, and there are possibilities of agricultural development if the water supply were more certain. A Development Secretary has now been appointed. The inland tribes breed large numbers of camel, which are prized in Arabia for their quality. There are no industries of importance.

The only port of call for steamers is Ψ Muscat (one of the ports on the mail route between Bombay and Basra). 200 vessels of all nationalities with a total tonnage of 638,219 entered the port in the foreign trade of Muscat in 1958. The mail service between Muscat and Basra is normally weekly in each direction. The G.P.O., London, operates the post office in Muscat. The postage stamps are ordinary British stamps surcharged with their value in Indian currency. Cable and Wireless, Ltd., operates the telegraph office, and an automatic telephone service in Muscat and Matrah.

Inland transport is by pack animals. A motor road connects Muscat with Matrah and a motorable track extends to Khor Fakhan at the far end of the Batinah, a distance of 210 miles. There is also a motor road running up the Wadi Samail to the interior for about 180 miles. Hajar and Boshar are also connected by motorable tracks with Matrah. Cars run frequently between Muscat and the towns in the Batinah. Other routes are being developed, but none should be used without previous arrangement.

In December, 1951, a new treaty of friendship, to remain in force for 15 years, was signed between the United Kingdom and the Sultanate of Muscat and Oman.

FINANCE.

Annual Revenue (estimated).....Rs. 40,00,000

The common medium of exchange is the Maria Theresa dollar. On the coast the Indian rupee circulates, and is the official currency of the Sultanate, although not generally in use in the interior. There are also three denominations of copper coins, twenty, ten, and five, called "baizas." The normal rate of exchange is 170 baizas = 1 M.T. dollar = Rs. 3½ (approx.). The weights in use are one kiyas = the weight of six dollars or 5.9375 oz.; 24 kiyas = one Muscat maund; 10 maunds = one Farasala; 200 maunds = 1 Bahar. Rice is sold by the bag, other cereals by the following measurement: 40 Palis = one Farrah; 20 Farrahs = one Khandi.

TRADE.

	1955-56	1956-57
Total imports.....	Rs. 3,54,76,000	Rs. 2,78,93,700
Total exports.....	1,69,12,700	2,25,32,000
	1957	1958
Exports to U.K....	17,555	23,554

Trade is mainly in the hands of Hindu Banias and Muslim Khojas, many of whom derive British nationality by descent, and is mainly to and from India and Pakistan. The chief imports are cereals, tea, cigarettes, matches, sugar and cotton piece goods. The chief exports are dates, limes, pomegranates and dried fish.

CAPITAL, Ψ Muscat, population (estimated) 3,500. Muscat—British Consul-General, W. N. Monteith.

THE YEMEN

(The Mutawakilit Kingdom of the Yemen)

King of The Yemen, Imam Ahmed bin Yehya Muhammad Hamid Ud Din, b. 1895, proclaimed March 14, 1948, after the assassination in February, 1948 of his father the late King, Imam Yehya Muhammad Hamid Ud Din. Heir Apparent, Saif al Islam Muhammad al Badr.

YEMEN LEGATION IN LONDON.

41 South Street, W.1.

Chargé d'Affaires, Assayed Mohamed Ibrahim.

Yemen, "the land on the right hand" (of Syria) and the Arabia Felix of the ancients, occupies the S.W. corner of Arabia between Asir and the Aden Protectorate, with an estimated area of 74,000 square miles and a population of 4,000,000. It extends inland to the borders of the Hadramaut. The highlands and central plateau of Yemen, and the highest portions of the maritime range form the most fertile part of Arabia, with an abundant and regular rainfall. The main exports are coffee, food-grains, hides, and raisins. Trade agreements have been concluded with a number of countries. Imports from U.K. in 1958 totalled £10,245; exports to U.K., £104,598. The chief port of Yemen is Ψ Hodeida, which is at present being enlarged. From Hodeida the famous Yemeni coffee is shipped to Masawa and Aden, and thence to Europe. Aden is an important centre for imports to the Yemen.

The Imam is the head of one branch of the Zeldi sect of the Shiah Division of the Islamic religion. The ruins of Marib, the ancient Sabæan capital and its dam are in the Yemen.

On March 8, 1958, an agreement was signed in Cairo whereby the Yemen joined the United Arab Republic in a federation to be known as the United Arab States (see United Arab Republic).

FLAG: Red, with horizontal Arabian sword in centre with 3 stars above and 2 below.

CAPITAL, Taiz (pop. about 14,000); Sana'a has about 60,000 inhabitants. Other cities of the Yemen are Ψ Hodeida, Ibb, Mocha and Beidha.

BAHRAIN

Ruler, H. H. Shaikh Sulman bin Hamad Al Khalifah, K.C.M.G., K.C.I.E., born 1895; acceded February 3, 1942.

Bahrain consists of a group of low-lying islands situated halfway down the Persian Gulf some 20 miles off the east coast of Arabia. The largest of these, Bahrain Island itself, is about 30 miles long and 10 miles wide at its broadest. The two most important towns are Manama (61,837) and Muharrag (32,279). The latter is situated on a separate island of the same name which is connected with Bahrain Island by a causeway two miles long. The population of the islands at the Census held in 1959 was 143,213, of whom about half are the original inhabitants belonging to the Shia Sect, the remainder, including the ruling family, being Sunnis. There are about 3,000 Europeans and Americans (about 75 per cent. of whom live at the Bahrain Petroleum Company's town of Awali) and some 16,000 non-Bahrainis of which a considerable number are Iranians, Indians and Pakistanis. The standard of living is high among the large and influential merchant class and steadily rising among the lower social groups.

The ruling family (Al Khalifah) came originally from the neighbourhood of Kuwait and occupied Bahrain, which was then in the hands of the Persians, in 1782. The state is administered under the Ruler by a number of departmental heads whose activities are co-ordinated by the Secretariat. A small Administration Council consisting of members of the ruling family and heads of departments has been created by the Ruler to consider and advise on general matters; Health, Education, Agriculture and Water Committees exist to advise the relative departments. Local government is the responsibility of six municipalities and the Rural Affairs Department which cares for the villages. Half of the members of four of the municipal councils (Manama, Muharrag, Rifaa and Hidd) are elected by the public and half nominated by the Government; all the members of the other two, which have been recently created (Sitra and Jidhafa) are nominated by the Government. In addition to the Department of Rural Affairs, there is a Department of Social Affairs and a Labour Department. There is free primary and secondary education and free medical treatment.

In earlier days the only industry was the pearl trade, of which Bahrain was an important centre, but this has now declined and petroleum dominates the scene. Oil was discovered in 1932 and The Bahrain Petroleum Company, Limited (BAPCO), has its headquarters in Awali, some eleven miles from Manama. The company also operates a refinery and about 80 per cent. of the oil refined is piped from nearby Saudi Arabia.

The second source of revenue is that of Bahrain's traditional entrepôt trade. The island is conveniently situated to handle goods in transit to the mainland and it is estimated that not less than 70 per cent. of the imports unloaded at Bahrain were, up to a few years ago, destined for onward movement. A decline in this entrepôt trade has, however, occurred as there is a growing tendency, as new developments occur, for eastern Saudi Arabia, Qatar and other places in the Gulf to import direct. (In 1957 Bahrain re-exported 35.8 per cent. of its imports and in 1958, 36.79 per cent.) To counteract this trend and to encourage the entrepôt trade, free transit facilities were introduced in the port of Bahrain on January 1, 1958.

The principal imports and re-exports are household goods, foodstuffs, piece-goods, timber and building materials, vehicles and machinery.

Manama, the capital and commercial centre, extends for two miles along the northern shore of Bahrain Island and is a regular port of call for thirty steamship lines. Bahrain is also a port of call for B.O.A.C. and other international airlines. Banking services are provided by the Bank of Bahrain and by branches of the Eastern Bank and of the British Bank of the Middle East. There is a radio-telephone service to the United Kingdom and many other parts of the world. The electricity supply system is being extended over the island and piped water supplies are being introduced into the principal towns and villages.

The principal coin in use is a rupee introduced especially by the Reserve Bank of India for circulation in the Persian Gulf States. The value of this special rupee is the same as that of the Indian rupee (Rs. 13.285 = £1).

QATAR

Shaikh of Qatar, Alibin Abdullah bin Jasim al Thani, succeeded August 20, 1949.

Qatar is an independent Arab Shaikhdom in special treaty relations with Her Majesty's Government. It covers the peninsula of Qatar from approximately the Northern shore of Khor al Odaid to the Eastern shore of Khor al Salwa. The area is about 8,000 sq. miles, with a population estimated at 35,000.

Oil deposits are being exploited by a British Company, under a concession granted by the Shaikh, and the first oil shipment was made on December 31, 1949. Oil is now being extracted at the rate of about 8,000,000 tons a year. Considerable development has resulted from this source of income. Outside Doha and the oil company's installations, conditions are primitive. The inhabitants are semi-settled tribesmen and Bedouin; apart from employment with the oil company and on development projects, pearling, which has greatly declined in recent years, and fishing, are the only alternatives to poor grazing as a means of livelihood. Such towns as exist are merely enlarged villages, with the exception of Doha, which boasts a bazaar, a good harbour for native craft, an airport, an increasing number of modern buildings, and an expanding population. The oil company has constructed a deep water port at Umm Said on the East coast of the peninsula. Regular air services connect Qatar with the other Persian Gulf Shaikhdoms (Bahrain, the Trucial States and Kuwait), Muscat, the Lebanon, Europe and the United Kingdom. The Shaikh has a British Adviser with a staff of British technical assistants. Wireless communications are managed by Cable and Wireless, Ltd. The Post Office is run by the British G.P.O. The currency is the Indian rupee.

Foreign affairs are in the charge of the British Political Agent who lives in Doha.

CAPITAL, Doha. Population, Approximately 25,000.

FLAG: White and coffee-coloured, white portion nearer the mast; vertical indented line comprising 17 angles divides the colours.

TRUCIAL STATES

Seven independent Shaikhdoms, known collectively as the Trucial States, have treaty relations with the British Government originating in treaties to prevent slavery and the piracy, which formerly gave the name of "The Pirate Coast" to this area, and to maintain a perpetual maritime truce. The earliest treaty dates from 1820.

The British Government, by virtue of a treaty made in 1892, is responsible for the external affairs of the states through the British Political Resident in the Persian Gulf and the British Political Agent in the Trucial States. Six of the states lie on the coast of the Gulf between the Musandam peninsula in the East and the Qatar peninsula in the West and one, Fujairah, lies on the Gulf of Oman. The approximate combined area of the states is 32,000 square miles and the estimated population is about 86,000.

The main source of revenue is the export of dried fish, but some pearling is carried on. Petroleum Development (Trucial Coast) Ltd. holds concessions in all the states except Fujairah. The British Government has financed a Trucial States Development Fund to contribute to the material welfare of the people, particularly in the field of health, agriculture and education and Kuwait and Qatar have also contributed educational assistance to the states. There is a hospital in Dubai and dispensaries in all the states. All foreigners are subject to the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's courts. The Rulers of all the states meet together in the Trucial Council to discuss matters of mutual interest twice or three times a year. The currency is the Persian Gulf Indian rupee.

Abu Dhabi is the largest of the Trucial States in area, stretching from the Khor el Odaid in the West to the borders with Dubai in the region of Jebel Ali. It includes seven villages of the Buraimi oasis and a number of settlements in the series of oases known as the Liwa. Two oil companies are operating in Abu Dhabi territory, Petroleum Development (Trucial Coast) Ltd. on land and Abu Dhabi Marine Areas Ltd. in the Abu Dhabi off-shore concession area. Oil has been discovered off Das Island, where the latter company has its headquarters. There are airfields at Abu Dhabi and at Das Island. Ψ Dubai is by far the largest town in the Trucial States and has a population estimated at about 40,000. It is the main port for the import of goods into the Trucial States and the interior of Oman, and there is also a lively entrepôt trade. The value of imports in the year 1958 was nearly £5,000,000. It has a good natural harbour, improvements to which began in 1959. The main source of revenue is from customs. Wireless communications are managed by International Aeradio Limited and the Post Office is run by the British G.P.O. The British Bank of the Middle East has a branch in Dubai. Sharjah is the second port of the Trucial States and a small entrepôt trade is carried on. Sharjah possesses the airport for the Eastern end of the Trucial States and it is served by Gulf Aviation which connects it with Bahrain, Doha, Kuwait and Muscat, and Aden Airways which connects it with Aden. Sharjah has dependencies on the Batinah coast at Khor Fakhan, which forms a good natural harbour, Kalba and Dibba. The Eastern Bank has a branch in Sharjah. There is a Trade School there run by the British Government. Ajman is the smallest state, having a population of only about 2,500. It has inland enclaves at Manama and Masfut. Umm el Quwain does a small trade in dried fish. It has an oasis at Falaj Umm Mowalla where palms and some fruit are grown. Ras el Khaimah has a population of between 3,500 and 4,000. It is an ancient seaport near which some remains of archaeological interest have been found. Dates, vegetables and tobacco are grown. An agricultural experimental station and agricultural school have been opened in Ras el Khaimah territory under the Trucial States Development Scheme. Fujairah was recognized as one of the Trucial States in 1952. The inhabitants are in the main cultivators in the mountains of the Musandam peninsula and on the Batinah coast. The most important export is tobacco.

Argentina is a wedge-shaped country, occupying the greater portion of the southern part of the South American Continent, and extending from Bolivia to Cape Horn, a total distance of nearly 2,300 miles; its greatest breadth is about 930 miles. It is bounded on the north by Bolivia, on the north-east by Paraguay, Brazil, and Uruguay, on the south-east and south by the Atlantic, and on the west by Chile, from which Republic it is separated by the Cordillera de los Andes. (For the statue of Christ the Redeemer, see Chile.) On the west the mountainous Cordilleras, with their plateaus, extend from the northern to the southern boundaries; on the east are the great plains. Those in the north are thickly wooded and are known as El Gran Chaco, and further south lie the treeless pampas extending from the Bolivian boundary in the north to the Río Negro; and south of the Río Negro are the vast plains of Patagonia. Argentina thus contains a succession of level plains, broken only in Cordoba by the San Luis and Cordoba ranges, in the north-western states by the eastern spurs of the Andes, and in the southern portion of the Province of Buenos Aires by the Tandil Hills (about 2,000 ft.) and the Sierra Ventana, near Bahía Blanca (about 3,000 ft.). The Paraná River, formed by the junction of the Upper Paraná with the Paraguay River, flows through the north-eastern states into the Atlantic, and is navigable throughout its course in Argentina; the Pilcomayo, Bermejo, and Salado del Norte are also navigable for some distance from their confluence with the Paraná. In the Province of Buenos Aires the Salado del Sud flows south-east for some 300 miles into Samborombon Bay (Atlantic). In the south the Colorado and Río Negro rise in the extreme west and flow across the pampas into the Atlantic, many similar streams in Patagonia (notably the Chubut and Santa Cruz) traversing the country from the Andes to the Atlantic. The climate ranges from sub-tropical to cold temperate.

The Republic consists of 23 provinces and one federal district (Buenos Aires), comprising in all an area of 2,079,965 square miles, with an estimated population of 20,438,300 (December, 1958).

In 1958 births numbered 462,700 and deaths 164,700.

Immigration is encouraged. In 1958 the number of passengers travelling by sea was: arriving 767,800, departing 711,400.

Government.—The estuary of La Plata was discovered in 1515 by Juan Díaz de Solís, but it was not until 1534 that Pedro de Mendoza founded Buenos Aires. This city was abandoned and later founded once more by Don Juan de Garay in 1580. In 1820 (May 25) Spanish rule was defied, and in 1826 (July 9), after a long campaign of liberation conducted by General José de San Martín, the independence of Argentina was declared by the Congress of Tucumán. A revolt in September, 1955, overthrew the Government under the presidency of General Juan D. Perón and an Interim Provisional Government was formed by the late General Eduardo Lonardi. This Provisional presidency passed to General Pedro Aramburu in November, 1955.

A Constituent Assembly, elected on July 28, 1957, decided that the country should revert to the 1853 Constitution, in accordance with which, on February 23, 1958, general elections were held and Dr. Arturo Frondizi was elected President and Dr. Alejandro F. Gomez, Vice-President, for the normal period of six years. They assumed office on May 1, 1958, but several months later, owing to dissensions, Dr. Alejandro Gomez, the Vice-President, was forced to resign. The vice-presidency has not since been filled. In June, 1959, a series of sharp political crises forced the President to make wide changes in his Cabinet, which is constituted according to the list given above.

Agriculture.—Of the total area about one-third is suitable for agriculture and cattle raising. The principal productions are wheat, maize, oats, linseed, sugar, wine, wool, hides, cattle, sheep, horses, goats and pigs.

The results (official figures) of harvests are:

Crop	1957-58 Metric Tons	1958-59 Metric Tons
Wheat	5,300,000	6,500,000
Maize	(a) 4,810,000	(a) 4,500,000
Linseed	605,000	(a) 600,000
Oats	972,000	930,300
Barley	1,008,000	980,000
Rye	644,000	808,000
Sunflower-seed	(a) 810,000	(a) 800,000
Rice	(a) 206,000	(a) 210,000
Canary-seed	42,800	37,400
Cotton (fibre prod.) ..	(a) 167,500	(a) 180,000
Ground-nuts	(a) 270,000	(a) 250,000
Sugar cane	9,810,000	12,860,000
Millet	163,400	(a) 150,000
Tea	44,200	(a) 45,000
Tobacco	27,600	(a) 28,000

(a) provisional or estimated.

Mineral Production.—Oil is found in various parts of the Republic and is obtained to a considerable extent at Comodoro Rivadavia (Chubut) and Tartagal (Salta) as also at Mendoza and in other districts. A natural gas pipeline between Comodoro Rivadavia and Buenos Aires has been in operation since 1949. An oil pipeline from Campo Durán (Salta) to a refinery at San Lorenzo (Santa Fé) is in service and an extension to Buenos Aires under construction. The production of oil is the pivot on which depend Argentina's rapidly-expanding industries and to a great extent her economic and financial development. The crude oil output in 1957 and 1958 was as follows:—

	1957 Cubic Metres	1958
State	4,656,037	(a) 4,500,000
Private companies	741,839	(a) 1,168,100
Total	5,397,876	5,668,100

(a) Provisional.

Coal, tin, lead, zinc, manganese, copper, silver, gold, tungsten, beryllium and uranium are mined. The coal production is approximately 100,000 tons a year. The most important mine is that of Río Turbio (Province of Santa Cruz) the development of which is now being given special attention by the State.

Industries.—Meat-packing is one of the principal industries; flour-milling, sugar-refining, and the wine industry are also important. In recent years great strides have been made by the textile industry and the development of a wide range of heavy and light industries is actively encouraged by the Government.

Communications.—There are 27,874 miles of railways of which 15,604 miles are broad gauge

(5' 6"), 1,940 miles standard (4' 8½"), 9,664 miles of 1 metre, 537 miles of 0.75 metre and 129 miles of 0.60 metre. They are all State property. The combined national and provincial road network totals approximately 91,500 miles of which 7,500 miles are surfaced. There are air services between Argentina and all the neighbouring Republics, Europe, Canada and the U.S.A.

The tonnage of vessels entering Argentine ports was 11,259,600 in 1957 and 12,243,300 in 1958. Of the latter figure, 1,762,600 tons were Argentine, 2,502,000 British, 1,089,400 Norwegian, 644,700 U.S.A., 1,071,400 Liberian, 894,500 Dutch, 820,100 Italian, 470,800 French, 595,300 German, 247,800 Brazilian, 329,300 Danish, and 609,000 Swedish (1958 provisional figures).

There are 75 radio broadcasting stations of which 12 are short-wave and 63 medium-wave (55 commercial and 8 official). There is one television station at Buenos Aires and three new stations are planned to open in 1960 (Ca-De-Te, Dicon and Río de la Plata). Television receivers numbered 214,926 at the end of 1958.

Defence.—The Army is organized in 5 infantry, 1 motorised, 1 armoured and 3 cavalry divisions and 3 mountain groups and numbers about 3,000 officers, 5,000 N.C.O.s and 65-70,000 men on a peace footing.

The Navy consists of 2 cruisers, 1 aircraft carrier, 3 training cruisers, 11 destroyers, 7 frigates, 1 ice-breaker, 8 minesweepers, 9 motor torpedo boats, 1 submarine, 23 landing craft, 7 oilers, 8 transports, 2 survey ships and auxiliary vessels; 4 squadrons Naval Air Arm. Strength about 2,000 officers and 25,000 men.

The Air Force consists of 9 operational groups and a training force. The operational groups are 1 bomber, 2 fighter, 2 tactical, 1 observation and 3 transport. The aircraft include Meteor IV., Lincoln, Lancaster, Viking, Bristol 170 and Dove.

Education.—Primary Education is free and compulsory for four years between the ages of 6 and 14. The scattered population of the country districts constitutes a problem in attendance which is being gradually solved. Illiteracy of adults has fallen in the last 20 years; it is now almost non-existent except in the north and far south, where it is still about 42 per cent. Secondary Education is controlled by the National Government in National Colleges, in Normal Schools, and in Special Institutes for Commerce, Arts and Crafts, Mining, Agriculture, &c. There are National Universities at Córdoba, Buenos Aires, San Miguel de Tucumán, Santa Fé, Mendoza, La Plata and Bahía Blanca.

Language and Literature.—Spanish is the language of the Republic and the literature of Spain is accepted as an inheritance by the people. There is little indigenous literature before the break from Spain, but all branches have flourished since the latter half of the nineteenth century, particularly journalism. Under the Perón régime many newspapers and reviews were closed down and others turned into Government mouthpieces. Since the 1955 revolution the traditional freedoms have been restored. Over 400 daily newspapers are published in Argentina, including 64 in the city of Buenos Aires. The English language newspapers are the Buenos Aires Herald (daily) and Standard (weekly). There are numerous other foreign language newspapers.

Finance.—Original Budget estimates for 1958-59 revealed a deficit of Paper pesos 48,400,000,000 in an expenditure of approximately 100,000,000,000. These figures have since been revised and the Government hoped to reduce the deficit to pesos 7,000,000,000.

Austria is a country of Central Europe bounded on the north by Czechoslovakia, on the south by Italy and Yugoslavia, on the east by Hungary, on the north-west by Germany and on the west by Switzerland. Its area is 34,064 square miles and its population 6,968,500 (1954).

Government.—The Austrian Republic comprises nine provinces (Vienna, Lower Austria, Upper Austria, Salzburg, Tyrol, Vorarlberg, Carinthia, Styria and Burgenland) and was established in 1918 on the break-up of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. On March 13, 1938, as a result of the Anschluss, Austria (Oesterreich) was incorporated into the German Reich under the name Ostmark. After the liberation of Vienna in 1945, the Austrian Republic was reconstituted within the frontiers of 1937 and, after a period of provisional government, a freely elected Government took office on December 20, 1945. The country was divided at this time into four zones occupied respectively by the U.K., U.S.A., U.S.S.R. and France, while Vienna was jointly occupied by the four Powers. On May 15, 1955, the Austrian State Treaty was signed in Vienna by the Foreign Ministers of the four Powers and of Austria. This Treaty recognized the re-establishment of Austria as a sovereign, independent and democratic state, having the same frontiers as on January 1, 1938. It entered into force on July 27, 1955.

There is a National Assembly of 165 Deputies. At the last general elections in May, 1959, the Government Coalition of Austrian People's and Socialist Parties increased its large majority by one seat. The present state of the parties is as follows:

Austrian People's Party	79
Socialist Party	78
Freedom Party (right wing)	8

Religion and Education.—The predominant religion is Roman Catholic. Elementary education is free and compulsory between the ages of 6 and 14, and there are good facilities for secondary, technical and professional education. There are Universities at Vienna, Graz and Innsbruck.

Language and Literature.—The language of Austria is German, but the rights of the Slovene- and Croat-speaking minorities in Carinthia, Styria and Burgenland are protected. The press is free. There are now 11 daily papers in Vienna and 23 in the provinces, as well as numerous weeklies and monthlies.

Production and Industry.—Agriculture is the most important industry, the arable land producing wheat, rye, barley, oats, maize, potatoes, sugar beet, turnips, and miscellaneous crops. Many varieties of fruit trees flourish and the vineyards produce excellent wine. The pastures support horses, cattle and pigs. Timber forms a valuable source of Austria's indigenous wealth with about 35 per cent. of the total land area consisting of forest areas. Coniferous species predominate and account for more than 80 per cent. of the timber under cultivation. Hard-wood trees are mainly confined to Lower Austria. Spruce is the most common among the conifers (about 60 per cent. of the total) and beech is the most prevalent of the broad leaf trees.

Austria has important heavy industries. Production figures for 1956 include (in thousands of metric tons): iron ore 3,258, pig iron 1,736, crude steel 2,077, raw magnesite 1,083, nitrogenous fertilisers 662, paper 421, chemical pulp 404. In addition 45,612 motor cycles and motor-scooters, 18,432 tractors and 4,224 motor lorries were produced.

Hydro-electric power offers great possibilities in Austria. Much has already been done to develop it, and a long-term plan has been evolved for further development including greater export of electric current to surrounding countries. Production in 1956 was 11,718 million kWh.

Minerals.—There are large iron ore deposits and, in Eastern Austria, large oil deposits. In addition there are useful deposits of brown coal, magnesite, salt and lead. There are also limited deposits of copper.

A Kingdom of Western Europe, with a total area of 11,775 square miles and a population, Dec. 31, 1958 (including Eupen and Malmédy) of 9,078,600. The Kingdom of Belgium is bounded on the N. by the Kingdom of the Netherlands, on the S. by France, on the E. by Germany and Luxembourg, and on the W. by the North Sea.

Belgium has a frontier of 831 miles, and a sea-board of 42 miles. The Meuse and its tributary, the Sambre, divide it into two distinct regions, that in the west being generally level and fertile, while the table-land of the Ardennes, in the east, has for the most part a poor soil. The "polders" near the coast, which are protected by dykes against floods, cover an area of 193 sq. miles. The highest hill, Baraque Michel, rises to a height of 2,230 feet, but the mean elevation of the whole country does not exceed 526 feet. The principal rivers are the Scheldt and the Meuse. Brussels has a mean temperature of 49° F. (summer 65°, winter 37°).

Belgium is inhabited by two distinct races, the Flemish, of Germanic stock, and the Walloons, of Latin stock. Since 1938 there has been an increase in the Flemish population by 100,000 and a decrease in the Walloon population of about the same number. Nearly all the inhabitants are Roman Catholics.

GOVERNMENT.—The kingdom formed part of the "Low Countries" (Netherlands) from 1815 until Oct. 24, 1830, when a National Congress proclaimed its independence, and on June 4, 1831, Prince Leopold of Coburg was chosen hereditary king. The separation from the Netherlands and the neutrality and inviolability of Belgium were guaranteed by a Conference of the European Powers, and by the Treaty of London (April 29, 1839), the famous "Scrap of Paper," signed by Austria, France, Great Britain, Prussia, The Netherlands, and Russia. On Aug. 2, 1914, the Germans invaded Belgium, in violation of the terms of the treaty.

The Kingdom was again invaded by Germany on May 10, 1940. The whole Kingdom eventually fell into enemy hands and was occupied by Nazi troops until the victorious advance of the Allies in September, 1944. A monument at Hertain in the province of Hainault (where British forces crossed the frontier on Sept. 3, 1944), set up by the Anglo-Belgian Union, was unveiled on St. George's Day, 1949.

According to the Constitution of 1831 the form of government is a constitutional representative and hereditary monarchy with a bicameral legislature, consisting of the King, the Senate and the Chamber of Representatives. The Senate is partly directly and partly indirectly elected (or co-opted) for 4 years. 100 members out of 175 are directly elected. The Chamber of Representatives consists of not more than 1 per 40,000 inhabitants and is elected directly by all adult nationals.

The elections of June 1, 1958, returned to the Senate 90 Social Christians (Catholics), 65 Socialists, 18 Liberals, 1 Communist and 1 other, total, 175; and to the Chamber of Representatives 104 Social Christians (Catholics), 81 Socialists, 22 Liberals, 2 Communists and 3 others, total 222.

PRODUCTION.—Belgium is essentially a manufacturing country. With no natural resources except coal, of which an average of 30,000,000 tons is mined yearly, industry is based largely on the processing for re-export of imported raw materials. A large proportion of the population is engaged in agriculture and forestry, the former supplying four-fifths of the population's needs. Principal industries are coal, steel and metal products (Mons, Charleroi, Liège, Namur, Hainault, Brabant and Limburg), textiles (Ghent, Bruges, Courtrai, Verviers, etc.), glass, nitrogen, heavy chemicals, sugar, breweries, etc. Steel output in 1958 was 5,912,000 metric tons.

EDUCATION.—Schools are maintained by communal taxation, with provincial and State grants, while many are under ecclesiastical control, Roman Catholic largely predominating. There are 261 State grammar and high schools. In addition there are 83 elementary schools under the control of the State and 296 under the control of local government authorities. There are 1,037 private colleges and secondary schools. The Universities of Ghent and Liège are maintained by the State; those of Brussels and Louvain are independent institutions. After considerable opposition, Ghent University was in 1930 turned into a purely Flemish institution.

LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.—Flemish is spoken in the provinces of West Flanders, East Flanders, Antwerp, Limburg, and the northern half of Brabant, and French in the provinces of Hainault, Namur, Luxembourg, Liège and the southern half of Brabant. The town of Brussels is bilingual. The official languages are both Flemish and French, and also German in the districts acquired after the 1914-18 war. The literature of France and the Netherlands is supplemented by a current of indigenous Belgian literary activity, in both French and Flemish. Maurice Maeterlinck (1862-1949) was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1911. Louvain library, which ranked among the great libraries of the world, was destroyed by German invaders in the war of 1914-18; reconstructed, mainly by American funds, after peace was declared, it was again destroyed in May, 1940, by German invaders. There are about 58 daily newspapers (French, Flemish and some German) in Belgium.

COMMUNICATIONS.—On Dec. 31, 1958, there were 4,813 kilometres of normal gauge railways operated by the Belgian National Railways, of which 864 kilometres were electrified; the length of light railways operated in 1958 was 1,661 kilometres (of which 1,051 were electrified). Belgian National Railways also operate 8,543 kilometres of regular bus routes. On Dec. 31, 1958, there were 710,908 telephone subscribers in Belgium. Ship canals include Ghent-Terneuzen (18 miles, of which half is in Belgium and half in the Netherlands; constructed 1825-27); Roupeil (20 miles, by which ships drawing 18 ft. reach Brussels from the sea; opened in 1922); and Bruges (from Zeebrugge on the North Sea to Bruges, 6½ miles; opened in 1922). The Albert Canal (79 miles), which figured prominently in the fighting (Sept. 1944), for the relief of Belgium and the Netherlands and for the invasion of Germany, links Liège with Antwerp; it was completed in 1939 at the cost of £13,500,000, and accommodates barges up to 1,350 tons. Plans for the expansion and modernization of the port of Antwerp were announced in June, 1956. The estimated cost of the project is £36,000,000, of which the State will contribute £31,000,000, and work is expected to be complete by 1963. Inland waterway approaches to Antwerp are also to be improved. The river Meuse from the Dutch to the French frontiers, the river Sambre between Namur and Monceau, the river Scheldt from Antwerp-Ghent and the Brussels-Charleroi Canal will be widened or deepened to take barges up to 1,350 tons. These improvements are expected to be completed in 1966 and to cost £78,500,000. There are 9,958 kilometres of State roads and 1,337 kilometres of provincial roads. Most of the maritime trade of Belgium is carried on in foreign bottoms, the mercantile marine consisting (1958) of 99 vessels (619,500 tons), in addition to which there are 460 fishing boats (29,412 tons).

The Belgian National Airline operates regular services between Brussels and London, Manchester and many continental centres, as well as overseas services to the United States, the Congo and the U.S.S.R. A passenger and mail-carrying helicopter service, the first of its kind in the world, was inaugurated in 1953. Many foreign air-lines call at Brussels.

The Capital, BRUSSELS, had a population (Dec. 31, 1957) of 993,766 (with suburbs). Other towns are Ψ Antwerp, the chief port (534,113); Ψ Ghent (229,860), which has large cotton and flax spinning mills, and is the second port of importance after Antwerp, while its flower shows are famous; Liège (405,095), the centre of the iron industry, and Charleroi (286,667), the important coal-mining and metallurgical centre; Mechlin or Malines (63,298); Ψ Ostend (54,297); Ψ Bruges (52,278). Brussels is 224 miles from London; transit, 8 hours by rail and sea.

THE BELGIAN CONGO

Governor-General, His Excellency M. Henri Cornélis.

The Independent State of the Congo, founded in 1885, became a Belgian Colony on Nov. 15, 1908. Situated between long. 12°–31° E. and lat. 5° N.–13° S., the colony comprises an area of 905,582 sq. miles, with a native population (Dec. 31, 1958) of 13,540,182 and a non-native population of 112,759, of whom about 79 per cent. are Belgians.

It is administered by the Minister of the Belgian Congo and Ruanda-Urundi at Brussels, assisted by a Legislative Council, provisionally formed of the 14 members of the Colonial Council and of two representatives elected from their members by each of the six Provincial Councils of the Belgian Congo. The Governor-General in Leopoldville is assisted by a Government Council of nominated members.

On January 13, 1958, the Belgian Government announced a programme of political reforms for the Belgian Congo, leading eventually to self-government and independence. During 1960 the nominated advisory councils will be transformed into largely-elected bodies, to be progressively endowed with legislative powers. A Legislative Council (see above) and a General Council, replacing the Government Council, will be the forerunner of Upper and Lower Houses of Parliament.

The Congo River is navigable from its mouth at Banana for 95 miles to Matadi, the chief port, which handles 68 per cent. of the total imports and 46 per cent. of exports; but between that place and Leopoldville, on Stanley Pool, there occur rapids and falls which have been avoided by a railroad 227 miles in length. Above Leopoldville the main stream is navigable for 1,000 miles to Stanleyville and there is another major waterways service to Port Franqui on the River Kasai. Services are also operated on many other tributaries. From Stanleyville there is a further 78 miles of railway to Ponthierville whence the Lualaba (as the Congo is called in its upper reaches) is again navigable to Kindu. Another railway from Kindu to Albertville on Lake Tanganyika (444 miles) in conjunction with the lake steamers and the Tanganyika railway, gives a connection to Dar-es-Salaam. From Port Franqui there is a direct rail route via Elizabethville to Sakania on the Rhodesian frontier (1,134 miles) and on to Capetown. A branch line to Dilolo on the Angolan frontier connects with the Benguela railway to Lobito and another to Kabalo on the Kindu-Albertville line with the eastern system. A further connection between the two systems is provided by the upper Lualaba which is navigable for part of the year between Kabalo and Bukama on the Port Franqui-Elizabethville line. Other railways are from Boma-Tchela in the Mayumbe (87 miles) and Aketi-Mungbere in the north-east (447 miles) with a branch to Bondo. There are regular Sabena air services to all the principal centres and air charter services are available to many smaller places. External air services are operated to Kano, Tripoli, Rome, Lisbon, Cairo, Athens, Brussels, Luanda, Nairobi and Johannesburg and to London (South African Airways) and New York (Pan-American). From Brazzaville, the capital of French Equatorial Africa, directly across the river from Leopoldville (20 minutes by ferry) there are French and Dutch air services to Europe, South Africa and Rhodesia.

Motor roads including private roads total 87,900 miles, of which 21,000 miles are classified as of national importance. Principal roads include those from Leopoldville to Matadi, Luluabourg, Elizabethville and Sakania, from Luluabourg to Bukavu and Usumbura, from Stanleyville to Bukavu, and from Aketi to the Sudan frontier and on to the Nile. Extensive road building is planned, of which 1,500 asphalted miles will be completed by 1960. These will include a direct route between Stanleyville and Bukavu and thence to Usumbura. A complete system of telegraphic communication has been established throughout the Colony and is connected with the international system.

Apart from the coastal district in the West which is fairly dry, the rainfall averages between 60 and 80 inches. The average temperature is about 80° F., but in the South the winter temperature can fall nearly to freezing point. Sleeping sickness, once very prevalent and destructive, is now decreasing, and malaria is under control in Leopoldville and Matadi.

Extensive forest cover the central districts.

Production.—Oil palms are plentiful, and supply an increasing trade in palm-oil and palm-kernels. Cotton, cocoa, rubber and coffee are successfully planted. The Colony is rich in minerals. The metallic mineral output in 1958 was: copper, 237,562 tons; raw zinc concentrates, 200,017 tons; coal, 29,323 tons; manganese ore, 338,145 tons; cobalt (alloys), 4,342 tons; (granulated), 4,263 tons; cassiterite, 11,783 tons and smelted tin, 2,684 tons. Refined gold amounted in 1958 to 20,957 kg.; diamonds (Lubilash) 16,004,145 carats and (Kasai) 669,329 carats. Extensive radium deposits exist in the Elisabethville Province, where there are enormous deposits of copper. Bukama is the centre of an extensive tin-belt, and alluvial and reef gold are found in the North-eastern Congo. Diamond-bearing gravels are worked in the south. There are important secondary industries, the main products being: cotton fabrics, blankets, sacks, footwear, clothing, beer, cigarettes, paint, cement and sugar. There are very large reserves of hydro-electric power.

Language, Religion and Education.—The people are mainly of Bantu-Negro stock, divided into semi-autonomous tribes, each speaking a Bantu tongue. Swahili, a Bantu dialect with an admixture of Arabic, is the nearest approach to a common language in the East and South, and Lingala along the river. It is estimated there are 5,000,000 African Christians in the Colony (Roman Catholic 4,200,000, Protestant 800,000). Most schools are run by Missions, usually with a Government grant, but the number of State schools is increasing. Multi-racial universities have been established at Leopoldville and Elisabethville. In 1958 there was a total of 1,533,314 pupils in educational establishments. The official languages are French and Flemish.

The chief exports are copper, palm-kernels and palm oil, coffee, diamonds, cotton and ores (manganese, wolfram, etc.).

Ruanda and Urundi (Mandated July, 1919, now Trust Territory), formed the N.W. corner of German East Africa from 5° S. lat. to the S. borders of Uganda and have an area of about 20,540 square miles, with a total native population (1957) of 4,630,089, 7,257 Europeans, and 2,856 Asiatics. The territories lie W. of the Victoria Nyanza and N.E. of Lake Tanganyika, through which are their respective outlets. The chief crop is coffee, which forms one of the territories' most important exports. Other exports are livestock and hides derived from the large herds maintained by the African population. The administrative capitals are Nianza (Ruanda) and Kitega (Urundi), the commercial capitals being Kigali (Ruanda) and Usumbura (Urundi). There are 4,870 miles of roads and no railways. Budget (1959): Revenue francs 966,000,000; Expenditure francs 1,160,000,000.

CONSULAR OFFICES.

BHUTAN

Bhutan (area, about 18,000 sq. miles; pop. about 700,000, mainly Buddhists) is an independent State bounded on the North and East by Tibet, on the South by India, and on the West by Sikkim, which is now a Protectorate of the Republic of India. In 1949, a treaty was concluded with the Government of India under which the Kingdom of Bhutan agreed to be guided by the Government of India in regard to its external relations, but it still retains complete independence, issues its own passports and has diplomatic representatives in Tibet as well as in India. It also receives from the Government of India an annual payment of about £35,000 as compensation for portions of its territory annexed by the British Government in India in 1864. The principal cottage industries are weaving, metal works and crafts, and the main exports are timber, rice and wheat. The present Ruler is Maharaja Jigme Dorji Wangchuk who was born in 1929 and succeeded his father in March, 1952. The Government of India has a diplomatic representative whose headquarters are situated at Gangtok, capital of the neighbouring State of Sikkim.

Consul-General, Señor Jorge H. Sanchez Peña.

There are Bolivian Consular Offices in Liverpool, Birmingham, Hull, Cardiff and Glasgow.

The Republic of Bolivia extends between lat. 10° and 23° S. and long. 57° 30' and 69° 45' W., and its area is estimated at 415,000 square miles with an estimated population (Dec. 31, 1953) of 3,990,000. The Republic derives its name from its liberator, Simon Bolívar (born 1783, died 1830).

The executive power is vested in a President elected for 4 years by direct popular vote. A President is ineligible for re-election for a further term until 4 years have elapsed after a former term has ended. A Vice-President is elected for four years and is ineligible for re-election either as President or Vice-President. In May, 1951, a military coup d'état took place and a junta of senior officers was formed under the leadership of General Ballivian. In April, 1952, after three days of heavy fighting, the National Revolutionary Movement took over the government of the country.

The National Congress consists of a Senate of 18 members elected for 6 years, with one-third renewable every two years and a Chamber of Deputies of 68 members elected for four years, one-half renewable every two years.

The chief topographical feature is the great central plateau (65,000 square miles) over 500 miles in length, at an average altitude of 12,500 feet above sea level, between the two great chains of the Andes, which traverse the country from south to north, and contain, in Illampu, Illimani, and Sajama, three of the highest peaks of the western hemisphere. The total length of the navigable streams is about 12,000 miles, the principal rivers being the Itenes, Beni, Mamore, and Madre de Dios.

Mining and agriculture are the principal industries, the mineral productions being very valuable. The ancient silver mines of Potosi are now worked chiefly for tin, but gold, partly dug and partly washed, is obtained on the Eastern Cordillera of the Andes; the tin output is, after those of Malaya and Indonesia, the largest in the world, 18,012 metric tons being exported in 1958: copper, antimony, wolfram, bismuth, salt and sulphur are also found, and petroleum is being produced in growing quantities. The Republic has been self-supporting in petroleum and its by-products since January 1954 and exports have started to the Argentine, Chile, Brazil, Paraguay and Peru. Its agricultural produce consists chiefly of rice, barley, oats, maize, cotton, indigo, rubber, cacao, potatoes, cinchona bark, medicinal herbs, brazil nuts, &c. Manufactures are in a very undeveloped state, but the Government plans to encourage their development under a policy of "diversification of the economy." There are 1,454 miles of railways in operation. New lines are under construction from Corumbá to Santa Cruz (405 miles) and from Yacuiba to Santa Cruz (312), both of which are virtually completed. Work on a third new line, from Cochabamba to Santa Cruz, was suspended some years ago. Another railway project from La Paz to Coroico is expected to take two more years to complete. There are about 10,950 miles of telegraphs, and wireless services between Riberalta, La Paz, Cobija, Capitandí (Chaco). There is direct railway communication to the sea at Antofagasta (32 hours), Arica (10 hours), and Mollendo (2 days), and also to Buenos Aires ($3\frac{1}{2}$ days); branch lines run from Oruro to Cochabamba, and from Rio Mulato to Potosi, and from Potosi to Sucre, the legal capital. The principal railway line is the Antofagasta and Bolivia railroad (749 miles), which is British owned. Communication with Peru is effected by rail to Guaquí and thence by steamer across Lake Titicaca to the railroad at Puno.

Commercial Aviation in Bolivia is conducted by Pan American-Grace Airways and Braniff International Airways (American) and Lloyd Aéreo Boliviano (Bolivian), the two former providing international connexions with U.S.A., West coast South American countries, Canal Zone, Brazil and Argentina; Lloyd Aéreo Boliviano, attending to local flights, links La Paz with Oruro, Cochabamba, Santa Cruz and Trinidad, &c., and connects with LAN of Chile, Argentine Airlines and Cruzeiro do Sul of Brazil. There is a new line from La Paz to Asunción and Buenos Aires, also operated by Lloyd Aéreo Boliviano.

Bolivia is without a sea-coast, having been deprived of the ports of Tocopilla, Cobija, Mejillones, and Antofagasta by the "Pacific War" of 1879-1882. The Peace Army amounts to about 5,000 all ranks, the War Effective being about 105,000.

Language and Literature.—The official language of the country is Spanish, but the Indian inhabitants (about two-thirds of the population) speak either Quichua or Aymará, the two races being more or less equal in numbers.

The Roman Catholic religion is established and subsidized. Elementary education is compulsory and free and there are secondary schools in urban centres. The high percentage of illiterates is yielding to modern methods; all illiterates under 21 are nominally compelled to attend school. Provision is also made for higher education; in addition to St. Francisco Xavier's University at Sucre, founded in 1624, there are seven other universities, the largest being the University of San Andres at La Paz. Bolivian literature has not yet produced authors of world-wide renown. There are six daily newspapers in Bolivia, with an estimated daily circulation of 100,000.

FINANCE.

The 1959 figures for estimated revenue and expenditure are balanced at Bs. 368,000,000,000.

On December 15, 1956, a number of decrees were issued to introduce a programme to stabilise the currency, in support of which the International Monetary Fund and the U.S. Government provided a fund of U.S. $25,000,000. Artificial rates of exchange, import licensing and price subsidies and controls were abolished. The Boliviano was made freely convertible for all purposes without restriction. After this policy was introduced, the rate was Bs. 7.500 = U.S. $1, and by May 1959 it had fallen to Bs. 11.865 = U.S. $1.

TRADE.

Exports to U.K. . .	£16,010,848	£13,248,548
Imports from U.K.	1,548,720	1,171,862

The principal exports are tin (almost all of which is exported to the U.K.), lead and antimony ores, wolfram, cocoa and hides; Bolivia also ranks as the second rubber-exporting country in South America after Brazil. The chief imports are wheat and flour, sugar, iron and steel products, machinery and textiles.

SEAT OF GOVERNMENT, La Paz. Population (estimated 1957) 339,279. Other large centres are Cochabamba (87,200), Potosi (51,100), Santa Cruz (58,300), Sucre, the legal capital and seat of the judiciary (53,800), Tarija (19,100), and Oruro (75,500).

POSITION AND EXTENT.

Brazil, the most extensive State of South America, discovered in 1500 by Pedro Alvares Cabral, Portuguese navigator, is bounded on the north by the Atlantic Ocean, the Guianas, Colombia and Venezuela; on the west by Peru, Bolivia, Paraguay, and Argentina; on the south by Uruguay; and on the east by the Atlantic Ocean. Brazil extends between lat. 5° 16' N. and 33° 45' S. and long. 34° 45' and 73° 59' 22" W., being 2,685 miles from north to south, and 2,690 from west to east, with a coast-line on the Atlantic of 4,604 miles. The Republic comprises an area of 3,289,440 square miles with a population (estimated July, 1958) of 63,101,627.

The northern States of Amazonas and Pará are mainly wide, low-lying, forest-clad plains. The central state of the Mato Grosso is principally plateau land and the eastern and southern States are traversed by successive mountain ranges interspersed with fertile valleys. The principal ranges are Serra do Mar in São Paulo; the Serra Geral (Caparaó 9,393 feet) between Minas Gerais and Espírito Santo, the Serra do Mantiqueira (Itatiaia, 9,163 feet), and the Serra do Espinhaço (Itacolomi, 5,748 feet), in the south-east of Minas Gerais; the Serra do Paranán, between Goiás and Minas Gerais, the Serra dos Aymores, which divide Espírito Santo from Minas Gerais; and the Serra do Gurgueia, Branca and Araípe, which envelop Piauí.

Brazil is unequalled for its rivers. The River Amazon has tributaries which are themselves great rivers, and flows from the Peruvian Andes to the Atlantic, with a total length of some 4,000 miles. Its principal northern tributaries are the Rio Branco, Rio Negro, and Japurá; its southern tributaries are the Juruá, Purus, Madeira and Tapajós, while the Xingu meets it within 200 miles of its outflow into the Atlantic. The Tocantins and Araguaya flow northwards from the Plateau of Mato Grosso and the mountains of Goiás to the Gulf of Pará. The Parnaíba flows from the encircling mountains of Piauí into the Atlantic. The São Francisco rises in the South of Minas Gerais and traverses Bahia on its way to the eastern coast, between Alagoas and Sergipe. The Paraguay, rising in the south-west of Mato Grosso, flows through Paraguay to its confluence with the Paraná, which rises in the mountains of that name and divides Brazil from Paraguay. On the Iguassu, which unites with the Upper Paraná at the Brazil-Argentine-Paraguay boundary, are the majestic Falls of the Iguassu (200 ft.), and on the São Francisco are the no less famous falls of Paulo Afonso (260 ft.).

GOVERNMENT.—Brazil was colonized by Portugal in the early part of the sixteenth century, and in 1822 became an independent empire under Dom Pedro, son of the refugee King João VI. of Portugal. On Nov. 15, 1889, Dom Pedro II., second of the line, was dethroned and a republic was proclaimed. Constitutional Government, under the Constitution of 1891, was suspended after the revolution of 1930. Dr. Getúlio Vargas, who had been Chief of the Provisional Government since 1930, was elected President and assumed office on July 20, 1934. By a coup d'état of Nov. 20, 1937, he closed Congress, abolished the old political parties and issued a new Constitution. On Sept. 18, 1946, the Estado Novo established by Vargas was superseded by a new constitution, limiting the Presidential term to 5 years (in place of 7) and restoring a Congress of two chambers. In October, 1955, elections took place in which Dr. Juscelino Kubitschek was elected the new President.

PRODUCTION.—There are large and valuable mineral deposits including among others, iron ore (hematite), manganese, bauxite, beryllium, chrome, nickel, tungsten, cassiterite, lead, gold, monazite (containing rare earths and thorium) and zirconium. Diamonds and precious and semi-precious stones are also found. The mineral wealth is still exploited to only a very limited extent. Production is increasing, but is capable of great further development. The iron ore deposits are particularly rich. The estimated production of iron ore in 1958 was nearly 5,000,000 tons. Oil production in 1958 was estimated at nearly 19,000,000 barrels. Coal production in 1957 was estimated at 2,000,000 tons. 1,300,000 tons of steel ingots were produced in 1957 and 45,310,000 barrels of refined petroleum products in 1958.

Foreign investments without exchange cover totalled U.S. $102,400,000 in 1958, slightly below the 1957 figure. These investments were in a variety of industries, although the vast majority went into the automobile industry, especially for the manufacture of components. The chemical and pharmaceutical industry was next in importance. Other products now being manufactured in Brazil include trolley buses, diesel engines, powdered milk, electrolytic tin, calculating machines and travelling cranes.

Brazil's agricultural and vegetable produce is abundant, coffee, cotton, maize, sugar, cocoa, rice, citrus fruits and bananas being the main agricultural products, and rubber, carnauba wax, maté, jute and other fibres being the main vegetable extracts. Timber is also important.

The main exports of agricultural produce in 1958 were:—

	Metric Tons	Value $U.S.
Coffee	772,591	687,514,000
Cotton	40,196	24,769,000
Cocoa	104,017	89,592,000

Coffee is grown mainly in the States of São Paulo and Paraná and to a lesser extent in Minas Gerais and Espírito Santo.

DEFENCE.—The peace-time strength of the Army is 100,000, with an immediate reserve of 250,000. The Navy consists of 1 aircraft carrier, 2 cruisers, 19 destroyers and escorts, 11 corvettes, 3 submarines, 15 submarine chasers, 1 sail training ship, 3 ocean-going tugs, 3 survey vessels, 2 river monitors and various auxiliaries. The strength of the Navy is about 25,000 all ranks. The Air Force is the largest in South America, with 650 aircraft and a strength of 35,000 all ranks.

EDUCATION.—Primary education is carried out by State governments and municipalities and private initiative, in some cases with a Federal subsidy. In 1957 there were 80,178 primary schools (not including kindergartens) with an enrolment at the beginning of the school year (March) of 5,406,251 pupils.

Secondary education is carried out by the Federal Government, State and Municipal Governments and by private schools. In 1957, there were 2,945 schools and 668,845 pupils. Other establishments classified at an intermediate level are: 1,058 commercial schools with an enrolment of 139,278 pupils; 1,044 normal schools with 74,157 scholars; 401 industrial training schools with 19,131 pupils; 64 agricultural schools with 3,671 students.

A total of 79,505 students attended 20 Federal and State Universities and 385 other establishments offering courses at a university level, in 1957.

LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.—Portuguese is the language of the country, but Italian, Spanish, German, Japanese and Arabic are spoken by immigrant minorities, and newspapers of considerable circulation are produced in those languages. English and French are currently spoken by educated Brazilians.

Until the second quarter of the nineteenth century Brazilian literature was dominated by Portugal. French influence is traceable for the next half century, since when a national school has come into existence and there are many modern authors of high standing. Public libraries have been established in urban centres and there is a flourishing national press with widely circulated daily and weekly newspapers; 25 daily newspapers are published at Rio de Janeiro.

COMMUNICATIONS.—In 1958 there were 37,414 kilometres of railways in service, largely of 1 metre gauge, but including some 4,000 kilometres of other gauges. Traffic carried in 1957 was—Passengers 375,000,000, Freight 40,000,000 tons, Livestock 5,000,000 head. During 1958 the ports of Rio de Janeiro and Santos together were used by 27,200,000 tons of shipping.

Eight foreign airlines, Air France, SAS, KLM, Aerolíneas Argentinas, Swissair, Iberia, Alitalia and Lufthansa (in addition to Panair do Brasil) operate services between Brazil and Europe. Pan American World Airways, Braniff, Varig and Real Aerovias Brazil operate services between Brazil and U.S.A., and there are connections with all Latin American countries. Eight major domestic airlines, as well as the Brazilian Air Force, maintain services throughout the country. During 1958 the airports of Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo alone recorded 184,000 aircraft arrivals and departures.

Postal facilities in Brazil include approximately 5,750 post offices and 50,000 miles of telegraph. In 1957, 874,000 telephones were in use, of which about 87 per cent. are dial operated.

Minister, His Excellency Georgi Petkov Zenguliev
(1958).

The Republic of Bulgaria is bounded on the north by Roumania, on the west by Yugoslavia, on the east by the Black Sea, and on the south by Greece and Turkey. The total area is approximately 43,000 square miles, with a population (Dec., 1956) of 7,629,254. The prevailing religion of the Bulgarians is the Eastern Orthodox Church (83 per cent.); Moslems (Turks and Pomaks) (14 per cent.) and various others (3 per cent.). For secular purposes the Gregorian (Western) Calendar is in use.

A Principality of Bulgaria was created by the Treaty of Berlin (July 13, 1878) and in 1885 Eastern Roumelia was added to the newly-created principality. In 1908 the country was declared to be an independent kingdom, the area at that date being 37,202 square miles, with a population of 4,337,500. In 1912-13 a successful war of the Balkan League against Turkey increased the size of the kingdom, but in August, 1913, a short campaign against the remaining members of the League reduced the acquired area, and led to the surrender of Southern Dobrudja to Roumania. On Oct. 12, 1915, Bulgaria entered the War on the side of the Central Powers by declaring war on Serbia. She thus became involved in the defeats of 1918, and on Sept. 29, 1918, made an unconditional surrender to the Allied Powers. On Nov. 29, 1919, she signed the Treaty of Neuilly, which ceded to the Allies her Thracian territories (later handed over to Greece) and some territory on the western frontier to Yugoslavia.

Nazi troops entered the country on March 3, 1941, and occupied Black Sea ports, but Bulgaria was not officially at war with the Soviet Union. On August 26, 1944, the government declared Bulgaria to be "neutral in the Russo-German war" and delegates to Cairo sought terms of peace from Great Britain and the United States. The Soviet Union refused to recognize the so-called "neutrality" and called upon Bulgaria to declare war against Germany, and no satisfactory reply being received on Sept. 5, 1944, the U.S.S.R. declared war on Bulgaria. Bulgaria then asked for an armistice and on Sept. 7 declared war on Germany, hostilities with U.S.S.R. ending on Sept. 10. The armistice with the Allies was signed in Moscow, Oct. 28. On Sept. 9 a coup d'état gave power to the Fatherland Front, a coalition of Communists, Agrarians, Social Democrats and Republican officers and intellectuals. In August, 1945, the main body of Agrarians and Social Democrats left the Government. The Peace Treaty with Bulgaria was signed on Feb. 22, 1947, and came into force on Sept. 15, 1947. It recognized the return of Southern Dobrudja to Bulgaria.

GOVERNMENT.—On Sept. 8, 1946, a referendum was held, at which, according to the published results, an overwhelming majority declared for the abolition of the Monarchy and the setting up of a Republic. On Oct. 27, a general election to a Grand National Assembly (with power to make a constitution) was held; the Opposition won 101 seats out of 465. According to the new Constitution the legislature is a single chamber National Assembly or Subranie elected by adult suffrage on the basis of one deputy to every 30,000 inhabitants for a maximum term of four years. The opposition Agrarian Party was suppressed on Aug. 24, 1947, following the pronouncement of the death sentence on its leader, Nikola Petkov. The opposition newspapers ceased to appear after April, 1947. Nine opposition Social Democrats continued to sit in the National Assembly until they were placed under restraint in July, 1948. The Government Social Democratic Party fused with the Workers' (Communist) Party on Aug. 11, 1948.

Bulgaria linked herself to the other countries of Eastern Europe by a series of treaties of friendship, collaboration and mutual aid, the first of which was signed with Yugoslavia on November 27, 1947. This was followed by similar treaties with Roumania (January 16, 1948), the Soviet Union (March 18), Czechoslovakia (April 26), Poland (May 30) and Hungary (July 6). The treaty with Yugoslavia was abrogated in 1949.

PRODUCTION.—Bulgaria is essentially an agricultural country, but is engaged upon an elaborate programme of industrialization. Some 90 per cent. of the country's agriculture has been collectivized, and a much smaller proportion mechanized. The principal crops are wheat, maize, beet, tomatoes, tobacco, oleaginous seeds, fruit, vegetables and cotton. Several of the basic crops were adversely affected by bad weather in 1956, and Bulgaria has continued to import considerable quantities of wheat from the U.S.S.R. The live-stock includes sheep, goats, cattle, pigs, horses, asses, mules and water buffaloes.

Bulgarian statistics for 1957 show a 14 per cent. increase in electrical generating capacity, bringing the total to 3,024 million kWh. Much of this increase is from hydro-electric stations. The considerable progress which has been made in the exploitation of Bulgaria's mineral resources, is shown by the following production figures for 1958.

Percentage

	1957
Coal.....	12,730,000 tons
Lead-Zinc ores...	2,241,000 "
Copper ores.....	702,000 "

There are other mineral deposits of varying importance, but no production figures are available. There are also a number of thermal and mineral springs, several of which have been modernized. Bulgaria's newly acquired heavy industry includes an iron and steel works which inaugurated its first blast furnace in 1957, a nitrogenous fertiliser plant and other chemical works.

DEFENCE.—Under the Peace Treaty signed between Bulgaria and the Allies, the Bulgarian Army is limited to 55,000 men, but it is believed at present to be at least 200,000 strong.

EDUCATION.—Free basic education is compulsory for children from 7 to 15 years inclusive. The Bulgarian educational system was reorganized on Soviet lines in September, 1950, and in 1956 there were 6,803 general education and evening schools, 359 gymnasia (general) for day and evening classes, and 506 gymnasia for technical schools; with 1,129,000 students and schoolchildren and 47,013 teachers. Further changes in the organization of education were planned for 1959, again on the Soviet model.

There are 20 universities (known as Higher Educational Establishments and including universities proper and Academies of Music, Science, etc.), including those of Sofia, Plovdiv and Varna. In 1956 there were stated to be 36,000 students at Bulgarian Universities.

LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.—Bulgarian is a Southern Slavonic tongue, closely allied to Russian (see U.S.S.R.) with local admixtures of modern Greek, Albanian and Turkish words. There is a modern literature, chiefly educational and popular. The alphabet is Cyrillic, as in Russia. In 1958 there were 6 daily newspapers in Sofia.

TRADE.

The principal imports are wool, industrial and agricultural machinery, metals, tools, chemicals, dyestuffs, drugs, rubber, paper. The principal exports are cereals, tobacco, fruit, vegetables, oil seeds, oils, fats, textiles, eggs, chemicals, essential oils including attar of roses, hardwoods, non-ferrous metals, and livestock. Approximately 50 per cent. of Bulgaria's foreign trade is with the U.S.S.R., and this was planned to increase substantially in 1957. In 1955 trade with the Soviet bloc represented some 88 per cent of all Bulgarian trade.

Trade with U.K., 1958.—Imports, £322,246; Exports to U.K. £1,189,733.

CAPITAL, Sofia. Pop. (1956), 725,756, at the foot of the Vitosha Range, the capital and commercial centre, is on the main railway line to Istanbul, 338 miles from the Black Sea port of Varna (119,769) and 125 miles from Lom (23,015), on the Danube; ΨBurgas (72,795) is also a Black Sea Port, those on the Danube being ΨRuse (83,472), ΨSvishtov (18,537), ΨVidin (23,984). Other important trading and industrial centres are Plovdiv (162,518) and Pleven (57,758).

BURMA

(Republic of the Union of Burma.)

President (from March 13, 1957), U Win Maung.

Prime Minister and Minister of Defence, General Ne Win (Oct. 29, 1958).

BURMESE EMBASSY IN LONDON

194 Charles St., Berkeley Square, W.1.

Ambassador, His Excellency U Aung Soe (1957).

Area and Population.—Burma forms the western portion of the Indo-Chinese district of the continent of Asia, lying between 9° 58' and 28° N. latitude and 92° 11' and 101° 9' E. longitude, with an extreme length of approximately 1,200 miles and an extreme width of 575 miles. In the north the frontier with Tibet and China has not yet been demarcated, although the Government of Burma is endeavouring to negotiate a settlement with the Chinese Government; the north-west frontier touches Pakistan and the Republic of India; the Bay of Bengal forms the western frontier and on the north-east and east Burma marches with the Chinese province of Yunnan, French Indo-China and Siam. The area of the Union includes Burma proper with the Chin and Kachin Hills (192,158 sq. miles), the Shan State (57,816 sq. miles) and the Kayah State (4,519 sq. miles) making a total of 254,493 sq. miles. The population of the Union is probably about 19,000,000, showing an estimated density of 75 persons to the square mile.

Physical Features.—Burma falls into four natural divisions, Arakan (with the Chin Hills region), the Irrawaddy basin, the old Province of Tenasserim, including the Salween basin and extending southwards to the Burma-Siam peninsula, and the elevated plateau on the east made up of the Shan States. Mountains enclose Burma on three sides, the highest point being Hka-kabo Razi (19,296 ft.) in the northern Kachin hills. Mt. Popa, 4,981 ft., in the Myingyan district is an extinct volcano and a well-known landmark in Central Burma. The principal river systems are the Kaladan-Lemro in Arakan, the Irrawaddy-Chindwin and the Sittang in Central Burma, and the Salween which flows through the Shan Plateau.

Races, Language and Religions.—The indigenous inhabitants who entered Burma from the north and east are of similar racial types and speak languages of the Tibeto-Burman, Mon-Khmer and Tai groups. The three important non-indigenous elements are Indians and Pakistanis (about 800,000), Chinese (about 300,000), with Europeans and Anglo-Burmans numbering in all about 10,000. Burmese, Shan, Karen, Kachin and Chin are the chief languages. Buddhism is the religion of 85 per cent. of the people, with 5 per cent. Animists, 4 per cent. Moslems, 4 per cent. Hindus and rather less than 3 per cent. Christians.

Government.—Burma formed part of British India until April 1, 1937, when it became a separate territory with a considerable measure of self-government. The country was invaded by the Japanese in December, 1941, and until October, 1945, the Civil Government functioned in India.

The Treaty which made Burma an Independent State outside the British Commonwealth was signed in London on Oct. 17, 1947, and came into force on Jan. 4, 1948. For the first three years of its existence the Republic was torn by insurrection, mutiny and disorder. By 1951 the Union Government had recovered control of most of the country, though Papan, the capital of the Karen rebels, was not recovered till 1955.

The first general election under the new Constitution, during 1951, resulted in the return to power of the "Anti-Fascist People's Freedom League." At the second general election in April, 1956, the A.F.P.F.L. was returned with a reduced majority (171 out of 250 seats). In April, 1958, U Nu quarrelled with his principal supporters and in September invited General Ne Win and a caretaker Government to take office. In February, 1959, this arrangement was prolonged until the next elections (April, 1960, or later).

Defence.—Burma has an army of fair strength and quality, but the navy and air force are small. The British Services Mission was withdrawn in 1954.

Education.—The literacy rate is high compared with other Asiatic countries, there is no caste system and women engage freely in social intercourse and play an important part in agriculture. The University of Rangoon was founded in 1920, with a Medical College, an Engineering College and a Teachers' Training College attached. The Intermediate College at Mandalay was granted full university status in 1958; there are also intermediate colleges at Moulmein, Bassein, Magwe, and Kyaukpadaung (in Arakan). Good progress is being made in re-organization and extension of the educational system. An important feature of this programme is a "Mass Education" scheme aimed at the adult population of the rural areas.

Finance.—The chief sources of revenue are profits on state trading, income-tax, customs duties, commercial taxes and excise duties; the chief heads of expenditure are general administration, defence, education, police and development. The budget estimates for 1958-59 were (in terms of sterling): receipts £100,800,000; expenditure £101,300,000.

Production, Industry and Commerce.—Two-thirds of the population depend on agriculture; the chief products are rice, oilseeds (sesamum and groundnut), maize, millet, cotton, beans, wheat and grain. Rice is the mainstay of Burma's economy; before the war Burma was the world's largest exporter of rice, her total production of over 7,000,000 tons a year being derived from 12,000,000 acres or 70 per cent. of the country's total cropped area. The pre-war yearly average of rice exports was over 3,000,000 tons. In 1958 exports were 2,481,000 tons. The net area sown to all crops in 1956-57 was 15,100,000 acres. The marketing of rice, timber and rubber is now a state monopoly. Reserved forests covered 22,200,000 acres in 1956; 1,360,000 acres were irrigated in 1955-56. The principal export after rice is teak of which some 200,000 tons were exported annually before the war. The 1956-57 figure was 22,000 tons. Burma is rich in minerals including petroleum, lead, silver, tungsten, zinc, tin and gemstones. Of these, petroleum is the most important. Production in 1957 was 105,000,000 gallons. A refinery has been built at the main oilfield, Chauk, and the Syrian refinery near Rangoon partly rehabilitated. Their combined output of petroleum products is sufficient for most of Burma's needs. The main production of petroleum is handled by a joint venture between the Burma Oil Company and the Union Government.

Under the Government's development plan, a steel rolling mill, a jute bag and twine mill, a pharmaceutical plant and a sugar factory are in production. Other projects still in preparation include a large hydro-electric scheme and extensions to the cotton mills.

Tariff preferences on Commonwealth goods ended on Oct. 1, 1953. Trade with the United Kingdom in 1958 was valued at: Imports £11,803,041; exports, £6,927,304.

Burma joined the Colombo Plan in 1952 and is now receiving important assistance from member countries.

Communications.—The Irrawaddy and its chief tributary, the Chindwin, form important waterways, the main stream being navigable beyond Bhamo (900 miles from its mouth) and carrying much traffic.

ψ The chief seaports are Rangoon, Moulmein, Akyab and Bassein.

The Burma Railways had a total length in 1940 of 2,300 miles, extending to Myitkyina, on the Upper Irrawaddy. The first diesel locomotives were introduced in 1958. There are about 5,472 miles of main roads. Since the war a considerable network of internal air services has come into being. The airport at Mingaladon, about 9 miles north of Rangoon, has been reconstructed and handles much international traffic.

Chief Towns.—The chief city of Lower Burma, and the seat of the government of the Union is Rangoon, on the left bank of the Rangoon river, about 21 miles from the sea. The city contains the Shwe Dagon pagoda, much venerated by Burmese Buddhists. Population (1953), about 740,000. Mandalay, the chief city of Upper Burma had a population of (1953) 186,000. Moulmein one of 103,000 and Bassein 78,000. Pagan, on the Irrawaddy, S.W. of Mandalay, contains many sacred buildings of interest to antiquaries.

NATIONAL FLAG.

The Union flag is red, with a canton of blue bearing a large white five-pointed star surrounded by 5 smaller stars.

AREA AND POPULATION.—A kingdom with an area of some 70,000 square miles and a population of 5,000,000 (estimated). Cambodia is situated between Thailand to the west and South Vietnam to the east. It is bordered on the north and south respectively by Laos and the Gulf of Siam.

HISTORY.—Once a powerful kingdom, which, as the Khmer Empire, flourished between the tenth and fourteenth centuries, Cambodia became a French protectorate in 1863 and was granted independence within the French Union as an Associate State in 1949. Two years earlier Prince (then King) Norodom Sihanouk had promulgated a constitution providing for parliamentary government. The Geneva Conference of 1954 took Cambodia further along the road to independence by ensuring the withdrawal of French and Vietnamese forces from the country, and the process was completed when, in January, 1955, Cambodia became financially and economically independent not only from France but also from Laos and Vietnam. The present Government is drawn from the Popular Socialist Community, a movement formed by Prince Norodom Sihanouk who abdicated from the throne in March, 1955, in favour of his parents, King Norodom Suramarit and Queen Kossamak. The community holds all 61 seats in the National Assembly as a result of the last general elections which were held in March, 1958.

GEOGRAPHY, ECONOMY AND COMMUNICATIONS.—Cambodia is largely underdeveloped and underpopulated with an economy based on agriculture, fishing and forestry, the bulk of its people being rice-growing farmers living in the basins of the Mekong and Tonlé Sap rivers. In addition to rice, which is the staple crop, the major products are rubber, livestock, maize, timber, pepper, palm sugar, fresh and dried fish, kapok, beans, soya and tobacco. Rice and rubber are the main exports. Seventy-five per cent. of the total land area is virgin forest abounding in wild life of all kinds, including big game. The climate is tropical monsoon with a rainy season from May to October.

The country has some 4,000 kilometres of roads, of which about a third are hard-surfaced and passable in the rainy season. There is one railway which runs from Phnom-Penh to the Thai border, where it connects with the Thai railway system. Phnom-Penh is a river port capable of receiving ships of up to 2,500 tons all the year round. The main installations of a deep water port at Sihanoukville (Kompong Som) on the Gulf of Thailand have been completed and the port is linked to Phnom Penh by a modern highway. There is as yet no large-scale industry. Cambodia receives substantial foreign aid, notably from the U.S.A., China and France and the Soviet Union. Since 1956 Cambodia has sought to increase her foreign trade by the conclusion of trade exchange and payments agreements with several countries, including China, Poland, Czechoslovakia and North Vietnam.

The Cambodian airline, Royal Air Cambodge, operates services with Air Vietnam and Thai Airways between Phnom-Penh and Saigon and Bangkok, and with Cathay Pacific Airways between Phnom-Penh and Hong Kong. There are flights also to Siemreap where the famous ruins of Angkor Wat are situated. Cargo boats from Singapore and Hong Kong visit Phnom-Penh regularly.

CULTURE AND EDUCATION. Cambodian culture is predominantly Indo-Siamese and is distinct from Annamite culture which is largely derived from China. The state religion is Buddhism of the "Little Vehicle". There are fairly large Chinese (300,000) and Vietnamese (400,000) minorities. The national language is Cambodian, although French is widely spoken and is still largely the official language of government and commerce. Considerable efforts are now being devoted to the development of education and new schools, colleges and technical institutes have been established. A Buddhist University has been inaugurated in Phnom-Penh, where there are also Faculties of Medicine and Law. A residential teachers' training college is now in operation.

The official rate of exchange in 1958-59 varied between 98 and 98½ riels = £1.

Trade with U.K.—Total imports from U.K. in 1958 were valued at £377,962; exports to U.K., £53,093.

CAPITAL, Phnom-Penh. Population (estimated, 1958), 550,000.

A State of South America, of Spanish origin, lying between the Andes and the shores of the South Pacific, extending coastwise from just north of Arica to Cape Horn south, between lat. 17° 25' and 55° 59' S., and long. 66° 30' and 75° 48' W. Extreme length of the country is about 2,800 miles, with an average breadth, north of 41°, of 100 miles. The great chain of the Andes runs along its eastern limit, with a general elevation of 5,000 to 15,000 feet above the level of the sea; but numerous summits attain a greater height. The chain, however, lowers considerably towards its southern extremity. The Andes form a boundary with Argentina, and at the head of the pass where the international road from Chile to Argentina crosses the frontier, has been erected a statue of Christ the Redeemer, 26 feet high, made of bronze from old cannon, to commemorate the peaceful settlement of a boundary dispute in 1902. There are no rivers of great size, and none of them is of much service as a navigable highway. In the north the country is arid.

Among the island possessions of Chile are the Juan Fernandez group (2 islands) about 360 miles distant from Valparaíso, where a wireless station has been erected. One of these islands is the reputed scene of Alexander Selkirk's (Robinson Crusoe) shipwreck. Easter Island (27° 8' S. and 109° 28' W.), about 2,000 miles distant in the South Pacific Ocean, contains stone platforms and hundreds of stone figures, the origin of which has not yet been determined. The area of the island is about 45 sq. miles.

Chile is divided into 25 provinces and the total area of the Republic is estimated at 290,000 square miles, with an estimated population of 7,384,403 (Dec. 1958). In 1929 Chile signed a treaty ceding the province of Tacna to Peru but retained the province of Arica in return for a payment to Peru of £1,200,000. Included in the total are four racial divisions: (a) Spanish settlers and their descendants; (b) indigenous Araucanian Indians, Fuegians, and Changos; (c) mixed Spanish Indians; and (d) European immigrants.

In 1957 the registered births per thousand inhabitants numbered 36.2; marriages 7.5; and deaths 12.8.

GOVERNMENT.—Chile was discovered by Spanish adventurers in the 16th century, and remained under Spanish rule until 1810, when a revolutionary war, culminating in the Battle of Maipú (April 5, 1818), achieved the independence of the nation. Under the present Constitution (Aug. 30, 1925), the President is elected by direct choice of all Chilean citizens who have the right to vote. The National Congress consists of a Senate of 45 members, and of a Chamber of 147 Deputies. There is universal suffrage for persons who have attained the age of 21, can read and write, and are on the electoral roll. Chilean women obtained equal voting rights with men on Dec. 21, 1948, before which they only participated in municipal elections.

PRODUCTION, &c.—Agriculture and mining are the principal occupations, though industrial development is being actively encouraged by the Government. Wheat, maize, barley, oats, beans, peas, lentils, wines, tobacco, hemp, chili-pepper, potatoes, onions and melons are grown extensively; the vine and all European fruit-trees flourish in the central zone and fruit is an important export item. Excellent wines are produced and exported and are becoming more widely known in world markets. There are large timber tracts in the central and southern zones of Chile, some types of which were exported to Europe and the Argentine, but high production costs and problems over rates of exchange have caused serious difficulties to this export trade. The mineral wealth is considerable, the country being particularly rich in copper-ore, iron-ore and nitrate. Uranium is also said to have been discovered in small quantities. The production of refined copper in 1958 was 468,931 metric tons. The rainless north is the scene of the only commercial production of nitrate of soda (Chile saltpetre) from natural sources in the world. Production in 1958 (including potassium nitrate) was 1,280,065 metric tons. Chile also produces iodine, manganese ore, coal, and a small quantity of gold. 2,101,000 metric tons of coal and 2,679,000 metric tons of iron ores were produced in 1957. The country has also large deposits of high grade sulphur, but mostly around high extinct volcanoes in the Andes Cordillera, difficult of access. Production of refined sulphur has hitherto been in relatively small quantities. Annual production is between 45,000 and 50,000 metric tons. Oil was struck in Magallanes (Tierra del Fuego) in December, 1945, and the industry is now self-supporting. Production in 1957 was 689,499 cubic metres. An oleoduct 70 kilometres long now joins the principal field in Cerro Manantiales with Clarence Bay. The total production is now being refined at Concon, a few miles north of Valparaíso. A large steel plant was completed and started operation during 1950 at Huachipato, near Concepcion. In 1957-58

the output of steel billets from Huachipato totalled 356,483 metric tons; rolling mill products totalled 123,004 metric tons.

In recent years a considerable cotton and woollen textile industry has developed. Minor industries include tanning, flour milling, lumbering, distilling, fish canning and whaling, brewing, and the manufacture of starch soap, biscuits, rope, glassware, plastic goods, pottery, paint, boots and shoes, hosiery, millinery, cheese, furniture, matches, brushes, cordage, paper, radio receivers and valves, rubber products, synthetic detergents, motor vehicle tyres and cigarettes. Domestic industries include weaving and embroidery.

COMMUNICATIONS.—Most of the country's commerce is distributed along its lengthy sea-board in Chilean ships, which have a virtual monopoly of cabotage. Foreign trade continues to be carried on mostly by foreign steamship lines operating either directly to the West Coasts of North and South America, or via the Panama Canal to Europe or via the Straits of Magellan. Chilean vessels have also been participating for many years in foreign trade with North America and Europe. The Chilean mercantile marine in 1955 numbered 122 vessels of a total gross tonnage of 213,317. Under a new law promulgated in June, 1956, 50 per cent. of Chile's foreign trade must be carried by Chilean vessels.

The first railway was opened in 1851 and there are now 6,100 miles of track. A line runs from Pisagua in the north to Puerto Montt in the south. With the completion of a section of 435 miles from Corumbá, Brazil, to Santa Cruz, Bolivia, the Trans-Continental Line will link the Chilean Pacific port of Arica with Rio de Janeiro on the Atlantic. Another line from Antofagasta to Salta (Argentine) was opened in 1948. Further south, the Trans-Andine Railway connects Valparaíso on the Pacific with Buenos Aires, crossing the Andes at 11,500 ft. In 1949 there were 12,500 miles of telegraph, 1,302 post offices and 55,000 miles of telephone.

DEFENCE.—Military service is compulsory, but not all those who are liable are required. Recruitment for the Navy is voluntary. In 1959 the Army had 6 infantry and 1 cavalry divisions with a total strength of 1,250 officers, 9,000 regular other ranks plus about 25,000 conscripts annually. In addition there is a police force of "Carabineros" of 1,400 officers and 16,000 men. The Air Force had 620 officers and 5,000 other ranks plus 500 conscripts with a strength of 180 aircraft. The Navy consisted of 2 cruisers, 4 destroyers, 3 frigates, 3 corvettes, 1 submarine depot ship, all operational. There is a logistic support force of 3 tankers and ancillary small craft. The strength of the Navy is 1,050 officers and 14,000 men, plus a Marine Force for coastal defence of 150 officers and 2,000 men.

EDUCATION is free, elementary education being compulsory since 1920; there were (in 1958) 26,042 pupils at infant schools, 752,275 at primary, and 164,019 at secondary schools. There are 8 Universities (3 in Santiago, 2 in Valparaíso, 1 in Antofagasta, 1 in Concepcion and 1 in Valdivia). The religion is Roman Catholic.

LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.—Spanish is the language of the country, with admixtures of local words of Indian origin. Recent efforts have reduced illiteracy and have thus afforded access to the literature of Spain, to supplement the vigorous national output. The Nobel Prize for Literature was awarded in 1945 to Señorita Gabriela Mistral, for Chilean verse and prose. There are over 100 newspapers and a large number of periodicals, including some devoted to professional, scientific and social subjects.

AREA AND POPULATION.—Estimates of population vary considerably. A census was carried out in June, 1953, and on Nov. 1, 1954, the National Bureau of Statistics, Peking, announced a final figure of 582,603,417 for the population of mainland China. 11,743,320 Chinese were estimated to be resident or studying abroad. The Bureau stated that 51.82 per cent. of the mainland population were males and 48.18 per cent. females; the birth rate averaged 37 per 1,000 and the death rate 17 per thousand. Distribution of the population by nationalities was:—

Chinese..... 547,283,057 Mongolians... 1,462,956
 Tibetans.... 2,775,622 *Tribal peoples

Manchus.... 2,418,931 Other 6,718,025

* Incl. many aboriginal or primitive tribes in remote western districts of Western China. The total area has been stated as approximately 4,300,000 sq. miles.

The population of China was estimated by the United Nations in 1959 at 640,000,000.

THE PROVINCES OF CHINA.

The National Bureau of Statistics, Peking, published in 1954 the results of the 1953 Census of Population. Populations of the Chinese provinces, including Tibet and Inner Mongolia, are shown below. The Provinces of Jehol and Sikang were abolished on July 19, 1955, their territories being divided up; those of Jehol among Hebei, Liaoning and the Inner Mongolian Region; those of Sikang being absorbed by Szechwan Province.

† These 4 Eastern Provinces constitute the "East China People's Government" set up by the Communist Central Government in January, 1950. This regional régime includes the large centres of Shanghai, Nanking, Tsingtao and Foochow.

§ These 3 Provinces constitute the "North-Western China People's Government."

§ Sinkiang (Chinese Turkestan) was converted into Sinkiang-Uigur Autonomous Region in July, 1955. Autonomous local governments were set up by the various nationalities in the area—Uigurs, Kazakhs, Tadzhiks, etc. Sinkiang is the largest province of China, about one-sixth of the whole area of the country. Some 80 per cent. of its population are Uigurs, of the Moslem religion.

GOVERNMENT.—On October 10, 1911, the party of reform forced the Imperial dynasty to a "voluntary" abdication, and a Republic was proclaimed at Wuchang.

Many years of internal dissension followed the establishment of the Republic, but in 1928 the Kuomintang (Nationalist Party) achieved supremacy and established a one-party government in Nanking which was accorded recognition by the Foreign Powers. After more than seven years of war with Japan (July 7, 1937, to Aug. 5, 1945), disputes arose between the Central Government and the Chinese Communists. There were hopes of a peaceful settlement in January, 1946, when, as a result of mediation by General George C. Marshall (then President Truman's special Envoy in China), an armistice was signed at Chungking and an all-party Consultative Conference was convened to resolve the disputed issues. These hopes of agreement were disappointed and hostilities broke out again.

On April 18, 1947, President Chiang Kai-shek attempted to unite the country by declaring one-party rule in China at an end and by announcing the formation of a new State Council to include representatives of the main political parties. The Communists declined to co-operate in the formation of this body and the Central Government's offer to reserve a number of seats for Communist representatives was later withdrawn.

A National Assembly was elected on Nov. 21, 1947, for six years. It had the power to elect and recall the President and Vice-President of the Republic, to amend the Constitution and to ratify amendments thereto proposed by the Legislative Yuan.

The year 1949 was marked by a rising tide of Communist successes. In January, 1949, Marshal Chiang Kai-shek resigned office as President and the authority of the Nationalist Government rapidly declined as province after province was occupied by Communist forces. The Nationalist Government abandoned Nanking on April 23, 1949, and headquarters were removed to Chungking. In August, the Communist forces advanced into South China, and by January, 1950, the Nationalists retained control only in the islands of Formosa (Taiwan) and Hainan, and in some remote parts of Western China. Taipei, in Formosa, is now the Nationalist capital.

On Sept. 30, 1949, the "People's Political Consultative Conference" of 636 Delegates meeting at Peking elected a council of 56 members and a National Committee of 180 members to make proposals and recommendations to the Council.

On October 1, Mao Tse-Tung, Chairman of the Central People's Government, proclaimed at Peking the inauguration of the People's Republic of China.

The U.S.S.R. broke off negotiations with the Nationalist Government on October 2, 1949, and established diplomatic relations with the Central People's Government. The régime was recognized by all the Communist-dominated countries, by Great Britain on Jan. 6, 1950, and by a number of other countries.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.—In June, 1950, the Communist Government passed legislation to set up provincial and city councils to be responsible for local government until provincial and city people's congresses should be elected.

DEFENCE.—An order introducing compulsory military service for all men between the ages of 18 and 40 was passed by the Chinese Parliament in 1955. Regulations were also approved for the creation of an officer corps with ranks similar to those of the Russian Army. Nearly 80,000,000 men were made liable for service in the Army (3 years), the Navy (5 years) or the Air Force (4 years). It was announced that the new Army would be organized in 14 combat and supporting corps, including a "political" division to serve with front-line troops.

RELIGION.—The indigenous religions of China are Confucianism (which includes ancestor worship), Taoism (originally a philosophy rather than a religion) and, since its introduction in the first century of the Christian era, Buddhism. All three are professed and practised by Chinese other than Moslems, Christians and Jews.

EDUCATION.—Under the Nationalist Government education was compulsory from the age of 6 to 12. This policy is stated to have been continued by the Communists. In 1952 there were about 550,000 primary schools in operation with about 45,000,000 pupils. There were also 5,100 secondary schools, with about 2,000,000 pupils. The majority of the 35 provinces have provincial universities in addition to national and private institutions. In August, 1950, the Communist Government took over all schools supported by foreign missions, and in October, 1950, closed the Roman Catholic University in Peking.

LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.—The Chinese language has many dialects, Cantonese, Hakka, Swatow, Foochow, Wenchow, Ning-po and Wu, and, most important, Mandarin (of which the standard form is Pekinese). There are many sub-dialects of Mandarin, some of which are closely allied while others diverge so much as to be almost separate dialects. Chinese literature is among the richest in the world and paper has been employed for writing and printing for nearly 2,000 years, movable wooden blocks having superseded carved wooden slabs many centuries ago. Confucian books of religion, histories, works dealing with philosophy and the arts, poetry, and literary criticism, novels and romances are abundant and many have been translated into other tongues. In 1937 there were 337 daily newspapers and 1,881 periodicals published at Nanking, Shanghai, Peking, Tientsin, Hankow, Canton and other large centres. All English-language newspapers in China had been closed down by March, 1951. As from Jan. 1, 1956, all Chinese newspapers appeared with characters printed horizontally, instead of in vertical form, and reading from left to right. Official approval was given in February, 1956, to a 30-letter Latin alphabet to replace some 30,000 ideographic characters at present used in written Chinese. The new alphabet has been introduced for trial in a Government campaign to modernize Chinese writing and eradicate illiteracy.

CURRENCY AND EXCHANGE.—The yuan was revalued with effect from March 1, 1955, on the basis of 10,000 old yuan for one new yuan. From the same date the official exchange rates for sterling and dollars were altered to:

6.893 yuan = £1; 2.46 yuan = $1.

PRODUCTION AND INDUSTRY.—China is essentially an agricultural and pastoral country. Wheat, barley, maize, millet and other cereals, with peas and beans, are grown in the northern provinces, and rice and sugar in the south. Rice is the staple food of the inhabitants. Cotton (mostly in valleys of the Yangtze and Yellow Rivers), tea (in the west and south), with hemp, jute and flax, are the most important crops. In June, 1950, an Agrarian Reform Law, redistributing the land, was passed.

Livestock is raised in large numbers. Silkworm culture is one of the oldest industries. Cottons, woollens and silks are manufactured in large quantities, and flour and rice milling have grown important in late years. The mineral wealth of the country is very great, coal of excellent quality being produced; iron ore, tin, antimony, wolfram, bismuth and molybdenum are also abundantly found. Oil is produced in the province of Kansu and in South Manchuria.

TRADE.

The value of the Special Trade of China (Imports retained for home consumption and Exports of merchandise of home produce or manufacture) is shown below for a series of years in Standard Dollars.

Year	Imports	Exports
1939.....	$1,333,654,000	$1,027,247,000
1940.....	2,027,143,000	1,970,121,000
1942.....	1,444,340,000	101,700,000
1943.....	3,114,320,000	164,460,000

1947.....	10,681,326,570	6,376,504,300

The principal articles of export were animals and animal products; oils; textiles fibres; ores and metals and tea. The principal imports were raw cotton, cotton yarn and thread; oils, fats and soap; motor cars and ships; books, paper and paper-making materials; chemicals; metals and ores; and dyes; paints and varnishes.

	1957	1958
Imports from U.K. . .	£12,109,393	£26,709,069
Exports to U.K.	14,233,256	18,544,015

COMMUNICATIONS.—Of the total area of China about half consists of table lands and mountainous districts where communications and travel are generally difficult and dangerous, the highest point being Minyaa Konka (24,900 ft.) about 150 miles west of Chungking. To open up sea communications from the south-west the Burma Road, over 770 miles in length from Lashio, Burma, to Kunming in Yunnan, was constructed in 1937-39. The road was the chief highway for war supplies to China, until cut by the Japanese in 1942; the success of the Allies in Burma in 1945 restored the use of the road and of communication between Yunnan and Burmese ports. Motor lorries perform the journey in seven days, in contrast with the difficult and lengthy pack-mule transit before the road was constructed. There is motor road and railway connexion between Chungking and French Indo-China. In districts not served by roads the principal means of communication from E. to W. is afforded by the rivers, of which the principal are the Yangtze (3,400 miles), Hoangho or Yellow (2,600) and the West River (1,650), and from N. to S. by the Grand Canal.

Railways.—The length of the railways is less than 8,000 miles, inclusive of the Manchurian lines, or less than one-fifth (per 100 sq. miles) of those available in Turkey (It was announced on June 23, 1955, that a 200-mile railway linking Litang with the port of Tsamkong, on the Liuchow Peninsula off Hainan Island, had been completed. Major railway projects now under construction are two new lines across Mongolia and Sinkiang and a line linking Lanchow with Kunning).

Shipping.—In 1947 the number of vessels entered and cleared for abroad was 31,751 with a total tonnage of 9,980,000. Of these totals 19,366 vessels (1,412,260 tons) and 16,343 junks (1,325,994 tons) were under the Chinese flag and 3,682 vessels (8,997,219 tons) were under foreign flags.

Telegraphs connect Peking with Europe and Tibet. There are about 97,000 miles of land lines and several high-power wireless installations. Telephones, municipal and long-distance, are in general use in the settled and trade areas, and wireless telephony has been installed in the large centres.

SPECIAL TERRITORY

Tibet, a plateau seldom lower than 10,000 feet, forms the northern frontier of India (boundary imperfectly demarcated), from Kashmir to Burma, but is separated therefrom by the Himalayas. The area is estimated at 463,000 square miles with a population of 1,273,969 (1953 Census.) About one-fifth of the male population are monks and polyandry is common. There is an army with an establishment of 10,000 all ranks, consisting of infantry serving on a militia basis and armed with modern weapons. India imports from Tibet wool, borax, salt, and musk; musk, horn and herbs are sent to China. The imports are chiefly cotton and woollen goods, grain, hardware, glass, sugar, biscuits, dried fruits and tobacco, with silver bullion and coined rupes to balance the excess of exports. The present currency is reckoned in sangs (mostly paper). The 1939 value was about 8 sangs = 1 rupee, which has risen in favour of Tibet to about 3½ sangs = 1 rupee (1946). Trade passes from Bengal (through Sikkim) and from the Punjab and the United Provinces.

Between the 7th and 9th centuries A.D. Tibet was a successful military power whose boundaries extended far into Shensi (China) and for a time to the kingdom of Magadha (India). Later, the influence of Buddhism softened earlier military aggressiveness and Tibet remained in contact with, and was influenced (but not dominated) by, its Mongolian and Chinese neighbours until early in the 18th century when the Manchu Emperor of China, K'anghsi, taking advantage of internal dissensions in Tibet, invaded the country and established officers at Lhasa. Manchu authority in Tibet appears to have been always loose and by the end of the 19th century was merely nominal.

The Anglo-Chinese Convention of 1890 under which a trade mart was opened at Yatung was persistently flouted by the Tibetans and as a result a political mission was despatched from India, with a military escort. It reached the capital, Lhasa, after sharp fighting, on August 3, 1904. A new Convention was signed (Sept. 7), providing for the erection of boundary pillars between Sikkim and Tibet; for three trade marts, with British and Tibetan agents; for unrestricted traffic by existing routes, and for payment of an indemnity.

From 1906 the Chinese took advantage of the confusion which followed the withdrawal of the British expedition from Tibet to establish by force a greater degree of authority in Tibet than they had previously enjoyed. This lasted only until 1912 when the Tibetans took the opportunity provided by the Chinese Revolution against the Manchus to evict the Chinese from Lhasa and to drive them beyond the Salween. They brought back the Dalai Lama who on the Chinese invasion had taken shelter in India.

In 1918 Chinese aggression on the border led to successful retaliation by Tibet in which the Chinese were driven beyond the upper waters of the Yangtse, but from 1931 to 1933 there was confused fighting on the China-Tibet border, as a result of which the Tibetans lost their hold on most of the territory to the East of the Upper Yangtse which they reoccupied in 1918. Since then the Upper Yangtse has remained roughly the de facto frontier between Tibet and China.

In October, 1950, Chinese Communist forces invaded Eastern Tibet. The Dalai Lama later left Lhasa and set up his Government at Yatung, near the Sikkim frontier. On May 23, 1951, an agreement was reached whereby Tibet accepted Chinese suzerainty. The Communist army was allowed entry into Tibet and a Communist military and administrative headquarters set up. (See also EVENTS OF THE YEAR.)

PRINCIPAL CHINESE CITIES.—The Communist Government has reinstated Peking as the National capital, under its old name of Peking. From 1928 to 1949 the capital was Nanking. Peking had a population of 2,768,149 at the 1953 Census. The population of the principal Ψ ports and trade marts is estimated as follows: Nanking, 1,020,000; Ψ Amoy, 240,000; Ψ Antung, 200,000; Ψ Canton, 1,496,000; Changsha, 700,000; Ψ Chefoo, 250,000; Chinkiang, 220,000; Chungking, 1,120,000; Ψ Foochow, 400,000; Ψ Hangchow, 600,000; Hankow (including Wuchang and Hanyang), 800,000; Harbin, 638,000; Hsinking, 420,000; Ichang, 110,000; Kirin, 150,000; Mengtsz, 200,000; Mukden, 1,551,000; Newchwang, 170,000; Ψ Ningpo, 300,000; Ψ Shanghai, (1953) 6,204,417; Shasi, 150,000; Soochow, 300,000; Ψ Swatow, 200,000; Tientsin, (1953) 2,693,831; Ψ Tsingtao, 756,000.

There are Colombian Consular Offices at Liverpool and Glasgow.

The Republic of Colombia lies in the extreme north-west of South America, having a coastline on both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. It is situated between $2^{\circ} 40'$ S. to $12^{\circ} 25'$ N. lat. and 68° to 79° W. long., with an estimated area of 461,606 square miles, and a population (1955 estimate) of 13,000,000.

The Colombian coast was visited in 1502 by Christopher Columbus, and in 1536 a Spanish expedition under Jiménez de Quesada penetrated to the interior and established on the site of the present capital a government which continued under Spanish rule until the revolt of the Spanish-American colonies of 1811-1824. In 1819 Simon Bolívar (born 1783, died 1830) established the Republic of Colombia, consisting of the territories now known as Colombia, Panama, Venezuela and Ecuador. In 1829-1830 Venezuela and Ecuador withdrew from the association of provinces, and in 1831 the remaining territories were formed into the Republic of New Granada. In 1858 the name was changed to the Granadine Confederation and in 1861 to the United States of Colombia. In 1886 the present title was adopted. In 1903 Panama seceded from Colombia, and is now a separate Republic.

Following a period of dictatorship and government by decree from 1953, a military junta was established on May 10, 1957. Congressional elections were held on March 16, 1958, which yielded a Liberal majority of votes. A plebiscite voted on December 1, 1957, had made constitutional changes by which the office of president would during the next sixteen years alternate between candidates of the Liberal and Conservative parties who would hold office for terms of four years, while the two parties would have equal representation in Congress and in the national and departmental governments. On May 4, 1958, presidential elections returned the Liberal Señor Alberto Lleras Camargo, supported by Liberal and Conservative votes.

There are three great ranges of the Andes, known as the Western, Central, and Eastern Cordilleras; the second contains the highest peaks, but the latter is the more important, as it consists of a series of vast tablelands, cool and healthy. This temperate region is the most densely peopled portion of the Republic.

The principal rivers are the Magdalena, Cauca, Atrato, Caquetá, Meta, Putumayo and Patía. The Patía flows through the famous Minima Gorge of the Western Cordilleras, and one of its tributaries (the Carchi, or Upper Guatara) is spanned by the Rumichaca Arch, or Inca's Bridge, of natural stone. On the Rio Bogotá is the Great Fall of Tequendama, 482 feet in height.

The Colombian forests are extensive; among the trees are mahogany, cedar, fustic, and other dye-woods and medicinal plants. The mineral productions are emeralds, gold, silver, platinum, copper, iron, lead, and coal; in 1956 some 44 million barrels of petroleum were produced and prospecting for new sources of production is in progress in many parts of the Republic. The principal agricultural products are coffee, cotton, bananas, rice and maize, and in some parts tobacco, wheat and other cereals. Manufactures, mainly for home consumption, consist of woollen, cotton and artificial silk textiles, leather goods, chemicals, asbestos-cement goods, many pharmaceutical products, rubber goods, including motor tyres, furniture, boots and shoes, confectionery, cigarettes, beer, cement, glass containers and, since the latter part of 1954, steel. Successive foreign exchange crises have led to the encouragement by the Government of the rapid development of new industries, including the local assembly and partial manufacture of motor vehicles, radio sets and office machinery.

The Navy consists of 4 destroyers, 3 frigates, some gunboats and some other small craft, with personnel about 4,500, including one battalion of marines; a battalion of the Colombian army served with the United Nations forces in Korea. The first railway was opened in 1855, about 1,914 miles being open in 1949. A new railway is at present being constructed in the Magdalena Valley, which will link the departmental lines running down to the river, and is planned to reach the Atlantic coast. The Dorada Railway, 70 miles of 3 ft. gauge connecting La Dorada and Ambalena, was bought from its British owners by the Colombian Government in July, 1956, together with a 44 mile aerial ropeway connected to the railway, for $1,000,000. There are about 2,200 miles of rail in use at present. There were also (1955) some 13,125 miles of metalled roads, of which 8,440 miles are national highways and the remainder departmental and municipal highways; this excludes "dirt" roads (passable by motors in dry weather only). Colombia was granted loans totalling $47,300,000 (118,500,000 pesos) by the International Bank, towards the total of 515,000,000 pesos expected to be required to complete the rehabilitation of highways which is now in progress. The national telephone and telegraph system consists primarily of wireless links between the more important centres. Large appropriations have been made for modernization of the country's telecommunication system. A large volume of traffic is carried on the River Magdalena, which is navigable for 900 miles. Until 1958 the main port for Bogotá was Ψ La Dorada, 592 miles from Barranquilla, but in 1958 the railroad was extended to Puerto Bernó, 250 miles further down the river. There are daily passenger and cargo air services between Bogotá and Barranquilla, Bogotá and Medellín and Bogotá and Cali. There are also subsidiary services to Cartagena, Santa Marta, Manizales, Pereira, Armenia, Pasto, Buenaventura, Barrancabermeja, Popayan, Ipiales, Bucaramanga, Cúcuta and Villavieja. There are daily services to the U.S.A., Lima, Quito, Panama and Caracas, a service three times weekly to London via Jamaica, a bi-weekly service via Caracas, and a daily service via New York. There are also four weekly air services direct to Europe. New York can be reached in one day and air mail is delivered to the United Kingdom 3 to 5 days after leaving Bogotá. There are wireless stations in the main cities, and a television station in Bogotá with relays to Manizales, Medellín, Cali and Tunja.

Roman Catholicism is the established religion.

Language and Literature.—Spanish is the language of the country and education has been free since 1870. Great efforts have been made in reducing illiteracy and it is estimated that about 60 per cent. of those over 10 years of age can read and write. In addition to the National University at Bogotá (founded in 1572) there are universities in the towns of Medellín, Cartagena, Popayan and Manizales and the department of Nariño. There is a flourishing press in urban areas and a national literature supplements the rich inheritance from the time of Spanish rule.

The Republic of Costa Rica, the most southern State of Central America, extending across the isthmus between 8° 17' and 11° 10' N. lat. and from 82° 30' to 85° 45' W. long., contains an area of about 23,000 English square miles, and an estimated population (Dec., 1958) of 1,100,000. The rate of increase is about 4 per cent., one of the highest in the world. The population is basically of European stock in which Costa Rica differs from most Latin American countries. The Republic lies between Nicaragua and Panama and between the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean.

For nearly three centuries (1530-1821) Costa Rica formed part of the Spanish-American dominions, the seat of government being at Cartago. In 1821 the country joined in the War of Independence, and from 1824-1839 it was one of the United States of Central America.

On Dec. 1, 1948, the Army was abolished, the President declaring it unnecessary, as the country loved peace.

The coastal lowlands by the Caribbean Sea and Pacific have a tropical climate but the interior plateau, with a mean elevation of 4,000 feet, enjoys a temperate climate. The capital is 103 miles from the Atlantic and 72 miles from the Pacific.

The principal agricultural products are coffee (of a high quality), bananas, rice, maize, sugar-cane, potatoes, cocoa beans and hemp, the soil being extremely fertile. Increasing attention is being paid to cattle raising.

The chief ports are Limón, on the Atlantic coast, through which passes most of the coffee exported, and Puntarenas on the Pacific coast. Bananas are principally exported from Golfito and Quepos, ports which have been developed on the Pacific Coast by the United Fruit Co. In 1957, 984 ships of a gross tonnage of 3,259,238 entered at Costa Rican ports. About 400 miles of railroad are open. The country is well provided with airways, and Pan-American Airways, K.L.M., LACSA and TACA call at San José, while feeder services link the main centres of population with the capital.

Spanish is the language of the country. Education is compulsory and free. The literacy rate is the highest in Latin America. In post-war years there has been a big advance in the provision of social services.

Ambassador in London, His Excellency Señor Sergio Rojas Santamarina (1959).

Consul-General, Señor Don Julio A. Brodermann (329, High Holborn, W.C.1).

Cuba (the largest of the "West India" Islands) lies between 74° and 85° W. long., and 19° and 23° N. lat., with a total area of 44,178 sq. miles and a population (estimated, 1955) of 6,125,000.

The island of Cuba was visited by Christopher Columbus during his first voyage, on October 27, 1492, and was then believed to be part of the Western mainland of India. Early in the 16th century the island was conquered by the Spaniards, to be used later as a base of operations for the conquest of Mexico and Central America, and for almost four centuries Cuba remained under a Spanish Captain-General. [The island was under British rule for one year, 1762-1763, when it was returned to Spain in exchange for Florida.] Separatist agitation culminated in the closing years of the 19th century in a fierce and blood-thirsty war. In 1898 the government of the United States intervened and despatched the battleship Maine to Havana harbour, and in February of that year the vessel was sunk by an explosion, the cause of which remains an unsolved mystery. On April 20, 1898, the U.S. Government demanded the evacuation of Cuba by the Spanish forces, and a short Spanish-American war led to the abandonment of the island, which was occupied by U.S. troops. From Jan. 1, 1899, to May 20, 1902, Cuba was under U.S. military rule, and reforms of the widest and most far-reaching character were instituted. On May 20, 1902, an autonomous government was inaugurated with an elected President, and a legislature of two houses. The island was, however, again the prey of revolution from Aug. to Sept., 1906, when the U.S. Government resumed control. On Jan. 28, 1909, a republican government was again inaugurated. In 1933 a revolution was followed by provisional government until May, 1936, when a constitutional government was elected. A new Constitution was promulgated in 1940, but its operation was suspended for various periods until February 24, 1955, when the Government elected on November 1, 1954, took office. A revolution led by Dr. Fidel Castro overthrew the Government of General Batista on January 1, 1959. A provisional government was set up and elections were promised within four years.

Of the total area of 28,000,000 acres, there were (1953), about 5,750,000 acres under cultivation, of which 61 per cent. was under sugar. Tobacco, sweet potatoes, bananas, rice, coffee, cocoa and maize are also grown and tropical fruits (oranges, coco-nuts, pineapples, &c.) flourish. The chief agricultural products of the island are sugar and tobacco; sugar crop (1956) 4,600,557 Spanish long tons; tobacco crop (1956) 80,486,000 lb.; the chief product of the forests is mahogany. White cedar is also used for boxing the tobacco crop. The estimated livestock figures include (1955) 4,500,000 cattle and 400,000 horses, the vast savannahs of Central Cuba being particularly suitable for cattle ranges.

11,256 route miles of railroad are open (public service 3,677; private lines on plantations and in mining areas 7,579) and about 12,000 miles of telegraph line; there are about 8,291 miles of roads. The island forms an important stopping place for many international airlines.

Language and Literature.—Spanish is the language of the island, but English is widely understood. Education is compulsory and free. The University of Havana was founded in 1728 but until its enlargement under American auspices in the first quarter of the twentieth century no great progress was made in secondary or higher education. Public libraries have been established and there is a flourishing daily press with wide circulations.

FINANCE.

Public revenue in 1957 was estimated at $380,001,965 and in 1958 at $365,247,946. The public debt stood at $702,517,000 at the end of 1956.

Area and Population.—Czechoslovakia, formerly part of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, declared its independence on Oct. 28, 1918 (Czechoslovak Independence Day), the territory thus affected having an area of 53,700 square miles.

Since the War of 1939-45 the territory and population of the Republic have undergone change. By a treaty with the Soviet Union (June 29, 1945) Ruthenia was ceded to U.S.S.R., thus reducing the area by over 4,000 square miles and the population by over 750,000. In addition, the Sudeten German minority was expelled as sanctioned at the Potsdam Conference and the latest estimate of the population (Dec. 8, 1958) is 13,518,021.

Government.—In September, 1938, Adolf Hitler demanded the cession of the Sudeten districts. On Sept. 29, 1938, a Four Power Conference at Munich acquiesced in the annexation of the territory on the understanding that no further demands would be made, but on March 14, 1939, Nazi troops invaded Czechoslovakia, in flagrant violation of the terms of the Munich Conference, and two days later Adolf Hitler proclaimed that Czechoslovakia had "ceased to exist": a "Slovak State" was established and Bohemia and Moravia were declared a Protectorate of the Reich.

On July 22, 1940, Great Britain recognized the Czechoslovak National Committee set up in London as a provisional Czechoslovak Government, and on July 18, 1941, Great Britain fully recognized the Czechoslovak Government headed by President Benes.

Following the liberation of Eastern Slovakia by Soviet forces in 1945, President Benes and most of the members of his Government left London for Moscow for discussions with the Czechoslovak émigré movement in the Soviet Union on the formation of a new Government which would have its seat on Czechoslovak territory. The composition and programme of this Government, which was headed by M. Z. Fierlinger, were announced at Kosice in Slovakia on April 4, 1945. The Kosice Government included equal representation of four Czech parties (Czech Socialists, Social Democrats, Communists and Popular Party) and two Slovak parties (Democrats and Communists).

The first elections in the liberated Republic were held on May 26, 1946, the Communists emerging as the leading party with 38 per cent. of the votes cast. On July 3, 1946, K. Gottwald, the Communist leader, formed a Government of parties participating in a National Front. The uneasy alliance between the parties was terminated by a crisis precipitated by the mass resignation on February 20, 1948, of Ministers representing parties opposed to the Communists in protest against the widespread introduction of Communists into the police force by the Communist Minister of the Interior. The Communist Party, with the aid of Action Committees, seized power, and on February 25 a new Government, predominantly Communist, was formed. On May 30, 1948, new elections were held, the choice lying between a single joint election list of parties in the National Front, and a blank vote. The Communist control of the country is now unqualified. The first Five-Year plan which came to an end in December 1953 was largely concerned with extending heavy industry and industrializing Slovakia. It was officially claimed that production had doubled during the plan, but it was also admitted that the economy had been thrown out of balance by poor progress in the development of ore reserves, fuel, power and agricultural production. The second Five-Year plan began on Jan. 1, 1956, after two interim years (1954 and 1955) devoted to correcting these faults. Gross industrial production is said to be expanding at a rate of 10-11 per cent. per annum, the emphasis remaining on heavy industry. Progress in hard coal production and in increasing power generating capacity, however, has been less good, and agricultural production has remained virtually stagnant in spite of the continued formation of agricultural co-operatives.

Language and Literature.—Czech and Slovak are the official languages but the literature is mainly Czech in Bohemia, Moravia and Silesia. The Reformation gave a widespread impulse to Czech literature, the writings of Jan Hus (who was martyred in 1415) familiarising the people with Wyclif's teaching. This impulse endured to the close of the seventeenth century when Amos Komensky, or Comenius (1592-1670) was expelled from the country. Under Austrian repression, and with the outlawing of the national language, there was a period of stagnation until the national revival in the early nineteenth century. Modern prose drama and fiction are represented by several authors of international reputation, notably K. M. Capek-Chod (1860-1907), F. X. Svoboda (1860-1943), Jaroslav Hilbert (1871-1936), Viktor Dyk (1877-1931), Arnost Dvorak (1880-1933), Ivan Olbracht (b. 1882), K. Capek (1880-1938), and Vladimir Vancura (1891-1942). Liberty of the press ceased with the violation of independence in 1939. It was temporarily restored on the liberation of the country. After the Communist coup of February 25, 1948, however, freedom of the press was "curtailed." All papers and periodicals were forced to follow the party line and a number of publications were banned.

Education.—In 1957-58 the number of pupils in general (primary and secondary) schools was given as 2,011,222. In addition there were 206,004 pupils at technical schools. Education is compulsory and free for all children from the ages of 6 to 14. In future an additional year's basic schooling will be added and it is intended that full or part-time secondary education should eventually be made universally available. Special emphasis is laid on practical training and manual work both at schools and colleges. There are four universities in Czechoslovakia of which the most famous is Charles University in Prague (founded 1348), the others being situated at Bratislava, Brno and Olomouc. In 1957-58 the number of university students was said to be 77,555.

Finance.—The Czechoslovak currency is the Czechoslovak Koruna (Kcs=Czechoslovak crown) of 100 heller. From the devaluation of the pound in 1949 up to May 30, 1953, the exchange rate was Kcs. 130.58 £1. From June 1, 1953, the official rate has been Kcs. 20.16=£1, but a bonus of 100 per cent. is added to certain non-commercial transfers including the encashment of travellers' cheques. This change took place as the result of an internal currency reform when a new currency was issued at a basic exchange rate of Kcs. 1.00 of the new currency for Kcs. 5.00 of the old. The new foreign exchange rate represents an appreciation of the new crown by 38.94 per cent. The Budget estimates for 1959 total Kcs. 95,913,000,000 for expenditure and Kcs. 96,230,000,000 for revenue.

Trade with U.K., 1958: Imports, £4,250,272; Exports to U.K., £6,874,729.

AREA AND POPULATION.—A Kingdom of Northern Europe, and the smallest of the Northern States, consisting of the islands of Zealand, Funen, Lolland, etc., the peninsula of Jutland, and the outlying island of Bornholm in the Baltic. Denmark is situated between 54° 34'–57° 45' N. lat., and 8° 5'–15° 12' E. long., with an area of 16,608 square miles, and a population estimated (January, 1959) at 4,532,100. In 1958 there were 74,727 births, 41,657 deaths and 33,920 marriages.

GOVERNMENT.—Under the Constitution of the Kingdom of Denmark Act of June 5, 1953, the legislature consists of one chamber, the Folketing, of not more than 179 members, including 2 for the Farøe and 2 for Greenland. The voting age is 23 years. In the 1957 elections the Social Democrats obtained 70 seats; Venstre 45; Conservatives 30; Radicals 14; Single Tax Party 9; Communists 6; Farøe 2; Greenlanders 2; Slesvig Party (German Minority) 1.

EDUCATION is free and compulsory, the schools being maintained by taxation. Special schools are numerous, technical and agricultural predominating. There are Universities at Copenhagen (founded in 1478) and Aarhus (1933).

LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.—The Danish language is akin to Swedish and Norwegian. Danish literature, ancient and modern, embraces all forms of expression, familiar names being Hans Christian Andersen (1805–1875), Søren Kierkegaard (1813–1855) and Georg Brandes (1842–1927), with Henrik Pontoppidan (1857–1943) and Karl Gjellerup (1857–1919), who shared the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1917, and Johannes V. Jensen (1873–1950), who received the same award in 1945. Over 200 newspapers are published in Denmark; 10 daily papers are published in Copenhagen.

PRODUCTION AND INDUSTRY.—Twenty-one per cent. of the population live exclusively by agriculture, and about 48 per cent. by manufactures and trade. The chief products are wheat, rye, oats, barley, potatoes, seeds, cattle, horses, pigs and dairy produce; manufactures based on imported raw material cover most of the home consumption.

COMMUNICATIONS.—Mercantile marine (ships above 100 gross tonnage) (December, 1957) 709 ships, with a gross tonnage of 1,963,000. In 1957 there were 4,821 kilometres of railway and 976,337 kilometres of telegraph and telephone lines.

Outlying Parts of the Kingdom

The outlying parts of Denmark have about 55,000 inhabitants. The FARÖE, or Sheep Islands (540 sq. m. pop. (1955) 32,456), capital, Thorshavn, are governed by a Lagting of 25 members, and send 2 representatives to the Folketing at Copenhagen. On September 24, 1946, the Lagting, with the consent of the Danish Government, for its own guidance held a plebiscite on the Faröe. About one-third of the electors did not, however, take part in the voting; of the rest a little more than half the votes cast were in favour of separation from Denmark and the establishment of a republic. At a subsequent general election for the Lagting a great majority voted in favour of remaining a part of the Kingdom of Denmark with a certain extent of home rule. In 1948 the Faröe received a certain measure of home rule. Special Faröe affairs are administered by a council of 3 members. Trade with U.K. in 1958 totalled: Imports, £577,998; Exports, £42,035. (Direct landings of fish in U.K. ports are not included.) GREENLAND (ice-free portion about 132,000 sq. m., total area about 840,000 sq. m., population, Dec. 31, 1955, 27,101), is divided into 3 provinces (West, North and East). West Greenland (capital Godthaab) has a Landsraad of 24 members and sends 2 representatives to the Folketing at Copenhagen. The trade of Greenland is mainly under the management of the Royal Greenland Trade Department; discoveries of lead were made in 1948. Imports from U.K. (1958), £101,034. The United States of America has acquired certain rights to maintain air bases in Greenland.

The Dominican Republic, formerly the Spanish portion of the island of Hispaniola, is the oldest settlement of European origin in America.

The island was discovered by Christopher Columbus in December, 1492, who named it "La Española" or "Little Spain." In 1496 he ordered his brother, Bartholomew Columbus, to found the capital at the mouth of the Ozama River, on the south of the island, which city he called Santo Domingo. The island immediately became the objective for adventurous Spanish colonists, who exploited the native Indians for the sake of the gold found in the streams. African negroes were imported for the sugar and other plantations both in Santo Domingo and Haiti.

In 1821 Santo Domingo broke away from Spain and declared itself independent, but in 1822 it was invaded and subjugated by its negro neighbours from the west, the Haitians. The latter were driven out on Feb. 27, 1844, when the Dominican Republic was definitely proclaimed by the natives.

The country was occupied by American marines from 1916 until the adoption of a new Constitution in 1924. In July, 1924, a properly elected Constitutional Government was installed, with complete authority over all matters except the collection of the Customs and the redemption of foreign obligations, which continued to be administered by an American official. On Sept. 24, 1940, a new convention was signed at Washington; this provided for the withdrawal of the U.S. Receiver-General, the Customs to be collected by the Dominican Government, and the whole public revenue to be deposited in an agreed bank, the service of the debt being recognized as a first charge on the deposit. Congress consists of a Senate of 23 members, elected for 5 years, and of a Chamber of Deputies of 58 members, also elected for 5 years.

The Dominican Republic lies between Cuba on the west and Puerto Rico on the east and covers an area of about 19,322 square miles, with a population of 2,703,656 (July 1957). The climate is tropical in the low lands and semi-tropical to temperate in the higher altitudes. According to local classification there are 1,289 miles of first class and 1,412 miles of second class and inter-communal roads in the Republic. There is a direct road from Ciudad Trujillo to Port-au-Prince, the capital of Haiti, enabling the journey to be made in one day. There are about 80 miles (Sánchez-La Vega) of public railway, and a telephone system connects practically all the principal towns of the republic. The Dirección General de Comunicaciones, All American Cables and Radio Corporation of America maintain an efficient telegraph service with all parts of the world. There are 28 commercial broadcasting stations and there is a television station operated by La Voz Dominicana, which with the help of relay stations provides reception of its programmes throughout the Republic. A second television station in Ciudad Trujillo-Rahintel transmits to the Ciudad Trujillo area.

Spanish is the language of the Republic and education has made considerable progress.

Sugar, coffee, cocoa, and tobacco are the most important crops. Other products are peanuts, maize, rice, bananas, molasses, salt, cement, timber, cattle, iron ore, sisal products, honey and chocolate. There are several light industries producing sisal bags and rope, glass products, cotton textiles, shoes, paper, rum, matches, peanut oil and other products.

The Republic is served by seven airlines, Pan-American, Caribair, Delta Air Lines, Compania Brasileira de Aviação (VARIG), Compania Cubana de Aviación, and the Compania Dominicana de Aviación, all using the General Andrews Field at Ciudad Trujillo. A new international airport is under construction 18 miles to the east of Ciudad Trujillo.

Area and Population.—Ecuador is an equatorial State of South America, the mainland extending from lat. 1° 38' N. to 4° 50' S., and between 75° 20' and 81° W. long., comprising an area, reduced by boundary settlements (Jan. 29, 1942) with Peru, to about 226,000 sq. miles.

The Republic of Ecuador is divided into 18 provinces and one territory. It has a population estimated (June, 1957) at 3,906,907, mostly descendants of the Spaniards, aboriginal Indians, and Mestizoes. The territory of the Republic extends across the Western Andes, the highest peak of which is Aconcagua, in the Chilean sector (22,976 ft.), the highest peaks in Ecuador being Chimborazo (20,498 ft.), Iliniza (17,405 ft.), Carhuairazo (16,515 ft.), Cotacachi (16,301 ft.), and Pichincha (16,000 ft.) in the Western Cordillera; and Cotopaxi (19,498 ft.), Antisana (18,864 ft.), Cayambe (19,160 ft.), Altar (17,730 ft.), Sangay (17,464 ft.), Tungurahua (16,690 ft.), and Sinchoagua (16,365 ft.) in the Eastern Cordillera. Ecuador is watered by the Upper Amazon, and by the rivers Guayas, Mira, Santiago, Chone, and Esmeraldas on the Pacific coast. There are extensive forests, and the cinchona bark tree is common.

The Galápagos (Tortoise) Islands, forming the province of Colon, were annexed by Ecuador in 1832. The archipelago lies in the Pacific, about 500 miles from Saint Elena peninsula, the most westerly point of the mainland. There are 12 large and several hundred smaller islands with a total area of about 3,000 sq. miles and an estimated population of 1,687. The capital is San Cristobal, on Chatham Island. Although the archipelago lies on the equator, the temperature of the surrounding water is well below equatorial average owing to the Antarctic Humboldt Current. The islands export guano and orchilla moss. There is an increasing amount of fishing, mainly for the North American market.

Government.—The former Kingdom of Quito was conquered by the Incas of Peru in the latter part of the 15th century. Early in the 16th century Pizarro's conquests led to the inclusion of the present territory of Ecuador in the Spanish Viceroyalty of Peru. The independence of the country was achieved in a revolutionary war which culminated in the battle of Mount Pichincha (May 24, 1822). A new constitution was issued on Dec. 3, 1846. Elections were held on June 3, 1956 and Señor Ponce Enriquez was elected President.

Production and Industry.—The chief products are bananas, cocoa, coffee, rice, petroleum, straw hats, vegetable ivory and balsa wood. The petroleum, like the products of Ecuador's farm lands and cotton industry, which are extensive, is almost wholly consumed internally. Small amounts of gold, silver and lead are mined, and emeralds and rubies are occasionally found.

Communications.—There are about 2,000 miles of permanent roads and 2,500 miles of roads which are only open during the dry season. There are about 750 miles of railway, including the railway from Quito to Guayaquil. The laying of a new track from Ibarra to San Lorenzo has now been completed. Seven commercial airlines (Panagra, Area, Braniff, K.L.M., Avianca, Tan, Air France, Lanica and A.P.A.) operate international flights, linking Ecuador with New York, Miami, Lima, Santiago, Rio de Janeiro, etc. Area and other Ecuadorian companies operate internal services between all important towns.

Defence.—The standing Army has a strength of about 8,000. There is an Air Force of some 40 front line aircraft and a small Navy. All are being advised by U.S. missions.

Language and Literature.—Spanish is the language of the country. The electorate of Congress is confined to adult male and female citizens who can read and write and in recent years considerable headway has been made in reducing the high figure of illiteracy. 3 daily newspapers are published at Quito and 6 at Guayaquil. Elementary education is free and compulsory. In 1956-57 there were 490,277 pupils at the 4,525 primary schools and 48,253 pupils at the 232 High Schools. The 6 Universities (at Quito, Guayaquil, Cuenca, Loja and Portoviejo) had 6,129 students in the same year.

Position and Extent.—Ethiopia (or Abyssinia) is an inland country in North-Eastern Africa, bounded on the North by the former Italian Colony of Eritrea, which was federated with Ethiopia under the Ethiopian Crown in September, 1952, in accordance with the United Nations Resolution of Dec. 2, 1950; on the South by Kenya; on the West by the Sudan; and on the East by French and British Somaliland, and the former Italian portion of Somaliland, which is now being administered by Italy as a Trusteeship territory. The area is estimated at 350,000 square miles, with a population officially estimated at 18,000,000 of whom fewer than one-half are of the ruling race of Amharas and the remainder mainly Gallas, Guraghi, Sidama, Agao, negro tribes on the west and south frontiers, and Danakil and Somalis on the east.

Ethiopia is mainly a mountainous country, volcanic in origin, with several peaks of about 14,000 ft., notably in the centre and in the Simien range in the north; many other mountains exceed 10,000 ft. The lower country and valley gorges are very hot; the higher plateaux are well watered, with a genial climate. On the high plateau there are two main seasons in the year, a dry winter, October to May, and a rainy summer from June to September, with a season of "small rains" occurring generally in March. The chief river is the Blue Nile, issuing from the Tsana lake; the Atbara and many other tributaries of the Nile also rise in the Ethiopian highlands.

The Amharas, who inhabit the provinces of Tigre, Begemdir, Gojjam, parts of Shoa, and many of the Gallas, are Christian (a branch of the Coptic Church). The head of the Coptic Church is the Coptic Patriarch at Alexandria. Since 1950 Bishops have, however, been appointed by the local Metropolitan Bishop, without direct recourse to Alexandria. Moslems predominate in some areas, notably Harar and Jimma and Arussi, the Moslem centre being at Harar. The province of Gamu Gofa and parts of Sidamo and Arussi have considerable pagan elements.

Government.—On the basis of the 1955 Constitution, elections were held in 1957 and the Chamber of Deputies met for the first time at the end of that year. The Chamber enjoys greater fiscal control than the past Assembly and there is a limited degree of ministerial responsibility to Parliament. The Senate continues to be nominated by the Emperor.

Production and Industry.—The principal pursuits are agriculture and cattle breeding. In the hotter regions, sugar-cane, cotton, &c., flourish; in the middle zone maize, wheat, barley, coffee, wild oranges and other fruit trees, tobacco, potatoes and oil seeds are cultivated; and above 6,000 feet are excellent pastures with some corn cultivation. Coffee provided 62.5 per cent. of the country's total exports by value in 1958. The forests are a potential source of wealth. Horses, mules, donkeys, cattle, oxen, goats, and sheep, and camels in the lowlands, form a large portion of the wealth of the people.

Communications.—A railway links Addis Ababa, the capital, via Dire-Dawa, with Jibuti, 486 miles away. Several roads were constructed before and during the Italian occupation; the principal road runs from Addis Ababa to Dessie and on to Asmara in Eritrea, with a branch from Dessie to Assab on the Red Sea Coast. Ethiopia has access to the Red Sea at Massawa and Assab, ports being a federal responsibility. Gondar is linked to Asmara by a road through Axum and Adua. Others run from Addis Ababa west to Lekemti, south-west to Jimma, Gore and Gambela, south to the Kenya frontier, and in the East from Dire Dawa to Harar and British Somaliland. In September, 1950, Ethiopia was granted a loan of U.S. $5,000,000 by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development for the extension and repair of the highway system. A further loan of $Eth. 15,000,000 was granted in 1957. The Ethiopian Air Lines maintain regular services from Addis Ababa to Jimma, Gore and Gambela; Debra Markos, Gondar and Asmara; Dire-Dawa; and certain other provincial towns. External services are operated to Jibouti, Port Sudan, Cairo, Khartoum, Nairobi, Athens and Frankfurt.

Defence.—A Ministry of Defence has been instituted. The armed forces comprise the Imperial Army which includes the Imperial Bodyguard, the Imperial Air Force and the Imperial Navy. The Army consists of infantry, artillery, engineers, signals, ordnance, and supply services, and has an armoured squadron of light tanks and armoured cars. The Imperial Bodyguard consists of infantry, with some artillery and armoured cars. An American Military Mission trains the Army, and Swedish officers are employed in the Ministry of Defence. There is now a military academy at Harar. The Imperial Air Force comprises three attack squadrons and a flying training school. The aircraft are of British and Swedish manufacture and the training staff is Swedish.

The Imperial Navy, which has been started with the formation of a Naval School at Massawa with Norwegian instructors, has two coastal cutters.

Education.—Elementary education is provided without religious discrimination, by Government schools in the main centres of population; there are also Mission schools. In or near the capital are several secondary schools, a university college, a technical school, an agricultural school, a theological college, commercial school, and a teacher-training college; also cadet-schools for the Army, Imperial Guard, Air Force, and Police. Schools of higher grade than elementary are also to be found in some of the provincial capitals. Amharic is the official language of instruction, with English as the first foreign language. Arabic is taught in Koran Schools; and Ge'ez (the ancient Ethiopic) in Christian Church Schools, which abound. Adult education is met to some extent by institutes which provide evening classes in Addis Ababa.

Revenue.....	£7,930,000	£25,090,000
Expenditure.....	9,672,000	22,645,000

Currency.—The Ethiopian dollar has a value of 5.52 grains of fine gold and is divided into 100 cents. It was first issued by the State Bank of Ethiopia in July, 1945, at an exchange rate of Ethiopian $10 = £1, backed almost entirely by sterling securities. Ethiopia did not devalue her currency in line with sterling in September, 1949, and a rate of E$7 = £1 has been maintained since that date.

The chief imports by value are cottons, petroleum products, machinery, motor vehicles and parts; the principal exports by value being coffee, oilseeds, hides and skins, cereals and pulses.

CAPITAL. Addis Ababa (estimated population 400,000), also capital of the province of Shoa; other provincial capitals are Makale (Tigré), Gondar (Begemdir), Dessie (Walio), Debra Markos (Gorjam), Lekemti (Wallega), Goré (Iubbabor), Jimma (Kaffa), Chencha (Gamugofa), Yirgalem (Sidamo), Aselle (Arusi), and Harar (Harar). Besides these, Dire-Dawa, Gambela, and Aduwa are towns of some importance. There are ancient architectural remains at Aksum, Gondar, Lalibela and elsewhere.

ETHIOPIAN FLAG: Three horizontal bands; green, yellow, red.

ERITREA

A former colony of Italy, Eritrea extends from Ras Kasar, 18° 2' N., to Ras Demoirra, 12° 42' N., and is bounded on N.W. by the Sudan, on S. by Ethiopia, and on S.E. by French Somaliland. It consists of a high, mountainous hogsback interposed between the Red Sea and the Sudan, flanked on east and west by flatter territory. The mountains range up to 10,000 ft. and Asmara, the capital (pop. 120,000, 7,000 Italians), stands at 7,800 ft. above mean sea level. Total area, 48,350 square miles, with a population of about 1,000,000, of whom about 12,000 are Europeans. Of the population about half are Coptic Christians and the remaining half are Moslems.

Eritrea was administered by Great Britain from the end of the Second World War until September 15, 1952, when in accordance with a resolution of the United Nations Assembly of December 2, 1950, it was federated with Ethiopia under the Ethiopian Crown. A new Constitution for Eritrea, drawn up by the U.N. Commissioner, and approved by the Eritrean Constituent Assembly, was ratified by the Emperor Haile Selassie on August 12, 1952. The Government of Eritrea has legislative, executive and judicial powers in domestic affairs, and its jurisdiction extends to all matters not vested in the Federal Government, including health, education, welfare, law and order, the levying of taxes and adoption of a budget. Defence, currency, foreign affairs, finance, foreign trade and communications (including ports) are within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. The Federation of Eritrea with Ethiopia was ratified by the Emperor Haile Selassie on September 12, 1952, and came into effect with the final handing over of authority by the British Administration at midnight on September 15, 1952.

Full executive power is, subject to certain safeguards, in the hands of a Chief Executive elected by the Assembly to hold office during its own term, but not responsible to the Assembly. The single chamber Assembly is elected by all adult males of federal nationality. There is also in Eritrea a representative of the Emperor who has certain formal rights and prerogatives not affecting Eritrea's autonomy. English was adopted as the official language of the Eritrean Assembly.

Chief Executive of Eritrea, Dejasmach Asfaha Welde Mikael, appointed 1955.

Ψ Massawa (pop. 27,000) is the chief port, where there is a good harbour, other centres being Keren (20,000), Decamere (9,000), Adi Ugri, Agordat and Tessenci. A railway from Massawa runs to Asmara and thence inland to Keren and Agordat, with projected extensions towards the S.E. boundary.

FINNISH EMBASSY IN LONDON

66 Chester Square, S.W.1

Ambassador in London, His Excellency Leo Tuominen (1957).

Area and Population.—A country situated on the Gulfs of Finland and Bothnia, with a total area of 130,127 square miles, of which 70 per cent. is forest, 9 per cent. cultivated, 9 per cent. lakes and 12 per cent. waste and other land, population (Dec. 31, 1957) 4,356,000. In 1957 the birth rate was 19.9 per 1,000, death rate 9.4 per 1,000. The infant mortality rate is 28.1 per 1,000 live births. 96 per cent. of the people are Lutherans, 1.7 per cent. Greek Orthodox and 2.3 per cent. belong to other religious bodies. The loss of Karelia meant resettling about 480,000 refugees mainly on some 46,000 new farms provided by the Government, partly from holdings exceeding 62 acres and partly by purchase.

The Åland Archipelago (Ålvenanmaa), a group of small islands at the entrance to the Gulf of Bothnia, covers about 572 square miles, with a population (1954) of 21,486 (97 per cent. Swedish-speaking). The islands have a semi-autonomous status.

Government.—Under the Constitution there is a single Chamber (Eduskunta) for which women are eligible, now composed of 200 members, elected by universal suffrage of both sexes. The legislative power is vested in the Chamber and the President. The highest executive power is held by the President who is elected for a period of 6 years.

After the last general election in July, 1958, 10 Social Democrat Deputies who had been elected on official party lists joined the Social Democrat opposition group in the Diet. The present state of the parties, therefore, is as follows:—Finnish People's Democratic League (Communist), 50; Agrarian Union, 48; Social Democrat Party, 38; Conservatives, 29; Swedish People's Party, 14; Social Democrat Opposition, 13; Finnish People's Party (Liberal), 8.

Defence.—By the terms of the Peace Treaty (Feb. 10, 1947) with U.K. and U.S.S.R., the army is limited to a force not exceeding 34,000. The Navy is limited to a total of 10,000 tons displacement with personnel not exceeding 4,500. The Air Force, including naval air arm, is limited to 60 machines with a personnel not exceeding 3,000. Bombers or aircraft with bomb-carrying facilities are expressly forbidden. The Defence Forces contain a cadre of regular officers and N.C.O.'s, but their bulk is provided by conscripts who serve for 8–11 months. None of the defence forces has the full complement permitted.

Education.—Primary education is compulsory and free for all children from 7 to 15 years, and in 1951–52 there were 492,000 in attendance at primary schools, with 101,000 in secondary schools and 31,000 in colleges for vocational training.

There are 11 Higher Schools with 4,400 students, and in addition to the State University of Helsinki (about 9,000 students) there is a Finnish-speaking University (450 students) and a Swedish-speaking University (550 students) at Turku.

Language and Literature.—Most Finns are bilingual. 91.2 per cent. speak Finnish as their first language, 8.6 Swedish and the remaining 0.2 per cent. other languages (mainly Lapps living a nomadic life in the North). Since 1883 Finnish has been on an equal footing with Swedish as the official language of Finland, but since Independence in 1919 Finnish has slowly been displacing Swedish. In literature also, until the close of the eighteenth century, Swedish was dominant, but awakening Finnish nationalism in the early years of the nineteenth century and the establishment of an association for the promotion of Finnish literature in 1831 gave Finnish the status of a literary language. There is a vigorous modern literature. Emil Sillanpää was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1939. There are 65 daily newspapers in Finland.

Production and Industry.—Agriculture and forestry are the principal occupations of the people. The cultivated area is small (about 6,425,000 acres in 1958, including 2,200,000 under hay). The main crops are hay, oats, wheat, rye, barley and potatoes. The live stock (1958) included 261,350 horses, 1,935,558 cattle, 407,274 sheep, 534,000 pigs, 6,580,000 poultry. The total forest area is about 63,000,000 acres of which 42,700,000 are productive. This area exceeds that of every European country except the Soviet Union. The growing stock comprises 72,650,000,000 cubic feet including bark, of this about 45 per cent. is pitch pine, about 32 per cent. spruce and the rest largely birch. Saw mills, and the manufacture of wood pulp, cellulose, paper, plywood and prefabricated houses provide employment for about 62,000 factory workers. There is no coal, and mineral resources, with the exception of copper and iron ore, are limited.

Communications.—There are 3,700 miles of railroad and a well-developed telegraph and telephone system. There is railway connection with Sweden and U.S.S.R., passenger boat connection with most of the countries of Western Europe, and telephone communication with most countries of the world. External civil air services are maintained by BEAC (as far as Stockholm), Aero Oy (Finnish Airlines), Scandinavian Airlines System and Pan American Airways. Aero Oy and Aero Flot (the Soviet State Airlines) between them maintain a daily service with Moscow. Aero Oy maintains an extensive internal air service. Aero Flot maintains a service twice a week with Leningrad and Czech State Airlines twice a week with Prague. The merchant fleet (April, 1959) consists of 246 steamships (355,000 tons gross), 188 motor vessels (403,000 tons gross), and 108 sailing ships with auxiliary engine (11,000 tons gross).

(a), (b), (c). These Departments correspond with the districts of Alsace and Lorraine.

AREA AND POPULATION.—The most westerly State of Central Europe, extending from $44^{\circ} 20'$ to $51^{\circ} 5'$ N. lat., and from $7^{\circ} 45'$ E. to $4^{\circ} 45'$ W. long., bounded on the north by the English Channel and Straits of Dover (Pas de Calais), which separate it from England. Its circumference is estimated at about 3,000 miles, and its area (in 1939) at 212,895 square miles (excluding Algeria) divided into 90 departments, including the island of Corsica, in the Mediterranean, off the west coast of Italy. The population of Metropolitan France on Jan. 1, 1959, was estimated at 44,788,000 by the French National Institute of Statistics. During 1956 there were 804,000 live births, 542,000 deaths and 294,000 marriages.

GOVERNMENT.—The monarchical system of government was overthrown by the French Revolution (1789–1793), and the First Republic endured until the Great Napoleon (born Aug. 15, 1769, died May 5, 1821) founded the First Empire in 1804. The monarchy was restored in 1814, and also after the "Hundred Days" of Napoleon (March 20–June 29, 1815), until the Second Republic of 1848, which became the Second Empire on Nov. 22, 1852. On Sept. 4, 1870, the Emperor Napoleon III. (nephew of the Great Napoleon) was deposed, and the Third Republic was set up. The constitution of the Third Republic vested the legislative power in a Chamber of Deputies and a Senate. The executive was vested in the President, who was elected for 7 years by the Senate and Chamber assembled in Congress.

On Sept. 1, 1939, Germany invaded Poland, thus precipitating war with France and Great Britain, which had (March 31, 1939) given an open pledge to support Poland against aggression.

On June 17, 1940, the late Maréchal Pétain sought terms of surrender from the Germans. A number of French troops had reached British ports after the evacuation of the British Expeditionary Force from Dunkirk and St. Valéry and on June 23, 1940, after stating that the French Government had capitulated before all means of resistance had been exhausted, General de Gaulle announced the formation of a Provisional National Committee "to defend that part of the French Empire which has not yet been conquered by Germany and to free that part of France still under the yoke of the invader."

On June 3, 1943, after prolonged negotiation, there was set up a French Committee of National Liberation, which was recognized by the allied nations on August 26, 1943.

Paris was liberated on August 25, 1944, and on October 13, 1944, the de Gaulle administration was recognized by the allied nations as the government of France.

Under the de Gaulle administration there was a single chamber legislature (The National Consultative Assembly) which met at Algiers until France was liberated. The enlarged Consultative Assembly met in the Luxembourg Palace (Paris), formerly the Senate House, on Nov. 7, 1944.

Following a national referendum on Oct. 21, 1945, a Constituent Assembly was elected with the task of drafting a new constitution. This was duly drawn up and adopted at a further referendum on Oct. 13, 1946. A National Assembly and Council of the Republic, elected on a territorial basis, were set up. With amendments made in 1954, the Constitution of the Fourth Republic was in force from 1946 until Oct. 5, 1958. From the liberation of Paris in 1944 until the Fourth Republic came to an end in 1958, 26 Cabinets were formed with an average life of $5\frac{1}{2}$ months. The Government of M. Mollet for 16 months in 1956–57 was the longest in office, that of M. Queuille in 1950 the shortest, being in office for only three days.

Insurrections took place in Algeria and in the Metropolitan Department of Corsica in May, 1958, and, faced by a threat of imminent insurrection among the armed forces at home, President Coty warned the nation that it was on the brink of civil war and invited General de Gaulle to form a Government. M. Pflimlin formally resigned the office of Prime Minister on May 31. On June 1, by 329 votes to 224, Gen. de Gaulle was invested in the National Assembly as Prime Minister, with power to govern by decree for a period of six months during which time proposals for constitutional reform would be submitted to a national referendum.

The Fifth Republic.—The Constitution of the Fifth Republic, embodying important changes, was adopted by an overwhelming majority at a referendum held on Sept. 28 in Metropolitan France and all overseas departments and territories. (See also French Community below).

The President is elected for a term of 7 years by an electoral college consisting of both Houses of Parliament, the departmental general councils, overseas assemblies and elected representatives of the municipal councils. He is also eligible for re-election. The President appoints the Prime Minister. He may dissolve the National Assembly after consultation with the Prime Minister and Presidents of both Houses, but may not do so more than once in twelve months. He may submit disputed legislation to a national referendum at the request of the Government or of both Houses of Parliament. The President may assume special powers in an emergency. At the presidential elections held on Dec. 21, 1958, General de Gaulle was elected President by an overwhelming majority and took office on Jan. 8, 1959, as first President of the Fifth French Republic.

Parliament consists of the National Assembly and the Senate. Bills may be presented in either House, except money bills, which must originate in the National Assembly. The normal session of Parliament is confined to $5\frac{1}{2}$ months each year and it may also meet in extraordinary session for 12 days at the request of the Prime Minister or a majority of the Assembly. Voting rights are personal and can only be delegated in special circumstances.

The Prime Minister and the Cabinet are responsible only to Parliament. The Prime Minister is assumed to have the Assembly's confidence unless the Opposition moves a censure motion signed by not less than one-tenth of the deputies; such motion must be approved by an absolute majority; if defeated, its sponsors must not introduce another no-confidence motion in the same session. Ministers relinquish Parliamentary seats on joining the Cabinet.

A Constitutional Council is responsible for supervising all elections and referenda and must be consulted on all constitutional matters and before the President of the Republic assumes emergency powers. At the request of the Government, the Economic and Social Council gives advice on bills, ordinances or decrees referred to it. Any economic or social plan or bill must be submitted to it.

PRODUCTION.—The chief agriculture products are wheat, barley, rye, maize, oats, potatoes, beet-root (for the manufacture of sugar), hops, &c. Rice is being grown in parts of the Camargue (Rhône delta). Fruit trees abound, and are very productive, the principal being the olive, chestnut, walnut, almond, apple, pear, citron, fig, plum, &c.

The harvest in 1958 was:—

	(Quintals)
Wheat.....	96,000,000
Oats.....	26,100,000
Barley.....	39,000,000
Rye.....	4,700,000
Maize.....	26,200,000

Forestry is an important industry, the principal forests being those of the Ardennes, Compiègne, Fontainebleau, and Orléans, consisting chiefly of oak, birch, pine, beech, elm, chestnut and the cork-tree in the south. The vine is cultivated to a very great extent, as the names Bordeaux, Burgundy, Champagne, &c., universally testify. Production of wine in 1958 (excluding Algeria) was 47,000,000 hectolitres. Cider-making is also an important industry. The live stock (1957) included 17,928,700 cattle, 8,575,000 sheep and lambs, 8,063,000 pigs, 1,986,000 horses and 1,202,000 goats. The mineral resources include coal, pig iron, bauxite, copper, lead, silver, antimony and salt. In 1958 coal production amounted to 60,340,000 tons. The most important manufactures are of metals, watches, jewellery, cabinet-work, carving, pottery, glass, chemicals, dyeing, paper making, cottons, woollens, carpets, linen, silk and lace.

LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.—French is the universal language of France and of a large proportion of the people of Belgium, Luxembourg, Switzerland, Italy, Egypt, Tunisia, Algeria, Mauritius, Haiti, the Province of Quebec, Canada, and of the State of Louisiana, U.S.A., to whom the almost inexhaustible literature of France is a treasured heritage. The work of the French Academy, founded by Richelieu in 1635, has established le bon usage, equivalent to "The King's English" in Great Britain. French authors have been awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature on 9 occasions—R.F.A. Sully-Prudhomme (1901), F. Mistral (1904), Romain Rolland (1915), Anatole France (1921), Henri Bergson (1937), Roger M. du Gard (1937), André Gide (1947), François Mauriac (1952) and Albert Camus (1957).

DEFENCE.—The personnel of the Defence Forces in mid-1959, was—Army 780,000 (including Gendarmerie of 60,000); Navy 76,000; Air Force 130,000. The French Navy included 2 battleships, 3 aircraft carriers, 50 cruisers, 50 destroyers and 21 submarines.

EDUCATION.—The educational system is highly developed. Central Administration comprises (a) Ministry of National Education with Secretariats of State for Technical Education, Youth and Sports, and for Fine Arts; (b) Superior Educational Council, charged with the actual administration; (c) Consultative Committee (advisory); (d) Educational Bureaux and Inspecting Staffs, whose heads report direct to the Minister. Local Administration comprises (a) Territorial Academies, with inspecting staffs for all grades; and (b) Departmental Councils, presided over by the préfet, charged especially with primary education. (i.) Primary education is secular, compulsory and free, the school age being 6 to 14. Schools are for boys, for girls, or mixed. (ii.) Secondary: State lycées, communal colleges, and many private establishments, 7-yrs. course, either (a) purely classical; (b) purely modern; (c) Latin and sciences; or (d) Latin and modern languages. Sèvres school and the Sorbonne (University of Paris) are among the well known establishments. (iii.) Special Schools are numerous. (iv.) There are 17 Universities (State universities alone grant degrees, but numerous private faculties and private institutions further higher education): Aix (A.D. 1409), Alger, Besançon (1485), Bordeaux (1441), Caen (1432), Clermont (1808), Dijon (1722), Grenoble (1339), Lille (1530), Lyons (1808), Montpellier (1125), Nancy (1572), Paris (1150), Poitiers (1431), Rennes (1735), Strasbourg (1567), and Toulouse (1230).

ARCHÆOLOGY, ETC.—There are dolmens and menhirs in Brittany, prehistoric remains in Dordogne, cave drawings in Ariège, and throughout France various megalithic monuments erected by primitive tribes, predecessors of Iberian invaders from Spain (now represented by the Basques), Ligurians from northern Italy and Celts or Gauls from the valley of the Danube. Julius Cæsar found Gaul "divided into three parts" and described three political groups—Aquitani south of the Garonne, Celts between the Garonne and the Seine and Marne, and Belgæ from the Seine to the Rhine. Roman remains are plentiful throughout France in the form of aqueducts, arenas, triumphal arches, &c., and the celebrated Norman and Gothic Cathedrals, including Notre Dame in Paris, and those of Chartres, Reims, Amiens (where Peter the Hermit preached the First Crusade for the recovery of the Holy Sepulchre), Bourges, Beauvais, Rouen, etc., have survived invasions and bombardments, with only partial damage, and many of the renaissance and XVIIIth century châteaux survived the French Revolution.

COMMUNICATIONS.—The length of the Routes Nationales is about 50,000 miles, and of other roads 382,000 miles. The principal rivers of France are the Seine, Loire, Garonne, and Rhône, the navigable waterways in general use having a length of 8,000 km. The Rhône is navigable for 1,200-ton vessels from the sea to Switzerland.

The system of railroads in France is very extensive. The length of lines of general interest, exclusive of local lines, open for traffic on Jan. 1, 1958, was 39,600 km., of which 5,790 km. were electrified. The lines left open in Sept., 1944 totalled only 11,125 miles, but the work of reconstruction then begun has restored the pre-war figure. Traffic in 1957 totalled 32,600,000,000 passenger-kilometres and 53,600,000,000 ton-kilometres.

Civil Aviation.—In 1958 passenger-kilometres flown by aircraft of French airlines totalled 4,317,607,000, of which 3,254,307,000 were by Air France.

Shipping.—The French mercantile marine on Jan. 1, 1959, consisted of 1,078 ships of 4,361,454 tons gross, of which 59 were passenger vessels (563,194 tons) 156 tankers (1,635,165 tons), 475 cargo vessels (1,847,264 tons) and 327 tugs (38,563 tons).

FINANCE		1959
Total revenue (Budget).....	Frs.	5,602 milliard
Ordinary expenditure (do.)..		6,189 milliard

The Public Debt, on December 31, 1958, amounted to Frs. 7,972 milliard, of which the external debt accounted for Frs. 1,383 milliard.

Currency.—The unit of currency is the franc of 100 centimes. On August 12, 1957, a system of exchange rates was introduced which amounted to a devaluation of the franc by 20 per cent. in certain sectors. This devaluation was made general on October 26, 1957. On Dec. 30, 1958, the franc was further devalued by 17½ per cent. to Frs. 1,400 = £1 (Frs. 492.70 = $1 U.S.). A "heavy" franc (Frs. 100 = 1 de Gaulle franc) is also being introduced.

COMMERCE

The principal imports are wool, cotton, chemicals, coke, crude oil, oleaginous fruits and seeds, machinery, raw skins, timber, rubber, copper and coffee. The principal exports are chemical products, iron and steel, textiles (silk and cotton), automobiles, wine and other agricultural products, soaps and perfumes, and glass.

ALGERIA

Algeria lies between 8°45' W. to 12° E. longitude, 37° 6' N. to an undetermined S. limit about 19° N. Area, 855,900 sq. miles (estimated). Population (1957), about 10,000,000.

Government.—Algiers surrendered to a French force on July 5, 1830, and Algeria was annexed to France in Feb. 1842. From 1881 the three northern departments of Algiers, Oran and Constantine formed an integral part of France. A new department of Bône was formed in 1955 and a further eight new departments (Tlemcen, Mostaganem, Tlaret, Orleanville, Médéa, Tizi-Ouzou, Setif and Batna) in 1956. In 1958 the three departments of Aumale, Bougie and Salda were created and, by a new constitutional law passed on April 15, 1958, all departments of Algeria were grouped into five autonomous territories, each with an elected Territorial Assembly:—

- Oran (Oran, Tlemcen and Salda).
- Chélif (Mostaganem, Orleanville and Tlaret).
- Algiers (Algiers, Médéa and Aumale).
- Kabylies (Tizi-Ouzou and Bougie).
- Constantine (Batna, Bône and Setif).

A single municipal administration for Greater Algiers had been established in March, 1958. Recent Events.—On May 13-14, 1958, the military authorities in Algiers occupied the Ministry of Algeria and other public buildings and formed a Committee of Public Safety. The Commander-in-Chief, General Salan, announced that he had provisionally taken over responsibility for the destinies of Algeria. At the first meeting of the Pflimlin Cabinet of May 14, General Salan was entrusted with the maintenance of order in Algeria. A Single Committee of Public Safety for the whole of Algeria, formed on May 23, demanded the setting up of a Government of Public Safety for France under Gen. de Gaulle. Following the investiture of Gen. de Gaulle as Prime Minister on June 1 (see above), General Salan was appointed Delegate-General of the Government in Algeria, with powers similar to those of the former Resident Minister. Civil government was restored in Algeria on Dec.

12, 1958, when M. Paul Delouvrier was appointed Delegate-General and General Salan returned to Paris.

The total value of imports in 1957 was frs. 305.8 milliard and of the exports frs. 171.8 milliard. The bulk of trade is with France. Trade with the United Kingdom in 1958 was valued at: Imports, £3,973,599; Exports to U.K., £11,410,136. The exports consist mainly of wine, wheat and other cereals, sheep and oxen, skins, fruits, zinc and iron ores, olive oil, phosphates, corkwood, esparto grass, manufactured tobacco, and vegetables. The principal imports from the U.K. were coal and patent fuel, machinery, cotton oil, cotton tissues, tin plates, clothing, and prepared skins. Iron, copper, quicksilver, zinc, and lead mines are being worked. In 1954 there were 2,774 miles of railroad open for traffic; and in 1956 the number of ships engaged in foreign trade entering Algerian ports was 5,257. 22,995 commercial aircraft arrived at or departed from Algerian airports in 1956. The principal town is Ψ Algiers, the capital (municipal population, Census, 1954, 361,300), a most important coaling station and much frequented as a health resort; other large towns are Ψ Oran (290,000), Constantine (148,700), Ψ Bone (114,100), Sidi bel Abbès (80,600), Tizi Ouzou (27,897), Ψ Philippeville (70,400), Mascara (57,500), Tlemcen (73,400), Ψ Bougie (52,283), and Ψ Mostaganem (60,200).

Southern Territories.—The Territories of Ain Sefra, Ghardaia, Touggourt and the Saharan Oases, were formed into a separate colony on Dec. 24, 1902. In 1957 a new Joint Organization for the Sahara (O.C.R.S.) was set up to control the economic development of the Sahara Region and raise the standard of living of the native populations. Included in the development area were parts of the French Sudan (now Sudanese Republic), Niger (W. Africa) and Chad (Equatorial Africa), which were represented on a mixed commission. A Delegate-General was appointed by the French Government to be responsible for the execution of the programmes and for defence and public order. Oil, iron ore, tin, uranium and natural gas were found to exist in quantities in the Sahara region. Southern Algeria was re-divided into the two Territories of Saoura and the Oases, with administrative headquarters at Colomb-Bechar and Laghouat respectively. Saoura consists of the parts of Ain-Sefra now controlled by O.C.R.S. and the Oases of the former Territory of that name, together with parts of Ghardaia and Touggourt also controlled by O.C.R.S. Those parts of Ain-Sefra, Ghardaia and Touggourt lying north of the Saharan Atlas mountains were merged with the Algerian Departments of Salda, Médéa and Aumale respectively.

OVERSEAS DEPARTMENTS

With effect from Jan. 1, 1947, the colonies of French Guiana, Martinique, Guadeloupe and La Réunion with its dependencies were raised to the same status as Metropolitan Departments and rank with the rest of France for education, health and social services.

La Réunion.—Formerly Ile de Bourbon, about 420 miles E. of Madagascar, Réunion has been a French possession since 1643. Area, about 1,000 sq. miles. Population (1957), 301,000. Capital, St. Denis (41,863). Assigned to the administration of Réunion are the distant islands of St. Paul (3 sq. miles), New Amsterdam (27 sq. miles) and Kerguelen containing whaling and fishing stations (1,100 sq. miles). The Crozet Islands (200 sq. miles) and Adélie Land (see p. 721) in the Antarctic Continent are also dependencies of Réunion.

Martinique.—An island situated in the Windward

Islands group of the West Indies, between the British colonies of Dominica in the north and St. Lucia in the south. Population (1957), 255,600. Capital, Ψ Fort de France (60,600). Other towns are Ψ Trinite (39,173) and Ψ Marin (31,369).

Guadeloupe.—In the Leeward Islands of the West Indies, the island of Guadeloupe, together with Marie Galante, the Ile des Saintes, Petite Terre, St. Barthélemy and St. Martin, form the other West Indian Department of France. Capital, Ψ Pointe à Pitre (26,200). Other towns are Ψ Basse Terre (13,636) in Guadeloupe and Ψ Grand Bourg (12,827) in Marie Galante.

French Guiana.—Area, 35,000 sq. miles. Population (1957), 29,000. Capital, Ψ Cayenne (13,300). Situated on the north-eastern coast of South America, French Guiana is flanked by Netherlands Guiana on the west and by Brazil on the south and east. Under the administration of French Guiana is a group of islands (St. Joseph, Ile Royale and Ile du Diable), known as Iles du Salut. On Devil's Isle, Captain Dreyfus was imprisoned from 1894–1899.

CAPITAL OF FRANCE. Paris, on the Seine.

Population (1954), (Paris ville) 2,850,189. The population of Greater Paris (within 15-mile radius) is approximately 6,600,000. Twenty-three other cities exceeded 100,000 at the Census of 1954— Ψ Marseilles (661,492), Ψ Lyons (553,039), Toulouse (268,863), Ψ Bordeaux (257,946), Ψ Nice (244,360), Ψ Nantes (222,790), Strasbourg (200,921), Lille (194,616), St. Etienne (181,730), Ψ Toulon (141,117), Ψ Le Havre (139,810), Nancy (124,797), Rennes (124,122), Reims (121,145), Limoges (116,540), Grenoble (116,440), Clermont Ferrand (113,391), Dijon (112,844), Le Mans (111,891), Ψ Brest (110,713), Roubaix (110,067), Limoges (105,990) and Angers (102,142).

The chief towns of Corsica are Ψ Ajaccio 32,997 and Ψ Bastia 42,729.

Paris is distant from London 267 miles; transit by air, 1 hr. 10 mins.

FLAG: The "tricolour," three vertical bands, blue, white, red (blue next to flagstaff).

BRITISH COUNCIL

Representative in Paris, R. P. Hinks, 36 rue des Ecoles, Paris V.

THE FRENCH COMMUNITY

The Constitution of the Fifth French Republic promulgated on Oct. 6, 1958, set up the French Community (successor to the French Union), in which member States enjoy autonomy and manage their own affairs freely. There is a single citizenship within the Community; all citizens have the same rights and duties, irrespective of their origin, race or religion. Matters of common policy are specified in the Constitution and include foreign affairs, defence, financial and economic policy, justice, higher education, transport and telecommunication. The President of the French Republic is President of the French Community and in the latter capacity is represented in each state of the Community by a High Commissioner. The official language, national anthem and flag of France were adopted for the Community. The following organs of the Community were set up in 1959.

Executive Council.—Composed of the President (Chairman), the Prime Ministers of the French Republic and the heads of government of each member State, and the Ministers responsible for the common affairs of the Community. The first meeting of the Council was held in Paris on Feb. 3–4, 1959. Four committees were appointed to study matters of common interest and report to the Council.

Senate.—Constituted on a basis of one member for every 300,000 inhabitants, with a minimum of three members for any State, a total of 284 members. Numbers of members from each State are shown in the list of States below. The Senate holds two sessions each year of not more than one month's duration.

Court of Arbitration.—Constituted by persons from each State designated by the President by reason of their competence, to adjudicate in disputes between members of the Community.

Secretariat.—The functions of the General Secretariat were defined at the first meeting of the Executive Council.

Secretary-General, M. Raymond Janot.

The African member States and the Madagascar Republic each nominate two members to sit on the Economic and Social Council (see under Fifth Republic above).

The French Community consists of the following:
 The French Republic (Metropolitan France, Algeria and the Overseas Departments) (186).

The Malgasy Republic (République malgache) (17).—Area, 228,000 sq. miles. Population (1959), 5,774,523. Madagascar is 240 miles distant from the S.E. coast of Africa and is the fifth largest island in the world. It became a French protectorate in 1890. In 1896 the Hova dynasty was suppressed and the administration entrusted to a Governor-General. Constitutional reforms were introduced in 1957 giving the island internal autonomy and Madagascar adopted republican status on Oct. 14, 1958. President of the Government, M. Philibert Tsiranana (1959). High Commissioner of the French Community, M. André Soucaudaux (1954).

Agriculture and cattle raising are the principal industries; minerals include gold, graphite and mica. In the year 1958 Madagascar exported (in millions of francs CFA): Coffee, 7,983; tobacco, 1,023; cloves, 859; vanilla, 1,474; rice, 1,998; clove essence, 182; raffia, 654; sisal, 411; graphite, 247; canned meat, 366; fresh meat, 336; butter beans, 454; ground nuts, 486. Total Exports, Fr.CFA. 20,247,700,000. Imports (1958), in millions of francs CFA: cotton textiles, 1,660; rayon and synthetic fibres, 1,121; vehicles, etc., 3,200; machinery, 1,863; chemical products, 2,088; metal goods, 3,009; wines and spirits, 1,253; petroleum products, 1,074; made-up textiles, 1,675; electrical goods, 1,079; cement, 562; wheat flour, 520; total imports, Fr.CFA. 26,563,500,000. Trade with U.K. (1958), Imports, £752,298; Exports to U.K. £724,430.

Capital, Tananarive (206,324). Other towns are Majunga (51,687) and ΨTamatave (48,627), the chief port. The former dependencies of Madagascar in the Mozambique Channel, Juan de Nova, Europe Island and Bassas da India (uninhabited), are now administered by the French Government as units of the French Community.

West Africa*

Dates of adoption of Republican status and numbers of members sent to the Senate of the French Community are shown in parentheses. High Commissioners are those of the French Community, appointed by the President.

Republic of Dahomey (Dec. 4, 1958) (6).—Area, 47,144 sq. miles. Population (1957), 1,713,000. Capital, ΨPorto Novo (30,800). Prime Minister, M. Hubert Maga. High Commissioner, M. René Tirant.

Islamic Republic of Mauritania (Nov. 28, 1958) (3).—Area, 322,340 sq. miles. Population (1957), 624,000. Capital, Nouakchott. Prime Minister, M. Moktar Ould Daddah. High Commissioner, M. Pierre Anthonioz.

Republic of Niger (Dec. 18, 1958) (9).—Area, 484,000 sq. miles. Population (1957), 2,415,000. Capital, Niamey (18,100). President of the Council, M. Hamani Diori. High Commissioner, M. Don Jean Colombani.

†State of Sénégal (Nov. 25, 1958) (8).—Area, 77,814 sq. miles. Population (1957), 2,265,000. Capital, ΨDakar (234,500). President of the Council, M. Mamadou Dia. High Commissioner, M. Pierre Lami.

†Sudanese Republic (Nov. 24, 1958) (13).—Area, 582,437 sq. miles. Population (1957), 3,708,000. Capital, Bamako (68,600). President of the Council, M. Modibo Keita. High Commissioner, M. Jean Sicurani.

Republic of Upper Volta (Dec. 11, 1958) (12).—Area, 100,000 sq. miles. Population (1957), 3,266,000. Capital, Ouagadougou (32,100). President of the Council, M. Maurice Yameogo. High Commissioner, M. Paul Masson.

*The former colony of French Guinea rejected the Constitution of the Fifth Republic at the referendum in Sept., 1958, and was the only French territory not to join the French Community.

†Federation of Mali.—A federation of the State of Sénégal and the Sudanese Republic was inaugurated at Dakar (Sénégal) on April 4, 1959. President of the Federal Government, M. Modibo Keita. A Mali flag of green, gold and red was adopted.

Equatorial Africa

Central African Republic (Dec. 1, 1958, formerly Ubanghi Shari) (4).—Area, 234,460 sq. miles. Population (1957), 1,135,000. Capital, Bangui (82,300). President of the Government, M. David Dacko. High Commissioner, M. Pierre Bordier.

Republic of Chad (Nov. 28, 1958) (9).—Area, 487,020 sq. miles. Population (1957), 2,581,000. Capital, Fort Lamy (45,600). Prime Minister, M. Gabriel Lisette. High Commissioner, M. Daniel Doustin.

Republic of the Congo (Nov. 28, 1958, formerly Middle Congo) (3).—Area, 129,960 sq. miles. Population (1957), 759,000. Capital, Brazzaville (105,200). Prime Minister, Abbé Fulbert Youlou. High Commissioner, M. Guy Georgy.

Republic of Gabon (Nov. 28, 1958) (3).—Area, 101,400 sq. miles. Population (1957), 404,000. Capital, ΨLibreville (16,700). Prime Minister, M. Leon M'Ba. High Commissioner, M. Louis Sannarco.

Somaliland and Island Territories

French Somaliland.—Area, 9,000 sq. miles. Population (1957), 67,000. Capital, ΨJibuti (17,000). Situated on the N.E. African coast round the Gulf of Tajura and extending about 80 miles inland.

New Caledonia.—Area, 7,200 sq. miles. Population (1956), 68,000. Capital, ΨNoumea (12,000). A large island in the Western Pacific, 700 miles E. of Queensland. Dependencies are the Isle of Pines, the Wallis Archipelago, the Loyalty Islands (Mahé, Lifou, Urea, etc.), the Huon Islands and Futuna and Alofi. New Caledonia was discovered in 1774 and annexed by France in 1854; from 1871 to 1896 it was a convict settlement.

French Polynesia.—Area, 2,500 sq. miles. Population (1956), 77,000. Capital, ΨPapeete (15,220), in Tahiti. Includes the Society Islands (Tahiti, Moorea, Makatea, etc.), the Marquesas (Nukahiva, Hiva-oo, etc., 500 sq. miles, population, 3,000); the Leeward Isles (Huahine, Raiatea, Tahaa, Bora Bora, Maupiti, etc.); the Gambier Islands (Mangareva, etc.); the Tubuai Islands (Tubuai, Rurutu, Raiivae, Rimatara and Rapa Island; and Maiao Island).

Comoro Archipelago.—Area, 800 sq. miles. Population (1957), 177,000. Capital, Dzaoudzi. Includes the islands of Great Comoro, Anjouan, Mayotte and Mohilla and certain islets in the Indian Ocean.

St. Pierre and Miquelon.—Area, 93 sq. miles. Population (1957), 4,900. Two small groups of islands off the coast of Newfoundland.

Trustee Territories

Between the Republic of Dahomey and Ghana lies the French sphere of the former German colony of Togoland.—Area, 20,404 sq. miles. Population, 1,085,200. Capital, Lomé (39,200).

On Nov. 24, 1958, a resolution that French Togoland should become independent in 1960 on a date to be fixed by agreement between France and the Togolese was unanimously approved by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

Cameroons.—Between (British) Nigeria and the Republic of the Congo is the French sphere of the former German colony of Kamerun. Area, 143,415 sq. miles. Population, 3,187,000. Capital, Yaoundé (32,000). High Commissioner, M. Xavier Torre.

Agreement was reached between M. Ahmadov Ahidjo, Prime Minister of the French Cameroons, and the French Government in October, 1958, that the Territory would become independent on Jan. 1, 1960. A statute conferring autonomy on the Territory was passed in Paris on Dec. 31, 1958; the Cameroonian Government assumed responsibility for all matters except defence, external relations and currency which were reserved to France until the Territory became independent. A five-Power resolution recommending the cancellation of the trusteeship over the French Cameroons on Jan. 1, 1960, and admission of the Territory to membership of the United Nations was approved by the General Assembly on March 13, 1959.

GERMANY

* Deutsches Reich (German Realm)

THE HISTORY OF GERMANY from 1863-1945 is marked by wars of aggression. In 1864, Prussia, in company with Austria, attacked Denmark, and after a short campaign annexed the peninsula of Schleswig-Holstein. In 1866, as a result of war with Austria (the Seven Weeks' War), Prussia acquired the hegemony of the North Germanic Confederation from Austria. After the Franco-Prussian War of 1870, when Prussia wrested Alsace-Lorraine from France, the North Germanic Confederation and three South German States became the Germanic Confederation, the King of Prussia being proclaimed German Emperor at Versailles on Jan. 18, 1871.

At the outbreak of the War of 1914-1918, Germany was a Confederate League bearing the name German Empire (Deutsches Reich) under the hereditary presidency of the King of Prussia holding the title of German Emperor. At the close of the war, Germany lost most of the gains she had acquired since 1863, including all her colonies.

GERMANY BETWEEN THE TWO WARS.—On Nov. 9, 1918, two days before Germany sued for an Armistice from the victorious Allies, the German Emperor abdicated, and the Government of the country was taken over by the Council of the People's Commissioners in Berlin. In January, 1919, elections were held to a National Assembly on the basis of universal adult suffrage (male and female). The Assembly met at Weimar (Feb. 6, 1919), and elected Friedrich Ebert President of the Republic, a position he occupied until his death (Feb. 28, 1925) when Field Marshal Paul von Hindenburg was elected in his stead. Von Hindenburg was re-elected April 10, 1925, the rival candidate being Adolf Hitler, who was born at Braunau, Austria (April 20, 1889) and had migrated as a young man to Bavaria. A General Election of 1933 provided Hitler's party, the Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Arbeiter Partei (National Socialist German Workers' Party, or Nazis) with an absolute majority in the legislature (Reichstag) and Hitler became Prime Minister (Chancellor), a position which became fused with that of President at the death of von Hindenburg (Aug. 2, 1934), and Adolf Hitler exercised supreme and uncontrolled authority in the Reich.

THE WAR OF 1939-1945.—After concluding a Treaty of Non-Aggression with Soviet Russia (Aug. 24, 1939), Germany invaded Poland (Sept. 1, 1939), thus precipitating war with France and Great Britain, who had (March 31) given a pledge to support Poland against aggression.

Germany invaded and occupied Denmark (April, 1940), Norway, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxemburg (May, 1940); France was then attacked and sued for peace in mid-June. The lightning war against Britain began on August 11, 1940, but the Luftwaffe attack, which was to prepare the way for invasion, was defeated. In April, 1941, Yugoslavia was invaded and Germany joined Italy in attacking Greece and Crete. On June 22, 1941, the U.S.S.R. was invaded. In 1942 the Nazi empire reached its height. The boundaries of Greater Germany included Alsace-Lorraine, Luxemburg, Eupen-Malmédy, large areas of Poland, Memelland and Slovenia; Germany and her satellites controlled all European countries except the British Isles, Spain, Portugal, Switzerland, Sweden and parts of European Russia, as well as large tracts of North Africa. The turning point came in November, 1942, with the Soviet victory at Stalingrad and the British at El Alamein. In 1943 a Soviet offensive threw the invader back almost to the Polish frontier, and the Western Allies, after defeating the Axis in North Africa, landed in Italy. In June, 1944, the Second Front opened on the Normandy beaches and by September, 1944, Germany itself was the battlefield. On May 8, 1945, the unconditional surrender of all German forces was accepted by representatives of the Western Allied and Soviet Supreme Commanders.

Hitler committed suicide on April 30, 1945.

THE POST WAR PERIOD.—After the surrender the Allied Powers assumed supreme authority in Germany. Power was to be exercised by the Commanders-in-Chief, each in his own zone of occupation and jointly in matters affecting Germany as a whole through a Control Council. Berlin was to be governed jointly by the four occupying powers. The guiding lines of policy were laid down in the agreement reached between the U.K., U.S. and U.S.S.R. Governments at Potsdam in August, 1945, which was to remain in force until a Peace Treaty should confirm or revise its directives. It was decided that "for the time being no Central German Government shall be established," but that central German administrative departments acting under the direction of the Control Council should be established in the fields of finance, transport, communications, foreign trade and industry. The Eastern frontier of Germany was provisionally redrawn (pending final settlement in the Peace Treaty) to transfer the northern area of East Prussia, including Königsberg (now Kaliningrad), to the U.S.S.R., and the rest of East Prussia and all the area lying east of the Oder and Western Neisse rivers to Polish control. On Oct. 25, 1947, the Saar, enlarged at the expense of German territory, voted for economic union with France,

* Nazi historians referred to the National Socialist régime as Dritte Reich. The First was the Holy Roman Empire, established in A.D. 962 by Otto I of Saxony, enduring until 1806. The Second was established by Prince Otto von Bismarck, after the Franco-Prussian war in 1871, and endured until 1918. The Third was established by Adolf Hitler in 1933.

but following a plebiscite was incorporated in the Federal Republic of Germany on Jan. 1, 1957. The Potsdam agreement also laid down that Germany should be disarmed and prohibited from producing armaments, that production of certain other goods should be limited to the amount needed to support a peacetime economy and that existing capital equipment surplus to these requirements should be removed as reparations and distributed by the Inter Allied Reparations Agency among the nations who had suffered war damage, in proportion to their losses. (The proportions were fixed by the Paris Conference of November, 1945.) The agreement further dealt with denazification, democratization, refugees, restitution, decartelization, etc.

Though certain details of the Potsdam agreement (not yet superseded by a Peace Treaty) have been carried out, differences in interpretation among the Allies have made it impossible to apply the provisions in full. Quadripartite control became a dead letter when the Russians withdrew from the Control Council in 1948.

Counsellors, Dr. Gerhard Mottmann; Dr. Fritz Caspari.

Area and Population.—The area of the Federal Republic (including the Saarland, incorporated Jan. 1, 1957) is approximately 95,725 sq. miles. The population (excluding the Saarland) estimated (1956) 50,594,500, compared with 39,338,000 in Sept., 1939. The increase is largely due to the influx of refugees. Distribution of the population among the Länder in June, 1956 was:—

Schleswig-Holstein.....	2,271,000
Hamburg.....	1,793,000
Lower Saxony.....	6,541,000
North Rhine Westphalia.....	14,990,000

Hessen.....	4,603,000

Bavaria.....	9,192,000
Baden-Württemberg.....	7,232,000
Rhineland Palatinate.....	3,325,000

The estimated population of the Saarland is..... 1,000,500

Western Berlin with a population of 2,204,400 (June, 1956) is represented in the Federal Parliament and is treated as a Land for the purposes of finance, but has no voting rights.

Population of the principal cities and towns in the Federal Republic (June, 1956):—

Vital Statistics.—There were 15.7 live births per 1,000 inhabitants in the Federal Republic in 1955, compared with 19.8 per 1,000 for the same area in 1938. There was excess of live births over deaths in 1955 of 4.9 per 1,000 and in 1938 of 8.4.

Government.—The Federal Republic grew out of the fusion of the three western zones. The economic union of the U.K. and U.S. zones followed the Fusion Agreement of December, 1946. The Bizone was later joined by the French zone and in 1948–49 a Parliamentary Council, elected by the Diets of the three zones, drafted a provisional democratic federal constitution for Germany. This Basic Law came into force in the three western zones on May 24, 1949. It provides for a President, elected for a five-year term, and for two houses, with a four-year-term of office, the lower elected by direct universal suffrage and the upper composed of delegates of the Länder. The results of the election for the lower house (Bundestag) held on Sept. 6, 1953, were as follows:—

Party	Numbers
Christian Democratic and Christian Social Unions.....	243
Social Democrats.....	151
Free Democrats.....	48
Refugee Party.....	27
German Party.....	15
Independents.....	3
Total.....	487

In July 1955, 7 Refugee Party members seceded and subsequently joined the Christian Democrats. In April, 1956, 14 Free Democrats seceded to form a new party, the Free Peoples' Party. In January, 1957, 10 new Saar members joined the Bundestag. The D.P. and F.V.P. have now formed a joint party. The figures after the election of Sept. 15, 1957, were:

Party	Numbers
Christian Democratic and Christian Social Unions.....	270
Social Democrats.....	169

Free Democrats	41
German Party (German Party Free People's Party)	17
Total	497

When the Federal Government took office the Allied Military Governors were replaced by High Commissioners. In 1952 a contractual agreement was signed between the Federal Republic and the western Allies, whereby the Republic, in return for certain promises regarding a defence contribution, a foreign debt settlement, and the continuation of allied policies concerning decartelization, democratization, restitution, etc., regained virtual sovereignty in May, 1955, after ratification by all the parties concerned. The High Commissioners then became Ambassadors.

The Prime Ministers of Länder governments in July, 1959, were:—

Ministers-President

Baden-Württemberg.—Kurt-Georg Kiesinger.
Bavaria.—Dr. Hanns Seidel.
Berlin.—Willy Brandt (Governing Mayor).
Bremen.—Wilhelm Kaisen.
Hamburg.—Max Brauer.
Hessen.—Dr. Georg-August Zinn.
North Rhine-Westphalia.—Dr. Franz Meyers.
Rhineland-Palatinate.—Dr. Peter Altmeier.
Saarland.—Dr. Franz Josef Röder.
Lower Saxony.—Hinrich Wilhelm Kopf.
Schleswig-Holstein.—Kai Uwe von Hassel.

Economic Position.—Despite the difficulties arising from the division of Germany, which cut off from the Federal Republic the main food producing areas of Eastern Germany and some of the principal centres of light industry, German economic recovery has made rapid strides since the currency reform of 1948. As a result of United States and British economic aid and of successful economic policies pursued by the Federal Government, Germany has regained her position as the main industrial power on the Continent, and is the most economically powerful member of the European Common Market. The Gross National Product at current prices in 1958 is estimated at DM. 222.7 milliard, an increase of DM. 12.5 milliard or 129 per cent. over 1950. In accordance with the Franco-German Agreement of 1957, the economic integration of the Saar with the Federal Republic took place on July 5, 1959.

Agriculture.—The total agricultural area (in 1958) amounted to 14,376,500 hectares, of which 8,116,200 hectares were under plough. The forest area is 7,097,100 hectares. The 1958 harvest yielded 7,664,100 metric tons of bread grains, 5,505,800 metric tons of feeding and industrial grains and 22,874,900 metric tons of potatoes. The livestock population at the end of 1958 included 12,127,100 cattle, 912,800 horses, 1,113,200 sheep, 14,733,900 pigs and 58,133,200 fowls.

Industry.—The highly developed and diversified secondary industries are based on the great coal and steel industries of the Ruhr. The average index of industrial production per working day (excluding the Saar and West Berlin) has developed as follows (1936=100):

	1957	1958
Mining	152	152
Manufacturing industry	229	237
(i) Basic materials	204	210
(ii) Capital goods	285	306
(iii) Consumer goods	211	209
(iv) Foodstuffs	210	219

Power (electricity and gas)	369	374
Building Industry	196	203
Total industry (including building) ...	225	232

Hard coal production fell from 133.2 million tons in 1957 to 132.6 million tons in 1958; brown coal from 96.8 million tons to 93.5 million tons; pig iron from 18.4 million tons to 16.7 million tons; crude steel from 24.5 million tons to 22.8 million tons and rolled steel products from 16.4 million tons to 15.2 million tons. An average of 98,395 passenger vehicles a month were produced in 1958 (1957=79,914), 15,066 commercial vehicles (1957=13,840), 198,000 tons of sulphuric acid (1957=185,000), 44,871 tons of chlorine (1957=43,353), 32,727 tons of cotton yarn (1957=34,820) and 8,858 tons of woollen yarn (1957=10,330), 486,300 new dwellings were completed in 1958 (1957=529,000).

Labour.—Of the average of 18,840,000 employed in 1958, 12,383,000 were men. The average number of unemployed was 683,000, of whom 459,000 were men. In 1958, an average of 7,273,000 were employed in industry; coal mining absorbed 579,000; iron and steel production, 264,000; mechanical engineering and vehicle production, 1,167,000; chemicals, 415,000; and textiles and clothing, 933,000. Productivity of labour in industry (excluding building, construction and power) in 1958 reached 158 per cent. of the 1950 level.

Finance.—Under the Federal constitution the yields of indirect taxes, other than the beer tax, accrue to the Federal Government, while direct taxes accrue to the Länder, who are obliged to transfer part of them to the central authorities.

The pattern of budgetary expenditure in 1959-60 was expected to be as follows: Total expenditure DM. 39.1 milliard (1958=38.7 milliard); Social expenditure (including housing and welfare), DM. 15.7 milliard (about 40 per cent.); Defence (including the amount spent on foreign troops in the Federal Republic), DM. 11.6 milliard (about 30 per cent.); Agriculture and food, DM. 2.4 milliard (about 6 per cent.); Transport, DM. 2.6 milliard (about 7 per cent.).

In 1952 an agreement was reached for the settlement of German pre-war and post-war foreign debts. An agreement was also signed whereby the Federal Republic will pay to Israel and Jewish organizations over a period of years reparations amounting to DM. 3.5 milliard.

Foreign Trade.—In 1958, imports (including Western sector of Berlin but not the Saar) were valued at DM. 31,133,000,000 (1957=31,697,000,000); and exports at DM. 36,998,000,000 (1957=35,968,000,000); 30.2 per cent. of imports consisted of foodstuffs and 24.7 per cent. of raw materials; 25.6 per cent. came from the Common Market countries, 22.5 per cent. from the other O.E.E.C. countries and 16.6 per cent. from the United States and Canada. The Common Market countries took 27.3 per cent. of all exports, the other O.E.E.C. countries 20.8 per cent. and the United States and Canada, 8.3 per cent. Value of imports from the U.K. amounted to £123,281,383 in 1958 and exports to U.K. to £135,939,112.

Communications.—The state-owned railways of the Federal Republic measure 18,912 miles and the privately owned railways 3,700 miles, a total of 22,612 miles. In 1958 the state-owned railways (Deutsche Bundesbahn) handled 274 million tons of goods and the inland waterways 137 million tons. Railway rolling stock (Deutsche Bundesbahn) included, in 1958, 8,497 steam locomotives, 840 electric locomotives, 520 diesel locomotives, 23,152 passenger coaches and 304,344 goods waggons. The classified roads measure 81,990 miles. On Jan. 1, 1959, there were 3,205,469 cars and 609,938 lorries. Ocean-going shipping under the German flag in Dec., 1958, amounted to 4,443,000 tons gross.

Social Welfare.—There is compulsory insurance against sickness, accident, old age and unemployment. Children's allowances are payable in respect of the third and subsequent children. Pension schemes for widows and orphans of public servants are in operation. Public assistance is given to persons unable to earn their living, or with insufficient income to maintain a minimum standard of living.

Law and Justice.—Judicial authority is exercised by the Federal Constitutional Court, the Supreme Federal Court, and the courts of the Länder. Judges are independent and subject only to the law. The death sentence has been abolished.

Language and Literature.—Modern (or New High) German has developed from the time of the Reformation to the present day, with differences of dialect in Austria and Alsace and in the German-speaking cantons of Switzerland. The literary language is usually regarded as having become fixed by Luther and Zwingli at the Reformation, since which time many great names occur in all branches, notably philosophy, from Leibnitz (1646–1716) to Kant (1724–1804), Fichte (1762–1814), Schelling (1775–1854) and Hegel (1770–1831); the drama from Goethe (1749–1832) and Schiller (1759–1805) to Gerhart Hauptmann (1862–1946); and in poetry, Heine (1800–1856). German authors have received the Nobel Prize for Literature on five occasions—Theodore Mommsen (1902), R. Eucken (1908), P. Heyse (1909), Gerhart Hauptmann (1912), and Thomas Mann (1929). There are now over 1,200 daily papers.

Education.—School attendance is compulsory for all children between the ages of 6 and 14. For the school year 1954–55 there were 29,702 elementary schools, with 132,000 teachers and 5,850,000 pupils in the Federal Republic. In addition there were 710 intermediate schools with 292,700 pupils and 9,125 teachers, 1,804 secondary schools with 715,290 pupils and 32,801 teachers, 890 Einheitsschulen (combined elementary and secondary schools in Hamburg, Bremen and West Berlin) with 549,685 pupils and 17,030 teachers, and 909 special schools for backward children. In the summer term of 1957 the 18 universities, 8 technical universities, and 28 other institutions of university status in the Federal Republic registered a total of 145,778 students. The largest universities are in Munich, Berlin, Cologne, Hamburg, Münster, Bonn, Frankfurt, Heidelberg and Göttingen.

Religion.—According to the 1950 census there were 24,400,000 Protestants in the Republic, 21,600,000 Roman Catholics and 1,500,000 others, including 17,000 Jews and 142,000 agnostics.

CAPITAL, Bonn, in North Rhine Westphalia, on the left bank of the Rhine, 15 miles distant from Cologne. Population, 138,361. Bonn is a cathedral and university town.

AIR TRANSIT FROM U.K.—London to Berlin, 3 hrs. 30 mins.; Cologne, 1 hr. 35 mins.; Düsseldorf, 1 hr. 25 mins.; Frankfurt, 1 hr. 50 mins.; Hamburg, 2 hrs.; Hanover, 3 hrs. 10 mins.; Munich, 2 hrs. 25 mins.

Eastern Germany

Administration.—When the Federal Republic was formed, the People's Council of the Soviet zone, appointed in 1948, was converted into a Provisional People's Chamber. On Oct. 7, 1949, this Chamber enacted a constitution of the "German Democratic Republic," and a provisional Land Chamber was established consisting of fifty deputies appointed by the Diets of the Länder. The German Democratic Republic is not recognized by the governments of western countries. A number of governmental reforms have been introduced since the original constitution was drafted, including the abolition, in July, 1952, of the five Land governments and diets. From July, 1954, the main Government posts have been held as follows:—

President, Wilhelm Pieck, born 1874, elected Oct. 22, 1949, re-elected Oct. 7, 1953.

Minister-President, Otto Grotewohl.

Deputy Minister-Presidents, W. Ulbricht; H. Rau; H. Loch; L. Bolz; P. Scholz.

Chairman, State Planning Commission, B. Leuschner.

Chairman, State Control Commission, F. Lange.

It was not until the summer of 1953 that the Soviet Commander-in-Chief was replaced in the civilian sphere by a High Commissioner. In September, 1953, the post of High Commissioner was combined with that of Ambassador.

Area and Population.—The area of Eastern Germany is 41,380 sq. miles and its population in October, 1946, was 17,300,000:—

Saxony-Anhalt . . . 4,200,000	Saxony . . . 5,600,000
Brandenburg . . . 2,500,000	Thuringia . . 2,900,000
Mecklenburg . . . 2,100,000

Principal cities and towns: Dresden (467,966); Leipzig (607,655); Magdeburg (236,326); Halle (222,505); Erfurt (174,633); Rostock (114,869); Zwickau (122,862), and Karlmarxstadt (Chemnitz) (250,188). Eastern Berlin, an integral part of the zone and its capital city, has a population of approximately 1,200,000.

In July, 1952, in the interests of "democratization" and the further centralization of power, the old Länder were abolished and replaced by 14 Bezirke (regions) as follows:

Land	Bezirke
Mecklenburg . . . Rostock; Schwerin; Neubrandenburg.

Brandenburg . . . Potsdam; Cottbus; Frankfurt.
Saxony Karlmarxstadt; Dresden; Leipzig.
Saxony-Anhalt . . Halle; Magdeburg.
Thuringia Erfurt; Gera; Guhl.

Each region has its own Bezirksrat (assembly) and Bezirksrat (council) to deal with purely regional affairs.

Economic Position.—From the economic point of view the Eastern zone is a more unbalanced area than the Federal Republic. It is more nearly self-sufficient in food, but has few industrial raw materials apart from brown coal and copper ore. Before the war its highly developed secondary industries were dependent on Ruhr coal and steel.

The Soviets claimed reparations from Germany to a value of $ (1938) 10 milliard. Between 1945 and March, 1948, they removed considerable quantities of capital equipment to the U.S.S.R. and took over a number of important plants as Soviet State Concerns (S.A.G.). S.A.G.'s now account for perhaps one-eighth of all industrial production in Eastern Germany. Their products are sold partly in Germany and partly to the U.S.S.R. and other foreign countries. In addition the zone pays reparations from current production to the U.S.S.R. and, although the amounts have been reduced, the obligation continues until 1965. Economic control has been centralized, industry subjected to rigid central planning, state ownership and trading greatly expanded at the expense of private interests and the basic industries given priority over secondary industries. Large new steel plants have been erected at Fürstenberg/Oder and at Calbe, and crude steel production is now greater than before the war. Ties with the other satellites have been strengthened; over 80 per cent. of the zone's foreign trade is now with the East, and in 1950 the zone became a member of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (C.M.E.A.).

TRADE WITH U.K.

Imports from U.K. . . .	£1,426,122	£2,279,866
Exports to U.K.	2,771,725	3,377,312

Religions.—At the census of 1946, Eastern Germany had 14,132,174 Protestants, 2,110,507 Roman Catholics and 75,578 others.

A maritime Kingdom in the south-east of Europe, bounded on the N. by Albania, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria, on the S. and W. by the Libyan and Ionian seas, and on the E. by Turkey, with an estimated area of 51,266 sq. miles. A census was held throughout the country on April 7, 1951, which estimated the population at approximately 7,831,000.

The area of the mainland is 41,328 sq. miles, and of the islands 9,854 sq. miles. The main divisions are: Macedonia (which include Mt. Athos), Thrace, Epirus, Thessaly, Continental Greece (which includes the island of Euboea and the Sporades, or "scattered islands," of which the largest is Skyros), the Peloponnese (or Morea), the Dodecanese or Southern Sporades (12 islands occupied by Italy in 1911 during the Italo-Turkish War and ceded to Greece by Italy in 1947) consisting of Rhodes, Astypalaia, Karpathos, Kassos, Nisyros, Kalymnos, Leros, Patmos, Kos, Simi, Khalki and Kastellorizo, the Cyclades (a circular group numbering about 200, with a total area of 923 sq. miles: the chief islands are Syros, Andros, Tinos, Naxos, Paros, Santorini, Milos and Serifos), the Ionian Islands (Corfu, Paxos, Levkas, Ithaca, Cephalonia, Zante and Cerigo), the Aegean Islands (Chios, Lesbos and Samos). In Crete there was for over 1,000 years (3000 to 1400 B.C.) a flourishing civilization which spread its influence far and wide throughout the Aegean, and the ruins of the palace of Minos at Cnossos afford evidence of astonishing comfort and luxury. Greek civilization emerges about 1300 B.C. and the poems of Homer, the blind poet of Chios, which were probably current about 800 B.C., record the 10-year struggle between the Achaeans of Greece and the Phrygians of Troy (1194–1184 B.C.).

Government.—The Independence of Greece dates from March 25, 1821, and was ratified by the Treaty of Adrianople (Sept. 12, 1829) and the Convention of London (Feb. 3, 1830), after a successful insurrection against the Ottoman Empire, to which the country had been subjected since the 15th century. After a succession of rulers of the Wittelsbach (Bavarian) and Glucksburg (Danish) dynasties the Kingdom was declared a Republic by the Constituent Assembly on March 25, 1924. On Oct. 11, 1935, it was again declared a Kingdom, and a plebiscite held on Sunday, Nov. 3, 1935, caused the return to the Throne of King George II. On October 28, 1940, Italy declared war on Greece and invaded the country from Albania, but within a month Greek troops, assisted at sea and in the air by Great Britain, expelled the invader and advanced in triumph into Albania. On April 6, 1941, Germany invaded Yugoslavia and Greece and came to the aid of the defeated Italian forces. British and Commonwealth ground forces were sent to the assistance of Greece, but the fresh onslaught led to her occupation by German, Italian and Bulgarian troops. By her own exertions and by Allied help Greece was freed in October, 1944.

There followed in December-January, 1944–5 a short period of civil war in which the Communists attempted to seize power by force. After a plebiscite held on Sept. 1, 1946, King George II was recalled. In 1947, Communist guerilla disturbances assumed the proportions of civil war, which continued with increasing damage and destruction to the country until the summer of 1949 when the Greek Army's victories overwhelmed the guerillas. Normal conditions were sufficiently restored throughout the country to enable a general election to be held on March 5, 1950. Since then, with the help of the Foreign Operations Administration (formerly E.C.A.), Greece has been tackling the formidable task of rehabilitation and reconstruction after ten troubled years. Greece acceded to the North Atlantic Treaty in Feb. 1952. In the economic field the country has made steady, if slow, progress, despite political instability. During the past five years relations between Greece and the United Kingdom were severely strained by the Cyprus issue but since its settlement by the Zürich and London agreements (February 11 and 19, 1959) they have improved rapidly. The interim Government of M. Karamanlis was confirmed in office by the General Election of February 1956. At a general election held on May 11, 1958, under a new electoral system, the National Radical Union Party of M. Karamanlis slightly increased its majority in the Chamber, obtaining 172 seats, though this party secured a smaller proportion of the votes, and a new Government was formed by M. Karamanlis on May 17. At this election the extreme Left Wing party, E.D.A., emerged as the leading Opposition party with 79 seats in the Chamber.

Defence.—The Navy has 80 ships, about one-third of which are on loan from Britain. The strength of the Army is 109,000. The Air Force consists of 22,000 men, ten offensive squadrons and two transport squadrons, together with a few helicopters and the necessary support, training and maintenance organizations. In April, 1952, the British Military Mission and R.A.F. delegation left after seven years' service in Greece. The British Naval Mission left in December, 1955.

Production.—Though there has in recent years been a substantial measure of industrialization, Greece is still predominantly an agricultural country. Agriculture employs more than half the population, the most important product being tobacco, which still, despite recent difficulties in disposing of the crop abroad, accounts for half the value of total exports from Greece. Since the war the production of wheat, cotton and rice has been greatly increased, partly in an attempt to make the country's economy less dependent upon tobacco. The most important of the fruit trees are the olive, vine, orange, lemon, fig, almond, pomegranate and currant-vine, and considerable efforts have lately been made to develop exports of Greek fresh fruit and vegetables as well as currants and other dried fruits. Currants, grown mainly around Patras, remain one of Greece's main exports, the United Kingdom being the principal purchaser.

The principal minerals mined in Greece are iron ore, iron pyrites, manganese, magnesite, chrome, bauxite, lead, zinc and emery. The chief industries are textiles (cotton, woollen, silk and rayon), chemicals, cement, glass, metallurgy, shipbuilding and footwear. An oil refinery, the first in Greece, was opened near Athens early in 1958 and industrial projects, either in the course of being carried out or planned in the near future, include the construction of a nitrogen fertilizer plant, the development of the country's electric power resources; irrigation and land reclamation schemes, and the exploitation of Greece's lignite resources for fuel and industrial purposes. Some of the industrial projects are being carried out with the aid of the American I.C.A. Mission.

Communications.—The 2,650 kilometres of Greek railways had all been repaired by the end of 1950, in spite of delays due to the activities of guerilla bands. All are now State owned with the exception of the Athens-Piraeus Electric Railway. The railway from Athens to the Peloponnese, serving Patras and southern Greece, is metre gauge, but the other lines, except one or two minor ones, are standard gauge. Athens is linked with Istanbul, Paris (via Belgrade, Trieste and Lausanne), Ostend (via Belgrade, Salzburg, Cologne and Brussels) and Vienna by direct sleeping-car services. Greek roads total somewhat over 30,000 kilometres, of which roughly half are classified as national highways, while 3,584 kilometres are asphalt and 13,615 kilometres oil coated, macadam or gravel. At the end of June, 1959, ships under the Greek flag of more than 100 tons totalled 531 (2,684,101 tons) and Greek-owned ships under foreign flags totalled 979 (9,352,038 tons). The Greek national airline, Olympic Airways, flies numerous internal and external services, including Athens-London, and it and other airlines connect Athens directly with most countries in Europe and the Middle East.

Religion.—Over 96 per cent. of the people are adherents of the Greek Orthodox Church, which is the State religion, all others being tolerated and free from interference. The Greek church recognizes the spiritual primacy of the Ecumenical Patriarch at Constantinople, but is otherwise a self-governing body administered by the Holy Synod under the Presidency of the Archbishop of Athens and All Greece.

Education is free and compulsory from the age of 6 to 12 and is maintained by State grants. There are two Universities, Athens and Salonica, that of Athens being of wide repute.

Language and Literature.—The spoken language of modern Greece is descended by a process of natural development from the "Common Greek" of Alexander's empire. Official and technical matter is mostly composed in Katharevousa, a conservative literary dialect evolved by Adamantios Corais (Diamant Coray), who lived and died in Paris (1748–1833), but novels and poetry are mostly composed in dimotiki, a progressive literary dialect which owes much to John Psycharis (1854–1929). The poets Solomos, Palamas, Cavafis and Sikelianos have won a European reputation.

30 Collingham Gardens, S.W.5
(Fremantle: 7463)

Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in London (vacant).

There is a Consulate-General at Liverpool and Consuls at Glasgow and Belfast.

Guatemala, the most northerly of the Republican States of Central America, is situated in N. lat. 10m 13' 45' to 17° 49', and in W. long. from 88° 12' 49' to 92° 13' 43', and comprises an area of 42,042 square miles, and a population (at the census of 1950) of 2,788,122. There is a single chamber legislative assembly of 68 members and a cabinet of 11 of whom 10 are Ministers of State. The Republic is divided into 22 departments, and is traversed from W. to E. by an elevated mountain chain, containing several volcanic summits rising to 13,000 feet above the sea; earthquakes are frequent, and the capital (which is at an altitude of 4,800 ft.) was destroyed by an upheaval in Dec., 1917. The country is well watered by numerous rivers; the climate is hot and malarious near the coast, temperate in the higher regions. The rainfall in the capital is 57 in. per annum. The chief Ψ seaports are San José de Guatemala and Champerico on the Pacific and Livingston, Matías de Gálvez (formerly Santo Tomás) and Puerto Barrios on the Atlantic side.

Language and Literature.—Spanish is the language of the country, and since the establishment of the University in the capital education has received a marked impulse and the high figure of illiteracy is being reduced. The National library contains about 80,000 volumes in the Spanish tongue.

Formerly part of French West Africa, Guinea has a coastline on the Atlantic Ocean between Portuguese Guinea and the British colony of Sierra Leone and in the interior is adjacent to Sénégal, the Sudanese Republic and the Republic of Ivory Coast. Area, 96,865 sq. miles. The population was estimated by the French administration in 1957 at 2,492,000, mostly of the Fullah, Malinké and Soussou tribes. It is estimated that there are about 4,000 Europeans in the country.

Government.—Guinea was separated from Sénégal in 1891 and administered by France as a separate colony until 1958. In the referendum held in Metropolitan France and the overseas territories on Sept. 2, 1958, Guinea rejected the new French Constitution. Accordingly on Sept. 28, it was declared that Guinea had separated itself from the other territories of French West Africa which had adopted the Constitution; French administrative and financial assistance would be terminated; and Guinea would have no further representation within the French Community. On October 2, 1958, Guinea became an independent republic governed by a Constituent Assembly. M. Sekou Touré, Prime Minister in the Territorial Assembly, accepted office as head of the new Government.

A provisional constitution, adopted on Nov. 12, 1958, declared Guinea "a democratic, secular and social republic", powers of government being exercised by a president assisted by the Cabinet. The President, eligible for a term of 7 years and for re-election, is head of state and of the armed forces.

It was announced in Accra on Nov. 23, 1958, that the Prime Ministers of Guinea and Ghana had agreed to constitute their two states as the nucleus of a Union of West African States, which would welcome other adherents. They agreed to develop close contacts and harmonize defence, foreign and economic policies. Ghana agreed to grant a loan of £10,000,000 to Guinea to stabilize the economy and provide technical and administrative assistance.

A further step towards this Union was taken on May 1, 1959, by the joint declaration of twelve principles for the Union as the basis of its constitution, drawn up for discussion with other independent African States.

General recognition of Guinea as an independent state was followed by her admission to membership of the United Nations in December, 1958. Recognition by France was accorded following the conclusion of agreements between France and Guinea on financial, economic and cultural matters, signed in Paris on Jan. 7, 1959, and diplomatic relations were established. Guinea remains in the franc area and has adopted French as the official language.

Production, etc.—The principal products of Guinea are bauxite, iron-ore, rubber, palm kernels, millet, rice, coffee, bananas and pineapples, wax and ivory. Principal imports are cotton goods, metal goods, wines, tobacco, petrol and salt; exports, bauxite, iron-ore, gold, hides, bananas, palm kernels and animal wax. In the mountains in the hinterland of Guinea (Fouta Djallon, 4,970 feet), where the rivers Sénégal, Gambia and Niger have their sources, large deposits of bauxite (the raw material of aluminium) were recently discovered and large-scale extraction of this ore is planned. Bauxite is at present exported from the Conakry area where there are also rich deposits of iron-ore and large-scale mining is carried on.

CAPITAL.— Ψ Conakry (200,000). Other towns are Kankan (24,000), which is connected with Conakry by a railway, Kindia (13,000), N'Zerekore, Mamou, Siguiri and Labe.

FLAG.—3 vertical stripes of red, gold and green; Ghana-Guinea Union.—Red, yellow and green with as many black stars as there are members.

U.K. REPRESENTATION IN GUINEA

Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary, His Excellency Guy Hamilton Clarke, apptd. May, 1959 (Resident in Monrovia, Liberia).

HAITI

(République d'Haiti)

President, Dr. François Duvalier, installed Oct. 22, 1957.

EMBASSY IN LONDON

22 Hans Road, S.W.3.

Ambassador, His Excellency Dr. Colbert Bonhomme.

The Republic of Haiti occupies the western third of the island of Santo Domingo, formerly known as Hispaniola, which, next to Cuba, is the largest island in the West Indies.

The area of the Republic is estimated at 20,500 sq. miles with a population (1950 census) of 3,121,973, negroes being in the great majority. There are, however, many mulattoes and others with varying admixture of white blood, especially in the towns. About 1,000 British subjects, chiefly of British West Indian origin, reside in Haiti.

A French colony under the name of Saint-Domingue from 1697, the slave population, estimated at 500,000, revolted in 1791 under the leadership of Toussaint L'Ouverture, who was born a slave and made himself Governor-General of the colony. He capitulated to the French in 1802 and died in captivity in 1804. Resistance was continued by Jean Jacques Dessalines, also a former black slave, who, on January 1, 1803, declared the former French colony to be an independent state. It was at this time that the name of Haiti was adopted. It is an aboriginal Indian word meaning mountainous. Dessalines became Emperor of Haiti, but was assassinated in 1806. In 1925, following a period of political upheaval, the country was occupied by a force of U.S. marines. The occupation came to an end in 1934, and U.S. control of the revenue of Haiti officially ended on October 1, 1947.

The 1950 constitution provided for a Senate of 21 members and a Chamber of Deputies of 37 members. The President is elected by popular franchise for a term of six years, and is not immediately re-eligible. Women were granted full political rights in Jan. 1957. A new constitution approved in 1957 provides for the abolition of the Senate and the establishment of a one-chamber legislative assembly with 67 deputies. This will not take place, however, until 1963.

The six-year term of General Magloire having ended in December 1956, he attempted to stay in power for a further period but was forced to resign and go into exile. A period of acute political upheaval followed and for many months there was no effective government. A military junta took over in June, 1957, and elections were held in September, following which Dr. Duvalier was installed as the new President of the Republic.

Production, Industry, etc.—In French colonial times, Haiti was one of the most productive countries in the world and the richest French possession. Improvident methods of peasant agriculture succeeded the plantation system and resulted in the gradual impoverishment of natural resources through exhaustion of the soil, deforestation and erosion. In recent years measures for agricultural rehabilitation have been taken with the aim of a gradual restoration of the productiveness of the country. The main project now approaching completion is a scheme for the irrigation of more than 70,000 acres of the Artibonite valley for which the Import-Export Bank approved a loan of $27,000,000 and the Development Loan Fund, on May 28, 1959, a further loan of $4,300,000. Work on the final stages of the main barrage at Peligne is not yet completed and no forecast of its completion date can be given owing to the economic situation and political instability. The principal products are coffee, bananas, log-wood, cocoa, cotton, sisal, sugar and molasses and essential oils. Coffee accounts for about two-thirds of total exports and is the mainstay of the country's economy. Exports of bauxite began in 1957 and copper mines in the Terre Neuve area will be brought into production in the near future. Lignite is known to exist in commercial quantities and a contract has been signed with a Haitian/Canadian company for its exploitation. Exploration is going on in the country for the above-mentioned minerals and also for manganese, oil and iron. Gold, silver and tin exist, but not in significant quantities. Manufactures have increased during the last five years. The tourist trade is expanding rapidly and is now an important source of income, but has fallen off considerably since Dec. 1956, owing to political upheavals.

Communications.—There are very few asphalted roads and internal communications are very bad. A loan of $2,600,000 has been obtained from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development to finance an improved road maintenance and repair organization, but political confusion and lack of funds have continued to delay effective progress. Railway communications are negligible, the only passenger route being from Port-au-Prince to Verrettes via St. Marc. Air services between the capital and the principal provincial towns are maintained by the Aviation Corps of the Haitian Army, which operates a civil incorporated company. The principal towns and villages are connected by telephone and/or telegraph. The complete telephone, telegraph and internal radio communications system is practically yout of order. The reinstallation which was being carried out by a British firm was stopped owing to the economic crisis.

Air services by Pan-American World Airways and other airlines are regular and frequent, and there are fortnightly sailings for passengers and freight for New York and Panama by the Panama

Line. Freight sailings are frequent for the U.S.A., Canada and Europe. Sailings between Haiti and Jamaica are infrequent. External telegraph, telephone and postal services are normal. (Air mail transit U.K./Port-au-Prince 3-4 days.)

Climate.—The climate is tropical with comparatively little difference in the temperatures between the summer (March-Oct.) and the winter (Nov.-Feb.). The temperature at Port-au-Prince rarely exceeds 95° F., but the humidity is high, especially in the autumn.

Language and Literature.—French is the official language of the country, but most of the people speak a debased dialect known as Creole French. Education is free but estimates of illiteracy are as high as 95 per cent. There are 5 principal French daily newspapers and 2 English weekly papers published in Port-au-Prince and a French weekly paper in Cap-Haitien.

HONDURAS

(Republica de Honduras)

President, Dr. José Ramón Villeda Morales (Dec. 21, 1957).

HONDURAS EMBASSY IN LONDON

22 Mount Street, W.1.
[Mayfair: 1916]

Ambassador, His Excellency Dr. Antonio Bermúdez (1958).

Consulate-General in London, 15 Union Court, E.C.2.

Vice-Consul (in charge), Herbert C. Cock.

There are Consulates General in Liverpool and Manchester, and Consular Offices at Birmingham, Newcastle and Glasgow.

Honduras, one of the five Republican States of Central America, lies between lat. 13° and 16° 30' N. and long. 83° and 89° 41' west, with a seaboard of about 400 miles on the Caribbean Sea and an outlet, consisting of a small strip of coast 77 miles in length on the Pacific. Its frontiers are contiguous with those of Guatemala, Nicaragua and El Salvador. The Republic contains a total area of approximately 43,278 square miles and a population of 1,828,183 (estimate of June 30, 1958) of mixed Spanish and Indian blood. There is a strong foreign negro (British West Indian) element in Northern Honduras. The country is very mountainous, being traversed by the Cordilleras, but possesses well watered fertile valleys and wooded tablelands. The climate varies with the altitude, being tropical throughout the year in the coastal belts and temperate and mainly healthy in the uplands.

Originally discovered and settled by the Spaniards at the beginning of the sixteenth century, Honduras formed part of the Spanish American Dominions for nearly three centuries until 1821 when independence was proclaimed.

Under the Constitution of Dec. 21, 1957, the Legislature consists of a single Congress of 58 members elected by popular vote in the ratio of approximately one per 30,000 inhabitants. The executive authority is vested in the President who is assisted by a Cabinet of nine Ministers. The Republic is divided into 18 departments, the largest and newest of which, Gracias a Dios, formed in Feb. 1957, covers all the territory previously known as La Mosquitia, together with portions of the Departments of Olancho and Colón. It is inhabited by Indian tribes and largely unexplored.

The chief industry is the production of bananas. Other products are coffee, coconuts, tobacco, beans, maize, rice and tropical fruits. Cattle raising is becoming an increasingly important industry, a large number of cattle being exported to the neighbouring countries every year. Honduras is also a timber producing country, the most important woods being pine, mahogany and cedar. There are large tracts of uncultivated land.

The mineral resources of the country are reputed to be considerable, but only a small portion is at present exploited owing to transport difficulties.

1,008 miles of railway were in operation in the year 1957, chiefly to serve the banana plantations and the Caribbean ports. The total road mileage is approximately 1,800, the greater part of which is in poor condition, but improvements are now being made and new roads built. There are 15 airports in use in Honduras, exclusive of numerous small landing and emergency fields. There are three international airservices (TACA Internacional, PAA and TAN) and a domestic air service (SAHSA). There are 2,979 miles of telephone lines, 4,981 miles of telegraph lines and 369 post-offices.

ψ The chief ports are Puerto Cortes, Tela and La Ceiba on the North Coast, through which passes the bulk of the trade with the United States and Europe, and Amapala, situated on Tiger Island in the Gulf of Fonseca, on the Pacific side.

Language and Literature.—The language of the country is Spanish. Primary and secondary education is free and compulsory and, although there is still a great deal of illiteracy, it is gradually diminishing. There is no recognized native literature.

Area and Population.—The area of Hungary may be stated at approximately 36,000 sq. miles with a population (April, 1958) of 9,845,000.

Government.—Hungary was reconstituted a kingdom in 1920 after having been declared a republic on Nov. 17, 1918. She joined the Anti-Comintern Pact on Feb. 24, 1939, and entered the 1939-45 War on the side of Germany. On Jan. 20, 1945, a Hungarian provisional government of liberation, which had been set up during the preceding December, signed an armistice with the United Nations under the terms of which the frontiers of Hungary were withdrawn to the limits existing in 1937.

For the first four years after the liberation, Hungary was governed by a coalition of the Small-holder, National Peasant, Social Democrat and Communist parties. During this time land reform was carried out, the great landowners being dispossessed and their estates partitioned among peasants; mines, heavy industry, banks and schools were nationalized. By 1949 the Communists, under the leadership of Mr. Rákosi, having compelled the Social Democrat Party to merge with them, and having disrupted the peasant parties, had succeeded in gaining a monopoly of power. Elections in that year, in which candidates for the National Assembly were drawn from a single list, resulted in 95.6 per cent. of the votes cast being obtained by the Communist-dominated People's Front. A campaign was opened to collectivize agriculture and by 1952 practically the entire economy had been "socialized."

In mid-1953 Mr. Imre Nagy replaced Mr. Rákosi as Prime Minister, though the latter continued to hold his post as First Secretary of the Party. Mr. Nagy introduced a more moderate policy based largely on the development of agriculture rather than heavy industry; but in April, 1955 Mr. Rákosi succeeded in turning the tables on his rival who was removed from his position as Prime Minister and subsequently expelled from the Party. But after the 20th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party, opposition to Mr. Rákosi within the Hungarian Communist Party mounted and on July 18, 1956, he was removed from his post as First Secretary and succeeded by Mr. Gerő, who had been one of his closest associates. The period from July to the outbreak of the national revolution on Oct. 23, 1956, was marked by growing ferment in intellectual circles and increased discord within the Party. The immediate signal for the revolt was a series of students' demonstrations, first in Szeged on Oct. 22 and in Budapest a day later. The chief demands put forward by students and other demonstrators were for the return of Mr. Nagy as Prime Minister, for the withdrawal of Soviet troops from the country and for free elections. Fighting broke out on the night of Oct. 23 between demonstrators, who had been joined by large numbers of factory workers, and the State Security Police (A.V.H.). Soviet forces intervened in strength early the next morning. By Oct. 30 Soviet troops had withdrawn from Budapest and on Nov. 3 Mr. Nagy formed an all-party coalition government. This government was overthrown and the revolution suppressed as the result of a renewed attack by Soviet forces on Budapest in the early hours of Nov. 4. Simultaneously the formation of a new Hungarian Revolutionary Worker Peasant Government under the leadership of Mr. Kádár, Mr. Gerő's successor as First Secretary of the Party, was announced. This Government has been in power ever since, backed by the presence of Soviet troops. It has branded the revolution as a "counter-revolution" and has suppressed all attempts at resistance. The trial and execution of Imre Nagy and three of his associates was announced on June 17, 1958.

Production, Industry, etc.—Though industrialization has made considerable progress in the last decade, agriculture still occupies a predominant position in the Hungarian economy and more than half the area of Hungary is arable land, much of it very fertile. In March, 1958, 14.5 per cent. of this arable land was owned by state farms and 12 per cent. by co-operative farms. The following are official estimates of production of the more important crops in 1957 (a year of bad harvest): wheat 1,958,800 tons; rye 487,000 tons; barley 668,700 tons; oats 262,900 tons; maize 3,283,700 tons; sugar-beet 1,948,200 tons; potatoes 2,055,000 tons; cattle-turnip 3,118,100 tons; lucerne, 744,900 tons; red clover 571,000 tons; rice 85,000 tons.

Industry is mainly based on imported raw materials, but Hungary has her own coal (mostly brown), bauxite, some iron ore and petroleum. Output figures in 1956 were: Coal 21,195,000 tons; bauxite 155,000 tons; cement 989,000 tons; pig-iron 855,000 tons; steel 1,375,000 tons; coke 202,000 tons; crude oil 674,000 tons.

The output of raw materials and general industrial production were sharply reduced by the revolution of Oct. 1956 and its aftermath, and regained normal levels only in the second half of 1957, total industrial production for that year being 2 per cent. higher than in 1955.

Religion and Education.—About two-thirds of the Magyars are Roman Catholics, and the remainder mostly Calvinist. There are five types of schools under the Ministry of Education—infant schools 3-6, general schools 6-14 (compulsory), vocational schools (15-18), secondary schools (15-18), universities and adult training schools (over 18). It is estimated that there were over 40,000 university students in the academic year 1956-57. The teaching of Russian is compulsory in schools for children aged 9 to 18 years. A recent decision of the National Conference of the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party (the Hungarian Communist Party) will again make the study of Marxism-Leninism compulsory in all universities and colleges.

Language and Literature.—Magyar, or Hungarian, is one of the Finno-Ugric languages. Hungarian literature began to flourish in the second half of the sixteenth century. Among the greatest writers of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries are Mihály Vörösmarty (1800-1855), Sándor Petőfi (1823-1849), János Arany (1817-1882), Endre Ady (1877-1918), Attila József (1905-1937), Mihály Babits (1883-1941) and Dezső Kosztolányi (1885-1936).

Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary, His Excellency Dr. Kristinn Guðmundsson (1956).

Iceland is a large volcanic island in the North Atlantic Ocean, extending from 63° 23' to 66° 23' N. lat., and from 13° 22' to 24° 35' W. long., with an estimated area of 40,500 square miles, or greater than that of Ireland. The population was 269,961 in 1959.

Iceland was uninhabited before the ninth century, when settlers came from Norway. For several centuries a form of republican government prevailed, with an annual assembly of leading men called the Althing, but in 1241 Iceland became subject to Norway, and later to Denmark. During the colonial period, Iceland maintained its cultural integrity but a deterioration in the climate, together with frequent volcanic eruptions and outbreaks of disease led to a serious fall in the standard of living and to a decline in the population to little more than 40,000. In the nineteenth century a struggle for independence began which led first to home-rule for Iceland under the Danish Crown (1918), and later to complete independence under a republican form of rule in 1944.

The Icelandic Cabinet normally consists of six Ministers, responsible to the Althing, a Parliamentary assembly of 52 members. The present government is a coalition of the Progressive, Social Democrat and Communist parties, with the Conservatives, the largest single party, forming the Opposition.

Iceland is a member of NATO and a NATO base, manned by the U.S. Defence Services, is established at Keflavik, some 25 miles from Reykjavik.

Iceland lives very largely by her catching and export of fish, and this is held to justify an extension of exclusive fishery limits round her coast to a greater extent than that hitherto sanctioned by international law. In 1952, the Icelandic limits were extended from three to four miles, and at the same time a new method of establishing base-lines across bays and estuaries was introduced. This led to a dispute with the U.K., and the British trawler industry succeeded in imposing a ban on the landing of fish by Icelandic trawlers in England. This dispute was settled in October, 1956, by which time a considerable proportion of the Icelandic fish trade had been diverted to Russia. The failure of the Geneva Conference of April, 1958, on the Law of the Sea, to settle the question of territorial limits led to further difficulties.

The principal products of the Island are fish, fish oils, whales, mutton, wool and ponies. The principal exports are fish, fish meals and oils, whale oil and meat, and sheepskins; the imports consist of almost all the necessities of life, the chief items being grain and meal, sugar, coffee, salt, coal, oil and petrol, cotton goods, tobacco, spirits, hardware and timber.

At Jan. 1, 1959, the mercantile marine consisted of 27 cargo and passenger ships (39,393 tons); 44 trawlers (29,024 tons); 52 fishing vessels of 100 tons or over (8,308 tons); 614 fishing vessels under 100 tons (21,329 tons); 6 life-saving and inspection ships (1,712 tons); 4 oil carriers (13,878 tons); 2 tug-boats (295 tons) and 1 dredger (286 tons), a total of 114,219 tons. There is a regular shipping service between Reykjavik, Leith and Copenhagen, fortnightly in summer and every three weeks in winter. Frequent but irregular services run between Reykjavik and Hull, and the Continent.

A regular twice-weekly air service is maintained between Renfrew and London and Reykjavik. There are also air services from the island to Scandinavia, U.S.A. and Germany. Road communications are adequate in summer but greatly restricted by snow in winter. Only roads in town centres are well surfaced. The State highways and side roads are non-metalled (gravel and lava dust). The climate and terrain make first-class surfaces for highways out of the question.

Language and Literature.—The ancient Norraena (or Northern tongue) presents close affinities to Anglo-Saxon and as spoken and written in Iceland to-day differs little from that introduced into the island in the ninth century. There is a rich literature with two distinct periods of development, from the middle of the eleventh to the end of the thirteenth century and from the beginning of the nineteenth century to the present time.

Situated between latitudes 6° North and 12° South and between longitudes 95° and 141° East, Indonesia comprises the islands of Java and Madura, the island of Sumatra, the Riouw-Lingga Archipelago (which with Karimon, Anambas, Natuna Islands, Tambelan, and part of Sumatra, forms the "Residency of Riouw"), the islands of Bangka and Billiton, part of the island of Borneo, Celebes Island, the Molucca Islands (Ternate, Halmahera, Buru, Ceram, Banda, Timor-Laut, Larat, Bachiam, Obi, Kei, Aru, Babar, Leti and Wetar), part of Timor Island, and the islands of Bali and Lombok, with a total area of 735,000 miles, and a population estimated at 80,000,000.

From the early part of the 17th century much of the Indonesian Archipelago was under Netherlands rule. Following the World War, 1939-45, a strong nationalistic movement manifested itself and after sporadic fighting the formal transfer of sovereignty by the Netherlands took place on December 27, 1949. The provisional federal constitution then adopted was on August 15, 1950, changed to a unitary Republic of Indonesia in which the separate provinces were guaranteed broad regional autonomy and on February 13, 1956, the agreement of 1949 with the Netherlands was unilaterally abrogated. As a result of the failure of the parliamentary parties to provide political and economic stability, President Sukarno as Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces proclaimed martial law on March 14, 1957, and appointed a temporary cabinet under a non-party Prime Minister. At the end of the year the Government, in response to popular feeling, took over control of most of the Dutch commercial concerns. The great majority of Dutch citizens left the country during the next few months. On February 15, 1958, regional discontent came to a head with the proclamation of a rival Indonesian Government in West Sumatra and North Celebes under Dr.

Sjafruddin. The Central Government resorted to military action and organized resistance had ceased in Sumatra by May, 1958.

On July 5, 1959, the President issued a decree dissolving the Constituent Assembly and declared the re-application of the 1945 constitution. He further announced that a provisional people's consultative congress and a supreme advisory council would be set up.

Finance.—The budgetary system in Indonesia has been in deficit for some years now. The note circulation increased from rupiahs 13.8 billion to Rp. 19.5 billion during 1958 and to Rp. 21.1 billion by April, 1959. Gold and foreign currency cover for the currency remained at approximately 8 per cent. during the latter part of 1958 and early in 1959 and showed little prospect of improving.

In February, 1953, the value of the Indonesian rupiah was fixed at Rp. 31.74 = £1, but in June, 1957, a new system of moving and half-free rates was introduced. The rupiah has been by this means progressively reduced in value, until in June, 1959, it stood for trading purposes at approximately Rp. 84 = £1.

Production.—Nearly 70 per cent. of the population of Indonesia is engaged in agriculture and related production. Copra, kapok, nutmeg and cinnamon oil, sugar, fibres and cinchona are produced by smallholders; palm oil, sugar, fibres and cinchona are produced by large estate companies. Rubber, tea, coffee and tobacco are also produced in quantity. Rice is a traditional staple food for the people of Indonesia and the islands of Java and Madura are important producers.

Indonesia is rich in minerals; petroleum, tin, coal and bauxite are the principal products; gold, silver, manganese phosphates, nickel and sulphur were produced in quantity before the Second World War and there are considerable deposits.

Trade.—Commodities valued at £10,952,527 were sold to the United Kingdom in 1958, the principal items being rubber, tea, petroleum and sugar. The value of imports from the United Kingdom in 1958, mainly of machinery, electrical equipment, aircraft, cars, cycles, and other vehicles, chemical and pharmaceutical goods, woven and piece goods and sewing thread, was £7,526,632.

Transport.—In Java a main line connects Djakarta with Surabaya in the East of Java and there are several branches, including an inland line from Semarang on the North coast to Djogjakarta in the South. In Sumatra the important towns of Medan, Padang and Palembang are the centres of short railway systems.

Sea communications in the archipelago were maintained for many years by a Dutch shipping line but in December, 1956, this ceased to operate and the resulting dislocation of shipping services among the islands is only gradually being mitigated by the endeavours of the Government Shipping Board to acquire ships for various national shipping companies. Transport by small craft on the rivers of the larger islands plays an important part in the export trade. Air services in Indonesia are operated by Garuda Indonesian Airways and the country is served by various international services, including those of B.O.A.C. There are approximately 46,500 miles of roads in Indonesia.

CAPITAL: Batavia (Java) was renamed Djakarta (estimated population, 260,000) and is the capital of the Republic of Indonesia. Other important centres are: (Java) Surabaya, Semarang, Bandung, Tjerbom, Surakarta and Djogjakarta; (Madura) Pamekasan (15,000); (Sumatra) Palembang (50,000), Medan (80,000) and Padang; (Celebes) Macassar (20,000) and Menado; (Borneo) Banjer-masin, Balikpapan and Pontianak; (Moluccas) Ternate (9,000); (Bali) Singaradja (9,500); (W. Timor) Kupang (10,000).

FLAG: Red and white. LANGUAGE: The official language of Indonesia is the Indonesian Language (Bahasa Indonesia). NATIONAL ANTHEM: Indonesia Raya. August 17 is celebrated as INDEPENDENCE DAY in Indonesia.

The Liwa is the present Iraqi unit of administration, the Vilayet being the former Ottoman unit.

Of the total population there were in 1947: Moslems 4,226,974 (five-thirteenths being Sunni and eight-thirteenths Shiite), Christians 121,664, Jews 116,836, and other religions, 38,862 (Mandaeans, Yazidis, Bahais, &c.). Almost the entire Jewish population has now emigrated to Israel.

The Euphrates (which has a total length of 1,700 miles from its source to its outflow in the Persian Gulf) is formed by two arms, of which the Murad Su (415 miles) rises in the slopes of the Ala Dagh, a mountain of Eastern Erzerum, and flows westwards to a junction with the Kara Su, or Frat Su (275 miles); the other arm rises in the north-west of Erzerum in the Dumlul Dagh. The Tigris has a total length of 1,150 miles from its source to its junction with the Euphrates at Qurna, 70 miles from the Persian Gulf, and rises in two arms south of the Taurus mountains, in Kurdistan, uniting at Til, where the boundaries of the districts of Diarbekir, Van and Bitlis conjoin.

Government.—Under the Treaty of Lausanne (1923), Turkey renounced the sovereignty over Mesopotamia. A provisional Arab Government was set up in Nov., 1920, and in Aug., 1922, the Emir Faisal (3rd son of ex-King Hussain of the Hejaz) was elected King of Iraq.

In 1939 King Faisal II, grandson of Faisal I, acceded to the throne at the age of 3 on the death of his father, King Ghazi, and until 1953, when Faisal II ascended the throne, Iraq was ruled by Prince Abdulillah as Regent, Faisal II, together with Prince Abdulillah, other members of the Royal family and the then Prime Minister, Gen. Nuri es-Said, was assassinated in Baghdad in July, 1958, during a coup d'état resulting in the formation of a republican form of government. The monarchy was succeeded by a three-man Council of Sovereignty exercising presidential powers and a republican cabinet formed by Brigadier (now Major-General) Kassem.

Production and Industry.—Iraq is capable of supporting a considerably greater population if irrigation is developed and extended. Apart from the valuable revenues to be derived from oil the wealth of the country depends upon agricultural development, and two harvests can be gathered in the year, the chief crops being wheat, barley, beans, rice, dates and Indian corn; wheat averages 464 lb. per acre, barley 612 lb., and rice over 370 lb. Cotton growing is successful in some years. Tobacco from the northern liwas is sufficient for the needs of the country. The Iraq Petroleum Company's crude oil production for 1951-56 was:—

	Long Tons	Long Tons
1952.....	18,061,000	1955..... 32,716,660
1953.....	27,220,000	1956..... 30,603,078
1954.....	29,606,747

Total exports of oil from Iraq in 1958 were 33,255,000 long tons.

Few industries are yet established on any scale but an increasing industrialization is taking place under both private enterprise and Government action. Existing industries include cement, building materials, flour milling, cigarettes, soap, beer, steel furniture, tanning and textiles.

Communications and Trade.—The country is being rapidly opened up and communications improved and secured, particularly in the hitherto inaccessible northern districts. Fifty per cent. of all oil royalties received (a minimum of £25,000,000 oil royalties per annum is guaranteed, but the Iraq Government is at present receiving about £80,000,000 per annum) is allocated for development projects. The first five-year development programme of public works has been completed and the second one is under way, including flood control, dams and irrigation, roads and bridges, housing, schools and hospitals and the establishment of local industries. The port of Basrah is well equipped and able to handle expeditiously all sea-borne traffic. Continuous dredging of the Shatt-al-Arab has provided a navigable channel of 22½ feet at low water (as compared with 9 feet before dredging was begun) giving easy access to the Port at all times. A new channel across the Fao Bar has recently been dredged. The desert route between Baghdad and the Mediterranean carries an increasing amount of traffic, though most goods reaching Iraq are still sent via Basrah. Exceptional floods in the spring of 1954 caused serious damage in Central Iraq and interruptions to communications, but effective flood control works have since been completed, and prevented severe flooding in 1957.

Airports for the use of international air traffic have been provided at Baghdad and Basrah (Maqil). The latter serves as a terminus for air traffic originating in the oil fields of the Persian Gulf, and as a staging post for airlines operating between Europe and the Far East. BOAC provides a weekly service between London and Baghdad, which is also served by Iraqi Airways and airlines of Egypt, Iran, the Lebanon, Jordan, the Netherlands, Scandinavia, Italy, West Germany, Switzerland and Pakistan. Iraqi Airways operates a daily service to Basra and services from Baghdad to Mosul, Kirkuk, the Persian Gulf, Amman, Beirut, Cairo, Damascus, Teheran, Athens, Istanbul, Rome, Vienna, Frankfurt, London, Karachi and Bombay.

Iraqi Republican Railways provide a regular passenger and goods service between Baghdad and Basrah by the metre gauge line completed in 1920, which also extends northwards to Khanaqin, Kirkuk and Erbil. The railway line from Baghdad to Mosul, linking up through Syria and Turkey with the Mediterranean and the Bosphorus, is standard gauge.

Language, Literature and Archaeology.—The language is mainly Arabic (see Arabia) and English is widely used in commerce, science and the arts.

There is evidence that an advanced civilization had been reached in the alluvial valley of the Euphrates while Europe was in a state of barbarism. Astronomy, geometry, engineering and land surveying were cultivated by the Sumerians of Mesopotamia, and various arts reached a point of perfection by 3000 B.C., as investigations at Ur of the Chaldees have shown. Sumerian culture spread from Mesopotamia to Crete and Egypt and to Greece. In 1944 excavations at Tell Hassuna, near Shura (on the Tigris in North Iraq) unearthed abundant traces of culture dating back to 5000 B.C.

Excavations in 1948 at Tel Abu Shahrafn, 14 miles south of "Ur of the Chaldees," confirm Eridu's claim to be the most ancient city of the Sumerian world.

Hillah, the ancient city on the left bank of the Shatt el Hillah, a branch of the Euphrates, about 70 miles south of Baghdad, is near the site of Babylon and of the "house of the lofty-head" or "gate of the god" (Tower of Babel).

Mosul Liwa covers a great part of the ancient kingdom of Assyria, the ruins of Nineveh, the Assyrian capital, being visible on the banks of the Tigris, opposite Mosul. A British archaeological expedition has been excavating at Nimrud in the same area since 1950.

Qurna, at the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates, is the traditional site of the Garden of Eden. The "Tree of Knowledge," which had stood there "from time immemorial," withered and died in December, 1946.

EMBASSY IN LONDON

2 Palace Green, Kensington, W.8

Ambassador in London, His Excellency Eliahu Elath (1952).

Consulate, 2A Palace Green, W. 8.

Area and Population.—Israel lies on the western edge of the continent of Asia at the eastern extremity of the Mediterranean Sea, between lat. 29° 30'–33° 15' N. and long. 34° 15'–35° 40' E. Its political neighbours are Lebanon on the North, Syria on the North and East, Jordan on the East and the Egyptian province of Sinai on the South.

The area is estimated at 7,923 square miles out of the 10,429 square miles comprised in the whole of Palestine (the remainder being occupied by Jordan and Egypt). The population was estimated (Mar., 1959) at 2,054,900, of whom 1,830,900 were Jews, the remainder mostly Arabs. These figures result from the gradual process of Jewish immigration during the 30 years preceding Israel's independence (in 1912 there were only 83,790 Jews in Palestine out of a total population of 752,048). During the upheavals of 1948–49 some 600,000 Arabs left the country as refugees and settled in neighbouring countries.

Hebrew is the official language of Israel. Arabic is also used extensively in Government publications and on coins and stamps. Arabs are entitled to transact all official business with Government Departments in Arabic, and provision is made in the Knesset for the simultaneous translation of all speeches into Arabic.

Physical Features.—Israel comprises four main regions: (a) the hill country of Galilee and Judea and Samaria, rising in places to heights of 2,460 to 3,940 ft.; (b) the coastal plain from the Gaza strip to North of Acre, including the plain of Esdraelon running from Haifa Bay to the south-east, and cutting in two the hill region; (c) the Negev, a semi-desert triangular-shaped region, extending from a base south of Beersheeba, to an apex at the head of the Gulf of 'Aqaba; and (d) parts of the Jordan valley, including Lakes Hula, Tiberias and the south-western extremity of the Dead Sea. The principal river is the Jordan, which rises from a main source near Banyas at a height of 1,140 feet above sea-level and enters Lake Hula (Waters of Merom) 220 feet above sea-level. Between Lakes Hula and Tiberias (Sea of Galilee) the river falls 926 ft. in 21 miles and becomes a turbulent stream. Lake Tiberias is 696 ft. below sea-level and liable to sudden storms. Between it and the Dead Sea the Jordan falls 591 ft. The other principal rivers are the Yarkon and Qishon. The largest lake is the Dead Sea (shared between Israel and Jordan); area 405 sq. miles, 1,286 feet below sea-level, 52.5 miles long, with a maximum width of 11 miles and a maximum depth of 1,309 ft.; it receives the waters of the Jordan and of six other rivers, and has no outlet, the surplus being carried off by evaporation. The water, therefore, contains an extraordinary high concentration of mineral substances. The highest mountain peak is Mount Atzmon, 3,962 feet above sea-level, near Safad, Upper Galilee.

Climate.—The climate is variable, similar to that of Lower Egypt, but modified by altitude and distance from the sea. The summer is hot but is made comfortable in most parts by daily refreshing westerly winds from the Mediterranean. The winter is the rainy season lasting from November to April, the period of maximum rainfall being January and February.

Antiquities.—The following are the principal historic sites in Israel: Jerusalem; the Church of the Dormition and the Cenaculum on Mount Zion (the principal Christian and Moslem Holy Places of the Jerusalem area are in Jordan territory); Ein Kerem; Church of the Visitation, Church of St. John the Baptist, Galilee; The Sea; Church and Mount of the Beatitudes, ruins of Capernaum and other sites connected with the life of Christ. Mount Tabor; Church of the Transfiguration, Nazareth; Church of the Annunciation and other Christian shrines associated with the childhood of Christ. There are also numerous sites dating from biblical and mediæval days, such as Ascalon, Cæsarea, Athlit Megiddo and Hazor.

History.—The early history of Palestine, from the time when Moses led the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage towards the Promised Land to the time of the Diaspora (Dispersion) in the second century of the Christian Era, can be found in the Books of the Old Testament and in the Works of Josephus. Before the dispersion it had become the cradle of Christianity and the Holy Land of the Christian World, but after the break up of the Roman Empire, into which it had been brought by Pompey in 65 B.C., it was conquered by Moslem Arabs (A.D. 634), remaining under the Crescent as part of the Ottoman Empire (except for a break from 1098 to 1187 under the Crusaders) until Allenby's victory over the Germano-Turkish forces in the plain of Armageddon (Megiddo) on September 29, 1918.

On November 2, 1917, a statement, afterwards known as The Balfour Declaration, was made by the British government that Britain viewed with favour the establishment in Palestine of a home for the Jewish people. This principle was incorporated in the mandate to Britain, which came officially into force on Sept. 29, 1923. From 1917 until 1948 Great Britain administered Palestine and laid the foundations of modern self-government.

The British mandate ended at midnight on May 14, 1948, when the Jewish National Council proclaimed a Jewish State of Israel, with David Ben Gurion as Prime Minister. On the following day Palestine was invaded by Syrian and Lebanese troops in the north, by the Transjordan Arab Legion and the Iraqis in the east and by the Egyptians in the south. On June 30 the last British troops left Haifa, which was taken over by Israel.

Hostilities ceased in January, 1949. The four armistice agreements signed under United Nations auspices in 1949 left Israel in occupation of various areas originally allotted to the Arab State. The situation as at present governed by the terms of the armistices has not yet been stabilized by peace treaties between Israel and any of its neighbours. The Arab parts of Palestine occupied by Jordan were formally incorporated with the latter in April, 1950. Egyptian forces occupy the "Gaza strip," a small coastal area with an Arab population.

Government.—There is a Cabinet and a single-chamber Parliament (Knesset Israel) of 120 members. The present Cabinet is based on a coalition between the three non-Communist socialist parties (Mapai, Achdut Ha'avoda and Mapam), and the liberal Progressive party. These parties, of which Mapai is the largest, have a working majority in the Knesset. The Cabinet resigned on July 5 following a Coalition crisis but remained temporarily in office as a caretaker Government. In the Knesset, Mapai has 40 seats; Herut (outgrowth of Irgun Zvai Leumi) 15; General Zionists 13; National Religious 11; Achdut Ha'avoda 10; Mapam 9; Communists 6; Progressives 5; Agudat Israel/Poalei Agudat Israel 6; pro-Mapai Arab parties 5.

Immigration.—The Declaration of Independence of May 14, 1948, laid down that "the State of Israel will be open to the immigration of Jews from all countries of their dispersion." The Law of Return, passed by the Knesset on July 5, 1950, provides that an immigrant visa shall be granted to every Jew who expresses his desire to settle in Israel. Since the establishment of the State 930,079 immigrants had entered Israel from 50 different countries by Feb. 28, 1959.

Education.—Elementary education for all children from 5 to 14 years is compulsory. In the 1957-58 school year the number of pupils in elementary and secondary schools was approximately 490,000 of whom about 40,000 were Arab pupils attending Arab schools. There are some 300 schools of other types with about 27,000 pupils. The Hebrew Technical College (Technion) at Haifa provides courses in engineering, architecture, aeronautics and other technical subjects for over 3,000 students. Tel Aviv University provides courses in law, economics, political sciences, business administration, and accounting, for 1,127 students, mostly part-time. The Weizmann Institute of Sciences at Rehovot is engaged in pure and applied research.

Finance.—Government expenditure for the fiscal year 1957-58 totalled I£1,065,698,526 while revenue during the same period was I£1,053,587,527.

The unit of account is the Israel pound of 1,000 prutot. The effective rate of exchange is I£5.067 = £1 sterling.

COMMUNICATIONS

Railways and Roads.—Israel State Railways started operating in August, 1949. Towns now served are Haifa, Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, Lydda, Naharia, Beersheba, and intermediate stations. In June, 1958, the total railway network amounted to 640 kms. There were approximately 2,951 km. of paved roads. In December, 1958, there were approximately 55,000 licensed vehicles.

Shipping.—Israel's merchant marine in 1958 included 35 vessels with a total displacement of 250,000 tons. In 1958, 1,522 ships with a net tonnage of 3,066,709 entered Israel ports. Cargo unloaded during the year amounted to 1,640,557 tons and cargo loaded to 778,538 tons.

The chief ports are Ψ Haifa, a modern harbour, with a depth of 30 ft. alongside the main quay; the new port on the Red Sea at Ψ Eilat, with an annual cargo-handling capacity of 250,000 tons, Ψ Jaffa and Ψ Tel Aviv, where there are harbours for small craft, and large vessels anchor at open roadstead. Ψ Acre has an anchorage for small vessels.

Civil Aviation.—B.E.A. operates six Viscount services per week between Lydda and London, two of them via Nicosia in conjunction with Cyprus Airways. Israel National Airlines (El Al) operate five Britannia services per week between Lydda and New York, three of them via London and two via Paris and other services to London, Athens, Zürich, Istanbul, Paris, Rome and Amsterdam. During 1958, 2,229 aircraft arrived at Lydda and Haifa airports, carrying 71,936 passengers and 1,069,107 kilograms of freight; 71,462 passengers and 951,802 kilograms of freight left through the two airports.

PRODUCTION AND INDUSTRY

Agriculture.—The country is generally fertile and climatic conditions vary so widely that a large variety of crops can be grown, ranging from temperate crops, such as wheat and cherries, to sub-tropical crops such as sorghum, millet and mangoes. The famous "Jaffa" orange is produced in large quantities in the coastal plain for export; other kinds of citrus fruits are also grown and exported. The citrus yield during the 1958-59 season was 555,111 tons. Of this total, 376,545 tons were exported, of which about 177,742 tons went to the U.K. Olives are cultivated, mainly for the production of oil used for edible purposes and for the manufacture of soap. The main winter crops are wheat and barley and various kinds of pulses, while in summer sorghum, millet, maize, sesame and summer pulses are grown. Large areas of seasonal vegetables are planted; potatoes can be grown in the autumn and in the winter. Since the establishment of the State of Israel, beef, cattle and poultry farming have been developed and the production of mixed vegetables and dairy produce has greatly increased. Tobacco and medium staple cotton are now grown. Fishing has also been extended, and production (mostly from fish ponds) reached 12,068 tons in 1958. All kinds of summer fruits such as figs, grapes, plums and apples are produced in increasing quantities for local consumption. Water supply for irrigation is the principal limiting factor to greater production, but the number of new deep wells is being extended and a plan to bring water to the Negev from the Yarkon river is nearly completed. A large part of the dairy industry is dependent on the production of fodder crops under irrigation; areas under fodder crops have doubled. The Israel land measure is the dunam, equivalent to 1,000 square metres (approximately a quarter of an acre).

Industry.—Among the more important industries are citrus and by-products, manufactured food products, pharmaceuticals, textiles and wearing apparel, artificial teeth, polished diamonds, plywood, cement, plastics, light engineering and the assembly of motor cars and trucks.

	TRADE	1958
Imports	I£	780,427,000
Exports		259,761,000
Imports from U.K., 1958.....	£	13,600,890
Exports to U.K., 1958		12,826,397

The principal imports are foodstuffs, crude oil, machinery and vehicles, iron, steel and manufactures thereof, and chemicals. The principal exports are citrus fruits and by-products, polished diamonds, plywood, cement, artificial teeth, finished and semi-finished textiles and pharmaceutical drugs.

CAPITAL, Jerusalem, population (Dec. 31, 1957), 152,500. Other principal towns are Ψ Tel Aviv-Jaffa (380,000); Ψ Haifa and district (166,000); Ramat Gan (71,500).

FLAG: White, with two horizontal blue stripes, the Shield of David in the centre.

JERUSALEM

Jerusalem and District is at present divided between Israel and Jordan under the terms of the armistice arranged at the end of hostilities. The Old City, which contains 34 of the 36 recognized Holy Places, is under the control of Jordan; the New City, with 2 Holy Places, is under Jewish administration. A resolution proclaiming Jerusalem as the capital of Israel was adopted by the Israel parliament on Jan. 23, 1950.

AREA AND POPULATION.—Italy is a Republic in the South of Europe, consisting of a peninsula, the large islands of Sicily and Sardinia, the island of Elba and about 70 islands (with certain dependencies noted below). Italy is bounded on the N. by Switzerland and Austria, on the S. by the Mediterranean, on the E. by the Adriatic and Yugoslavia, etc., and on the W. by France and the Ligurian and Tyrrhenian Seas. The total area may be estimated at 324,000 sq. kilometres, about 121,000 sq. miles, with a population (estimated January, 1959) of 50,271,000.

Births in 1958 numbered 873,530, deaths 459,000, and marriages 373,166.

Physiography.—The peninsula is for the most part mountainous, but between the Apennines, which form its spine, and the East coastline are two large fertile plains; of Emilia/Romagna in the north and of Apulia in the south. The Alps form the northern limit of Italy, dividing it from France, Switzerland, Austria and Yugoslavia. Mont Blanc (15,782 feet), the highest peak, is in the French Pennine Alps, but partly within the Italian borders are Monte Rosa (15,217 feet), Matterhorn (14,780 feet) and several peaks from 12,000 to 14,000 feet.

The chief rivers are the Po (220 miles), which flows through Piedmont, Lombardy and the Veneto and the Adige (Trentino and Veneto) in the north, the Arno (Florentine Plain) and the Tiber (flowing through Rome to Ostia). The Rubicon, a small stream flowing into the Adriatic near Rimini (and now usually identified with the Fiumicino) formed the boundary between Italy and Cisalpine Gaul: "crossing the Rubicon" (as Caesar did in 49 B.C., thus "invading" Italy in arms) is a step definitely indicating an aggressive course of action.

GOVERNMENT.—Italian unity was accomplished under the House of Savoy, after an heroic struggle from 1848 to 1870, in which the great patriots Mazzini (born 1805; died 1872), Garibaldi (born 1807; died 1882) and Cavour (born 1810; died 1861) were the principal figures. It was completed when Lombardy was ceded by Austria in 1859 and Venice in 1866, and through the evacuation of Rome by the French in 1870. In 1871 the King of Italy entered Rome, and that city was declared to be the capital.

Benito Mussolini, known as Il Duce (The Leader), was born July 29, 1883, and was continuously in office as Prime Minister from June 30, 1925, until July 25, 1943, when the Fascist régime was abolished. He was captured by Italian partisans while attempting to escape across the Swiss frontier and was put to death on April 28, 1945.

In fulfilment of a promise given in April, 1944, that he would retire when the Allies entered Rome a decree was signed on June 5, 1944, by the late King Victor Emmanuel III under which Prince Umberto, the King's son, became "Lieutenant-General of the Realm." The King remained head of the House of Savoy and retained the title of King of Italy until his abdication on May 9, 1946, when he was succeeded by the Crown Prince.

A general election was held on June 2, 1946, together with a referendum on the question of Republic or Monarchy. The Referendum resulted in 12,717,923 votes for a Republic and 10,719,284 for a Monarchy. The Royal Family left the country on June 13, and on June 28, 1946, a Provisional President was elected.

As a result of the General Election of April 18, 1948, in which the Christian Democrats were returned as the leading party with a majority in the Chamber, Signor de Gasperi formed a Coalition Government of Christian Democrats, Liberals, Republicans and those Right Wing Socialists who had left Nenni. The elections of July, 1953, resulted in a position of deadlock, and after Signor de Gasperi had formed a short-lived minority Government, he was succeeded as Prime Minister by Signor Pella. In February, 1954, a coalition of Christian Democrats, Social Democrats and Liberals was formed by Signor Scelba, with the support of the Republican Party. Signor Scelba's Government resigned in June, 1955, and was succeeded in July by a similar coalition headed by Signor Segni. In May, 1957, after the withdrawal from the coalition of the Social Democrats, Signor Segni's Government fell and was replaced in June by a single-party Christian Democrat Government under Signor Zoli. After the general election of May, 1958, a coalition of Christian Democrats and Social Democrats took office under Signor Fanfani and this was succeeded by a single-party Christian Democrat Government when Signor Segni took office on February 15, 1959.

THE NEW CONSTITUTION.—On Dec. 22, 1947, the Constituent Assembly approved the new Constitution laying the foundation of the Italian Republic, Article I of which states "Italy is a Democratic Republic founded on work. Sovereignty belongs to the people who exercise it in the forms and within the limits of the Constitution."

PRODUCTION.—Agriculture (including the growing of grapes, olives, chestnuts and rice) is the principal industry. Italian wines are numerous and celebrated, and olives and olive-oil are produced over a large area, notably in Liguria, Tuscany and Apulia; while fruit abounds and is largely exported; wheat production was greatly stimulated under the Fascist régime, and has made further progress since the War. The cultivation of the silk-worm forms an important industry. Fishing is carried on extensively, mainly for domestic consumption, though some tunny is exported. Italy is generally poor in mineral resources, but the discovery and rapid exploitation since the war of large quantities of natural methane gas in North Italy is likely considerably to reduce the costs of industrial production and the requirements of imported coal. The production of sulphur is important and among other minerals produced are iron pyrites, mercury, lead, zinc, aluminium, potassic salts and iron ores. There are promising deposits of oil in Sicily. Marble is quarried in considerable quantities. Salt and tobacco are Government monopolies.

The chief manufactures are woollens, cotton, silk, rayon, hemp, and linen yarns and tissues, iron and steel and their products, shipbuilding, gloves, motor vehicles, rubber tyres and tubes, leathers, straw and felt hats, furniture, chemical products, paper, agricultural and other machinery, prepared meats, artistic works (such as mosaics, pottery, Venetian glass, coral, alabaster ornaments), &c. Sugar is extracted from beet in large quantities for home consumption.

DEFENCE.—The Army consists of about 230,000 men and includes two armoured divisions, five recently reorganized infantry divisions, five Alpine brigades and five low-strength infantry divisions. The Navy consists of 3 cruisers, 6 destroyers, 46 escorts, 6 submarines, 77 minesweepers and also coastal craft and fleet auxiliaries. The Air Force consists of about 1,000 aircraft, of which about half are operational; approximate strength: officers, 4,400; men, 46,000.

LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE.—Italian is a Romance language derived from Latin. It is spoken in its purest form at Siena (Tuscany), but there are numerous dialects, showing variously French, German, Spanish and Arabic influences. Sardinian, the dialect of Sardinia, is accorded by some authorities the status of a distinct Romance language. Italian literature (in addition to Latin literature, which is the common inheritance of the civilized world) is one of the richest in Europe, particularly in its golden age (Dante, 1265-1321; Petrarca, 1304-1374; and Boccaccio, 1313-1375) and in the renaissance during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries (Ariosto, 1474-1533; Machiavelli, 1469-1527; Tasso, 1544-1595). Modern Italian literature has many noted names in prose and verse, notably Manzoni (1785-1873), Carducci (1835-1907) and Gabriele d'Annunzio (1864-1938). The Nobel Prize for Literature has been awarded to Italian authors on three occasions—G. Carducci (1906), Signora G. Deledda (1926), and Luigi Pirandello (1934). In 1958, there were 95 daily newspapers published in Italy, of which 17 were published in Rome and 11 in Milan.

EDUCATION.—Primary education is free and compulsory, and evening continuation classes are also compulsory for military recruits. It is maintained by local taxation and State grants. Secondary education is generally State-maintained, and schools are increasing in number. Several of the 26 Universities are of very ancient foundation, Bologna, Genoa, Macerata, Naples, Padua and Perugia in thirteenth century; Siena, Rome, Pisa, Pavia and Ferrara in fourteenth century; Catania and Turin in fifteenth century; Parma, Messina and Urbino in sixteenth century.

COMMUNICATIONS.—Serious damage was done to the Italian railway system by the war, but by the end of 1948 the work of restoring the tracks was almost completed. A large programme for rebuilding stations, replacing and increasing rolling stock, and for repairing and building new roads has been carried out, special attention being given to a large-scale development programme for Southern Italy. The Italian Mercantile Marine has been increased to 4,899,640 tons compared with 3,500,000 tons before the war.

CURRENCY

In July, 1958, the Italian Lira was quoted at approx. 1,750 = £1. (See also p. 84.)

	TRADE	1958

Imports from U.K. ...	£71,156,047	£66,318,162
Exports to U.K.	62,813,021	77,088,799

imports consist chiefly of iron and steel, coal, cotton, wool, machinery, coffee, timber, wheat, chemicals and crude oil.

The principal exports are citrus and other fresh fruit, fresh vegetables, tinned fruit and vegetables, motor vehicles, machinery, artificial fibres and yarns, chemical fertilizers, pneumatic tyres, rice and oil.

The principal imports from the U.K. in 1958 were machinery, wool, toilet preparations and soaps, metal goods, chemical and scientific instruments; the principal exports to the U.K. in 1958 were fresh and dried fruit and vegetables, woven fabrics, synthetic fibre yarns, chemicals, clothing, machinery and road vehicles.

CAPITAL, Rome, founded according to legend by Romulus in the year now known as 753 B.C., is situated on the Tiber, 25 miles from its mouth. It was the focal point of Latin civilization and dominion under the Republic and afterwards under the Roman Empire, and became the capital of Italy when the kingdom was established in 1871. Population (1959), 1,933,835. Other towns are Milan (1,434,632), Ψ Naples (1,134,402), Turin (920,789), Ψ Genoa (749,580), Florence (421,989), Bologna (418,428), Ψ Venice (341,761), Ψ Trieste (282,470), Ψ Bari (310,008), Verona (204,028), Ψ Leghorn (157,941), Ψ Taranto (191,311), Brescia (161,025), Ferrara (146,960), Ψ Reggio di Calabria (151,019), Ψ Spezia (119,746), Ψ Ancona (96,889), Ψ Ravenna (107,501), Ψ Salerno (107,226), Ψ Savona (70,896), Ψ Brindisi (67,614); in Sicily, Ψ Palermo (582,563), Ψ Catania (355,515), Ψ Messina (245,450), Ψ Trapani (77,495), Ψ Syracuse (81,052); and in Sardinia, Ψ Cagliari (157,233).

TRIESTE.—From June 12, 1945, the area of Trieste was administered by Allied Military Government; Zone A, including Duino and the city and harbour of Trieste, by Anglo-U.S. forces and Zone B, including the towns of Capodistria, Pirano and Cittanuova by Yugoslavia. Provision for setting up a Free Territory of Trieste, included in the Italian Peace Treaty signed in Paris on Feb. 10, 1947, proved to be unworkable and military occupation of the two Zones continued until 1954, when an agreement was concluded in London on Oct. 5 between Italy, Yugoslavia, the United Kingdom and the United States, partitioning this territory between Italy and Yugoslavia along the line of demarcation of the two Zones, with a minor frontier rectification in favour of Yugoslavia. Zone A, an area of about 90 square miles with a population of 296,229, was formally handed over to Italian administration on October 26, 1954.

ITALY'S FORMER COLONIES, &c.

The future of the former Italian colonies was determined by the General Assembly in a resolution of November 21, 1949, and subsequent subsidiary resolutions.

For LIBYA see separate article.

In Somalia authority was transferred on April 1, 1950, by the United Kingdom to Italy. Somalia is to become an independent and sovereign state on December 2, 1960.

Under a United Nations resolution of December 2, 1950, Eritrea constitutes an autonomous unit federated with Ethiopia under the sovereignty of the Ethiopian crown. See ETHIOPIA.

Somalia comprises a coastal strip on the Gulf of Aden and the Indian Ocean, from 11° N. lat. to the Equator, and is bounded on the N. by the Gulf of Aden, on E. by the Indian Ocean, and on W. by British Somaliland, Abyssinia, and British E. Africa. The total area, including the territory of Jubaland (and the port of Ψ Kismayu), transferred from Kenya by Great Britain in 1925, is about 220,000 sq.

miles, and the population is estimated at 1,263,584. The capital is Ψ Mogadishu, on the Indian Ocean, estimated population (1956), 74,056.

Pantelleria Island (part of Trapani Province) in the Sicilian Narrows, has an area of 31 sq. miles and a population of 10,306.

The Pelagian Islands (Lampedusa, Linosa and Lampione) are part of the Province of Agrigento and have an area of 8 sq. miles, pop. 4,458.

Area and Population.—Japan consists of 4 large and many small islands situated in the North Pacific Ocean between longitude $128^{\circ} 6'$ East and $145^{\circ} 49'$ East and between latitude $26^{\circ} 59'$ and $45^{\circ} 32'$ N., with a total area of 182,700 square miles and a population (March, 1959) of 92,420,000.

Japan Proper consists of Honshū (or Mainland), 230,532 sq. k. (89,011 sq. m.), Shikoku, 18,773 sq. k. (7,248 sq. m.), Kyūshū, 42,079 sq. k. (16,247 sq. m.), Hokkaido, 77,096 sq. k. (29,764 sq. m.). Formosa and the Kwantung Province, which had been throughout the years of Japanese expansion and aggression leased or annexed, reverted to Chinese sovereignty after the War of 1939-45.

After the unconditional surrender to the Allied Nations (Aug. 15, 1945), Japan was occupied by Allied forces under General MacArthur (Sept. 15, 1945), and the status of parts of the former Japanese Empire has yet to be determined. A Japanese peace treaty conference opened at San Francisco on Sept. 4, 1951, and on Sept. 8, 48 nations signed the treaty, which became effective on April 28, 1952. Since that date Japan has restored relations with a number of nations, including the U.S.S.R., Poland and Czechoslovakia.

British participation in the occupation of Japan was virtually over by May, 1950, at which date the British Commonwealth Occupation Force was reduced to 3,000 Australians. However, the outbreak of hostilities in Korea in June, 1950, resulted in the despatch to Korea of British Forces from the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and Canada to participate in the United Nations action. The main base of this force was established in Japan at Kure, and the Japan element of the British Commonwealth Forces in Korea at its peak amounted to approximately 6,000 troops. On July 1, 1956, the base was moved to Inchon, Korea, and all Commonwealth troops had left Japan by the middle of 1957.

Under the terms of the United States-Japan Security Treaty of Sept. 8, 1951, United States forces remained to defend Japan after the coming into effect of the Peace Treaty. As Japan's own forces are built up, it is expected that the United States forces will be gradually withdrawn.

Vital Statistics.—In January, 1958, Japan proper contained 91,250,000 inhabitants. The average annual increase between 1950 and 1956 was 1,155,219. The birth rate in 1957 was 17.2 per 1,000 and the death rate 8.3 per 1,000. The Ainu, remnant of the indigenous inhabitants, are dying out but are still found in small numbers.

Physiography.—The coastline exceeds 17,000 miles and is deeply indented, so that few places are far from the sea. The interior is very mountainous, and crossing the mainland from the Sea of Japan to the Pacific is a group of volcanoes, mainly extinct or dormant. Mount Fuji, the loftiest and most sacred mountain of Japan, about 60 miles from Tokyo, is 12,370 ft. high and has been dormant since 1707, but there are other volcanoes which are active, including Mount Aso in Kyūshū. There are frequent earthquakes, mainly along the Pacific coast near the Bay of Tokyo. Japan proper extends from sub-tropical to sub-arctic zones. Heavy snowfalls are frequent on the western slopes of Hokkaidō and Honshū, but the Pacific coasts are warmed by the Japan current. There is a plentiful rainfall and the rivers are short and swift-flowing, offering abundant opportunities for the supply of hydro-electric power.

Government.—According to Japanese tradition, Jimmu, the first Emperor of Japan, ascended the throne on Feb. 11, B.C. 660. Under the Constitution of Feb. 11, 1889, the monarchy was hereditary in the male heirs of the Imperial house. A new constitution approved by the Supreme Allied Commander was published on March 6, 1946, superseding the "Meiji Constitution" of 1889 and containing many radical changes based on the constitutional practices of the United Kingdom, U.S.A. and France. Among the most important innovations are the abandonment of the doctrine of Imperial Divinity, the renunciation of war, and the establishment of a Supreme Court.

The new constitution came into force on May 3, 1947. Legislative authority rests with The Diet, which is bicameral, consisting of a House of Representatives and a House of Councillors, both Houses being composed of elected members. Executive authority is vested in the Cabinet which is responsible to the Legislature.

The Japanese peace treaty came into force on April 28, 1952, after ratification by Argentina, Australia, Canada, Ceylon, Mexico, New Zealand, Pakistan, the U.K., the U.S.A. and Japan herself. Japan thereupon resumed her status as a sovereign and independent power.

A general election was held on May 22, 1958, in which the Liberal Democratic Party was once more returned to power. The strength of the parties in the Lower House on June 29, 1959, was: Liberal Democratic Party, 290; Socialist Party, 165; Independent, 2; Communist Party, 1. Following an election for half the seats in the Upper House, the strength of the parties there was: Liberal Democratic Party, 135; Socialist Party, 84; Independents, 16; Green Breeze Society, 11; Communist Party, 3; vacancies, 1.

Agriculture and Livestock.—Owing to the mountainous nature of the country not more than one-sixth of its area is available for cultivation. There were in 1957 over 25,000,000 hectares of forest, which include the Cryptomeria japonica, Pinus massoniana, Zelkova keaki, and Pawlonia imperialis in addition to camphor trees, mulberry, vegetable wax tree and a lacquer tree which furnishes the celebrated lacquer of Japan. The soil is only moderately fertile, but intensive cultivation secures good crops. In 1957 there were 4,829,000 hectares under cereals (rice 3,265,000 hectares—66 per cent.). The tobacco-plant, tea-shrub, potato, rice, wheat and other cereals are all cultivated; rice is the staple food of the people, about 11,000,000 metric tons being produced annually. The floral kingdom is rich, beautiful, and varied, though scented flowers are comparatively few. Fruit is abundant, including the orange, persimmon and loquat; European fruits, such as apples, strawberries, pears, grapes, figs, and peaches are produced, and the American navel orange is extensively grown. Mulberry trees are now cultivated on only 193,138 hectares (just over a quarter of the pre-war area) and silk is playing a reduced part in Japanese exports.

Minerals.—The country has mineral resources, including gold and silver, and copper, lead, zinc, iron chromite, white arsenic, coal, sulphur, petroleum and salt, but iron ore and coal are among the principal post-war imports to supply deficiencies at home.

Industry.—Japan is the most highly industrialized nation in the Far East, with the whole range of modern light and heavy industries, including mining, metals, machinery, chemicals, textiles (cotton, silk, wool and synthetics), cement, pottery, glass, rubber, lumber, paper, oil refining and shipbuilding. The labour force of Japan in 1958 averaged 43,680,000, about 19,730,000 being paid workers; of the remainder, some 10,680,000 were classed as proprietors, and another 12,690,000 were family workers. Of the total labour force, some 15,470,000 were engaged in agriculture, only 460,000 being paid employees. About 35.1 per cent. of paid industrial workers were organized into trade unions.

Communications.—There were 27,825 kilometres of Government and private railroad (steam and electric) in March, 1958. The Japanese mercantile marine reached 6,000,000 gross tons in 1947, but more than three-quarters of it was sunk during the war. By the end of November, 1958, it had been rebuilt to 5,973,000 gross tons of steel vessels (100 tons or over), and it is intended under a new long-range plan covering the period from April 1, 1958, to March 31, 1963, to continue the expansion of the fleet. The target for dry cargo vessels is 5,880,000 deadweight tons and for tankers 2,303,000 deadweight tons compared with 3,324,000 and 921,000 deadweight tons respectively in 1956, the base year for the plan.

Armed Forces.—After the unconditional surrender of August, 1945, the land forces were disbanded and all aircraft were confiscated by the occupying forces. Although the present Constitution of Japan prohibits the maintenance of armed forces, an internal security force, known as the National Police Reserve, came into being at the end of 1950. In October 1951, this Force was renamed the National Safety Force and together with a Coastal Safety Force was placed under a National Safety Agency. By January 1953, the National Safety Force had reached its authorized strength of 110,000. In March 1954 a Mutual Defence Agreement for the supply of equipment and materials was concluded with the United States. In June, the mission of the forces was extended to include the defence of Japan against direct and indirect aggression, the Agency was renamed the Defence Agency, the forces under it the Ground Self Defence Force and the Maritime Self Defence Force respectively and a new arm, the Air Self Defence Force, was created. During 1956, the strength of these forces was increased to 160,000, 22,7000 and 10,350 respectively. At the end of 1958 the tonnage of the M.S.D.F. amounted to 98,169. By the end of 1959 it was planned to have 1,947 ships (excluding harbour craft), of a total tonnage of 11,407. The Naval Air Arm consisted of 137 planes, of which 78 were for A/S and patrol duties. The Japanese Air Self Defence Force (J.A.S.D.F.) had, at the end of 1958, 280 piston and 230 jet training aircraft, 240 jet operational-training aircraft, 110 jet day fighter/ground attack aircraft, 38 transport aircraft and a few helicopters, the greater part being of U.S. design. Its strength was 4,805 officers, 21,820 airmen and 3,802 civilians —a total of 30,027. The authorized strength of the Ground Self Defence Force in April, 1958, was 170,000. Broadly the Force is organized in six light divisions and four combined brigades. It is equipped with weapons of U.S. manufacture.

Religion.—All religions are tolerated. The principal religions of Japan are Mahayana Buddhism and Shinto. The Roman Catholic Church has 8 archbishops and 8 bishops. The Nippon Seikokai (Holy Catholic Church of Japan) has 8 Japanese bishops and is an autonomous branch of the Anglican communion. There is also an United Protestant Church.

Education.—According to the laws passed in 1947, education on elementary level (6-year course) and lower secondary level (3-year course) is free, compulsory and co-educational. Upper secondary schools (3-year course) are mainly established and maintained by prefectures, and are co-educational. They have several courses in general, agricultural, commercial, technical, mercantile marine, radio-communication and home-economics education, etc. There are 2- or 3-year junior colleges and 4-year universities. Some of the 4-year universities have graduate schools. In May, 1957, the total number of these junior colleges and universities was 503, 93 of which were established and maintained by the State, while 69 were established and maintained by prefectures and cities, and 341 were private institutions. The most prominent universities are the seven State Universities of Tokyo, Kyoto, Tohoku (Sendai), Hokkaidō (Sapporo), Kyushu (Fukuoka), Osaka and Nagoya, and the two private universities, Keio and Waseda.

Language and Literature.—Japanese is said to be one of the Altaic group of languages and remained a spoken tongue until the fifth-seventh centuries A.D., when the Chinese characters came into use. Most Japanese who have received school education can read and write the Chinese characters in current use (about 1,800 characters) and also the syllabary characters called Kana. English is the best known foreign language. It is compulsory in almost all middle and high schools. In January, 1958, there were 759 libraries open to the public (34 National Diet libraries, 674 state and 51 private) with 20,448,533 volumes. In addition, there are 528 University libraries with 23,545,819 volumes. In 1956 there were 250 daily newspapers in Japan, of which 15 were published at Tokyo, 11 at Osaka and 13 in the Nagoya region. Japan's present total newspaper circulation is estimated at 36,373,000 copies and 2.45 per household.

FINANCE

The Budget for the financial year 1959-60, ending on March 31, is estimated to balance at Yen 1,419,248,000,000 for revenue and expenditure on the general account.

The official rate of exchange of yen 360=1 U.S.$ was established on April 25, 1949, and (after Japan's accession to the International Monetary Fund) was confirmed by the Fund on May 11, 1953. The list of currencies in which banks are allowed to deal has recently been expanded considerably. Exchange rates of all currencies, other than the $U.S., are allowed to fluctuate within IMF limits.

FOREIGN TRADE

Total Imports	U.S. $3,033,124,711
Total Visible Exports	" 2,876,560,239
Imports from U.K.	£19,399,850
Exports to U.K.	£35,358,909

There was an adverse balance of U.S. $24,123,496 for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959.

Being deficient in natural resources, Japan has had to develop a complex foreign trade. Principal imports consist of raw materials (cotton, wool, mineral oils, rubber, iron ore, coking coal, salt, wood pulp, hides), foodstuffs (rice, wheat, barley, soya beans, sugar), petroleum, chemicals and specialized machinery. Principal exports consist of cotton and rayon textiles, machinery, ships, metals and products, canned fish, chemicals and a wide variety of manufactured goods, including chinaware, toys, bicycles, sewing machines and cameras.

CAPITAL OF JAPAN, Tokyo. Its population in May, 1959, was 9,021,313. The other chief cities had the following populations in early 1957.

ψ Osaka.....	2,632,000
Kyoto, the ancient capital.....	1,210,107
ψ Nagoya.....	1,387,019

Ambassador, Mohammed Shuraihi.

Counsellor, Assayed Zuhayr Mufti.

Military Attaché, Lt.-Col. Abdullah Bitar.

2nd Secretary and Consul, Dr. Ahmed Attiyate.

Area and Population.—The Hashemite Kingdom of the Jordan is made up of two areas: Western Jordan, which includes the districts of Hebron, Jerusalem and Nablus, and Eastern Jordan, which includes the districts of Ma'an, Kerak, Belqa and Ajlun. The union of East and West Jordan was effected by a decision taken unanimously by both houses of the Legislature on April 24, 1950. The union was recognized a few days later by the British Government subject to certain reservations on the subject of Jerusalem. The Kingdom is bounded on the north by Syria, on the west by Israel, on the south by Saudi Arabia and on the east by Iraq. The majority of the population are Sunni Moslems and Islam is the religion of the state. The estimated population is 1,400,000 persons, of whom about 500,000 are displaced Palestinians.

Government.—The Executive consists of a Council of Ministers and the legislature of a Senate (25 persons nominated by the King) and a House of Representatives, consisting of 50 elected members.

Production and Industry.—West Jordan is fertile, but severely eroded. East Jordan (the old Amirate of Transjordan), consists of a fertile mountainous area and the eastern half of the Jordan valley which are productive; the rest of the country is arid steppe. Jordan's only industrial product of note is raw phosphate, of which about 232,000 tons were exported in 1958, valued at nearly £1,000,000.

Communications.—The Hejaz Railway runs (with the exception of the first few miles) through Jordan territory from Deraa to Ma'an. During the Second World War, 24 miles of line were laid from Ma'an to Ras Naqb; there are good roads to all the chief towns in the country.

KOREA

Korea is situated between 124° 11' and 130° 57' E. long., and between 33° 7' and 43° 1' N. lat. It has an area of 85,256 sq. miles with an estimated population of about 28,000,000, of whom about 21,500,000 live south of the present dividing line. The southern and western coasts are fringed with innumerable islands, of which the largest, forming a province of its own, is Chejudo (Quelpart). The soil is fertile, but the arable land is limited by the mountainous nature of the country. The staple agricultural products are rice, barley, and other cereals, beans, cotton, tobacco and hemp. Fruit-growing and sericulture are also practised. Gingseng, a medicinal root much affected by the Chinese, is largely grown at Kaesong (now in North Korean hands) but also in parts of South Korea. It forms a rich source of revenue. Gold, copper, coal, iron, graphite, tungsten and other minerals are distributed throughout the country, but are more abundant in the north. In pre-war days the south was mainly agricultural and most of the limited industries were in the north. Political necessity in recent years has led to some industrialization south of the demarcation line, but the southern portion of the peninsula remains predominantly agricultural.

History.—The last native dynasty (Yi) ruled from 1392 until 1910, in which year Japan formally annexed Korea. The country remained an integral part of the Japanese Empire until the defeat of Japan in 1945, when it was occupied by troops of the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R.; the 38th parallel being fixed as the boundary between the two zones of occupation. The U.S. Government endeavoured to reach agreement with the Soviet Government for the creation of a Korean Government for the whole country and the withdrawal of all Russian and American troops. These efforts met with no success, and in September, 1947, the U.S. Government laid the whole question of the future of Korea before the General Assembly of the United Nations. The Assembly in November, 1947, resolved that elections should be held in Korea for a National Assembly under the supervision of a temporary Commission formed for that purpose by the United Nations and that the National Assembly when elected should set up a Government. The Soviet Government refused to allow the Commission to visit the Russian Occupied Zone and in consequence it was only able to discharge its function in that part of Korea which lies to the south of the 38th parallel.

The Korean War.—The country remained effectively divided into two along the line of the 38th parallel, until the aggression of June 25, 1950, when the North Korean forces invaded South Korea. On the same day, at an emergency meeting of the United Nations Security Council, a resolution was adopted calling for immediate cessation of hostilities, and the withdrawal of the North Korean armed forces to the 38th parallel. The Communist forces ignored this demand and continued their advance. In response to a Security Council recommendation that United Nations members should furnish assistance to repel the attack, 16 nations, including the United States of America and the United Kingdom, came to the aid of the Republic of Korea. A unified command under the leadership of the United States was established on July 8. Shortly afterwards U.S. troops were landed in Korea but were at first unable to stem the Communists' onslaught. Finally the United Nations and South Korea forces were able to stabilize a front around the Pusan perimeter. On September 15, U.S. Marines made a successful surprise landing at Inchon which was quickly followed by a breakthrough from the Pusan perimeter and a general advance to the north. The Communist forces had been pushed back almost to the Manchurian frontier, when, at the beginning of November, hordes of Chinese "Volunteers" began to pour over the Yalu River and by sheer weight of numbers forced the U.N. troops to withdraw once again south of Seoul. However, the latter quickly regrouped and threw the Communist forces back to approximately the old dividing line.

The fighting was ended by an armistice agreement signed by the U.N. Commander-in-Chief and the commanders of the North Korean army and the Chinese People's "Volunteers" on July 27, 1953. By this agreement (which was not accepted by the government of the Republic of Korea) the line of division between North and South Korea remained in the neighbourhood of the 38th parallel. The Geneva Conference discussed Korea from April 26 to June 15, 1954, but failed to agree on measures for reunifying the country.

Republic of Korea

President, Dr. Syngman Rhee, re-elected for 4 years, May 15, 1956 (third term).

Vice-President, Dr. Chang Myon.

KOREAN EMBASSY IN LONDON

[Kensington: 8025]

Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary, Yu Taik Kim.

Counsellor, Tong Jin Park.

1st Secretary and Consul, Ilwoo Lee.

3rd Secretaries, Kong Chun Choi; Tal Seung Yang.

Attaché, Johngson Limb.

Naval, Military and Air Attaché, Capt. Kyunam Chae.

The Republic of Korea has been officially recognized by the Governments of the United States, France, Great Britain, and most other countries except the U.S.S.R. and its satellites. It has an area of 96,930 sq. km. (37,426 sq. miles) and a population (Census, 1958) of 21,909,742.

A general election was held on May 10, 1948, and the first National Assembly met in Seoul on May 31. The Assembly passed a Constitution on July 12, and on July 20 elected Dr. Syngman Rhee as the first President of the Republic of Korea for four years. On August 15, 1948, the Republic was formally inaugurated and American Military Government came to an end. All U.S. troops were withdrawn by the end of June, 1949. In the fourth general elections for the National Assembly held on May 2, 1958, the Liberal Party retained its majority, but the Democratic Party improved its position, winning one-third of the seats.

The Republic of Korea has an army of about 550,000 men, a small navy mainly for coast protection duties, a small air force and a Marine Corps which includes one division trained in amphibious operations.

Finance.—The Budget for the year ending December 31, 1959, balances revenue and expenditure at Hwan 390,000,000,000. Expenditure on National Defence is estimated at Hwan 146,000,000,000.

The rate of exchange is fixed by bilateral agreement with the U.S.A. at Hwan 500 = $1 (1,400 = £1), subject to review.

Trade.—The Republic of Korea's main exports are non-ferrous metals, iron ore, silk, fish and fish products, agar-agar, kolinsky furs, bristles, and ginseng. Since 1945 imports have greatly exceeded exports; in 1958 imports totalled U.S. $388,208,000 of which U.S. $311,020,000 was financed with foreign aid funds, while exports totalled only U.S. $16,452,000. Trade with the United Kingdom in 1958 was valued at: imports, £2,654,088; exports to U.K. £264,025.

CAPITAL.—Seoul, population (1958), 1,756,406. Other main centres are Pusan (pop. 1,045,183), Taegu (pop. 487,252) and P Incheon (pop. 317,967). Pusan on the south-east coast, and Incheon on the west coast, only 28 miles from Seoul, are the main ports but the development of Incheon is hampered by a tide variation of 28–30 feet.

Democratic Peoples' Republic of Korea.—Meanwhile in the Russian-occupied zone north of the 38th parallel the Democratic People's Republic had been set up with its capital at Pyongyang; a Supreme Peoples' Soviet was elected in September 1948, and a Soviet-style Constitution adopted. Recognition had been given by the U.S.S.R. and its satellites. In January, 1949, the Soviet Government announced that all Russian troops had been withdrawn from Korea by the end of December, 1948.

Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary, H.R.H. Prince Tiao Khammao (1958).

Laos includes the former Kingdoms of Luang Prabang and Vientiane and the Principality of the Champassak, now united under King Sisavang Vong (born 1885) of the House of Luang Prabang. The country has an estimated area of 90,000 square miles. In 1948, the population was given as 1,500,000: it is now probably slightly over 2,000,000. The administrative capital is Vientiane (estimated population 30,000-40,000). The independence of the kingdom was recognized by France in July, 1949. Laos was invaded by the Communist Viet Minh in the spring of 1953. Under the terms of the Geneva Armistice Agreements of July, 1954 the Viet Minh troops were to evacuate Laos by November of that year. The two Northern Provinces of Sam Neua and Phong Saly remained, however, under the effective control of the rebel Pathet Lao forces until November, 1957, when an agreement reached between the Royal Laotian Government and the Pathet Lao leaders provided for the assumption of control of these provinces by the Government and the integration of the Pathet Lao forces into the Royal Army.

Ambassador, Ibrahim el-Ahdab (1955).
 Counsellor, Albert Nassif.
 Attaché, Ibrahim Kharmat.

The republic of the Lebanon is in the Levant, covering a portion of the former Ottoman Empire taken from the Turks by British forces (with a small French detachment and some Arab forces under the Emir Faisal and Colonel Lawrence) in 1918, but following the Anglo-French Convention of September, 1919, Great Britain withdrew in favour of France, to whom a Mandate was granted by the Supreme Council of Allied Powers in 1920. The French authorities granted a Constitution and the first President of the Republic (under the Mandate) was elected in 1926.

In 1941 hostilities broke out between the French troops in Syria and Lebanon and the Allied Forces in the Middle East, the latter having been directed to prevent further Nazi penetration into French Mandated Territory. Hostilities ceased on July 11, 1941, and the French High Command agreed to remove the garrison.

In accordance with the undertaking given by the British and Free French Forces, Syria and Lebanon were declared to be independent and separate States. In 1943 the amended Constitution came into force and the first President of the independent Lebanon Republic was elected.

Under an agreement signed by General Catroux (on behalf of the French Committee of National Liberation) and by representatives of Syria and Lebanon "all powers and capacities exercised hitherto by the French under mandate" were transferred to the Syrian and Lebanese governments as from Jan. 1, 1944.

Lebanon forms a strip, about 120 miles in length and varying in width from 30 to 35 miles, along the Mediterranean littoral, and extending from the Palestine frontier on the south to the Nahr al Kebir (15 miles north of Tripoli) on the north; its eastern boundary runs down the Anti-Lebanon range and then down the Great Central depression, the Begaa, in which flow the rivers Orontes and Litani. It is divided into 5 districts, North Lebanon, Mount Lebanon, Beirut, South Lebanon and Begaa. The seaward slopes of the mountains have a Mediterranean climate and vegetation. The inland range of Anti-Lebanon has the characteristics of steppe country. There is a mixed Arabic-speaking population of Christians, Moslems and Druses.

Area and Population.—The total area of Lebanon is about 4,300 sq. miles, the population being estimated at 1,430,000 in 1956.

Production.—Fruits are the most important products and include olives, citrus fruit and apples. Tobacco, silk, cotton, cement, textiles, wines and other alcoholic drinks are also produced. There is little remaining of the famous cedars of Lebanon.

Railways.—A narrow-gauge railway runs from Beirut to Damascus, connecting at Rayak with the standard-gauge line which runs from Tripoli through Homs, Hama and Aleppo to the Turkish frontier, from Nusaybin to the Iraq frontier at Tel Kotcheh. A standard gauge railway also runs up the coast from Nakoura on the Palestine border, through Beirut to Tripoli, but the Beirut-Nakoura sector is not in use at present.

Roads.—All the principal towns in the country are connected by roads, for the most part good.

Civil Aviation.—Beirut International Airport is one of the most important traffic centres in the Middle East. Numerous international air services to all parts of the world pass through it, and local services connect with all Middle Eastern capitals except Tel Aviv. There are 3 national airline companies in the Lebanon serving international as well as local routes. One of these companies (Middle East Airlines) enjoys the financial support of B.O.A.C. and operates Viscount services.

Rivers.—The Orontes flows northwards from the Lebanon range across the northern boundary to Antioch; the Litali flows southwards from Lebanon, turns westwards round the southern extremity of the range and flows into the Mediterranean.

Archæology, etc.—Lebanon has some important historical remains, notably Baalbek (Heliopolis) which contains the ruins of I-III century Roman temples and Jubail (Biblos), one of the oldest continuously inhabited towns in the world.

Language and Literature.—Arabic is the principal language (see Arabia), and French is also widely used. The use of English is increasing. About 150 newspapers and periodicals are registered in Beirut, but only 40 of these appear regularly, of which 30 are printed in Arabic, 5 in French, 4 in Armenian and 1 in English.

Education.—There are three universities in Beirut, the American and the French (R.C.) Universities established in the last century, and the Lebanese National University which is a recent foundation and in the early stages of development. There are several institutions for vocational training and there is a good provision throughout the country of primary and secondary schools, among which are a great number of private schools.

CHIEF TOWNS.— Ψ Beirut (population about 450,000) is the capital of the Lebanon. Ψ Tripoli (100,000), Zahlé (40,000), Ψ Sidon (25,000), Ψ Tyre (12,000) are other towns of importance.

FINANCE

Receipts and Expenditure, 1959 (Estimated) £L206,000,000.

Currency. The monetary unit is the Lebanese £(L); official rate £1 = £L6.13. There is also an officially recognized free market in foreign currencies, which is used for nearly all commercial transactions. The free market rate for sterling is variable, but averages about £L8.83 = £1.

TRADE

Principal imports: Gold and precious metals, cereals, cotton and woollen textiles, artificial and cotton yarns, iron and steel goods, petrol, oils, wood, pharmaceuticals, raw hides, sugar, motor-vehicles, live-stock, wheat, flour, machinery and paper.

Principal exports: Gold and precious metals, citrus fruits, wool, onions, cotton, textiles, apples and pears, scrap metal, vegetables, hides and skins, soap, butter, cereals, oil-seed, tobacco and wines.

Trade with U.K., 1958.—Imports, £10,363,013; Exports to U.K., £2,316,159.

There is also a considerable transit trade through Beirut, mainly in gold and crude oil. Lebanon is the terminal for two oil pipe lines, one, belonging to the Iraq Petroleum Company, debouching at Tripoli, the other belonging to the Trans-Arabian Pipeline Company, at Sidon. There are refineries at each end of the pipeline which can, to all intents and purposes, fulfil Lebanon's needs.

LEBANESE FLAG.—Red, white and red with a green cedar of Lebanon in the centre of the white band.

AIR TRANSIT FROM U.K.—London-Beirut (2,169 miles), 6 hrs. 40 mins.

An independent Negro Republic of Western Africa, occupying that part of the coast between Sierra Leone and the Ivory Coast, which is between the rivers Mano in the N.W. and Cavalla in the S.E., a distance of about 350 miles, with an area of about 43,000 square miles, and extending to the interior to latitude 8° 50', a distance of 150 miles from the seaboard. It was founded by the American Colonization Society in 1820, and has been recognized since 1847 as an independent State. The population is estimated at 1,600,000.

The executive power is vested in a President elected for 4 years, assisted by a ministry; there are two houses of Legislature, the Senate, with 10 members elected for six years, and the House of Representatives, with 39 members elected for four years. There is no regular army, but there is an enlisted frontier force of about 2,000 men. The artificial harbour and free port of Monrovia was opened on July 26, 1948. There are 9 ports of entry, including 3 river ports.

Liberia is receiving assistance from the U.S. International Co-operation Administration and technicians have been sent from U.S.A. to carry out various projects. A loan of $15,000,000 has been negotiated with the Import-Export Bank to finance road construction. UNESCO, WHO and

Libya, on the Mediterranean coast of Africa, is bounded on the East by Egypt and the Sudan, on the South by French Equatorial and French West Africa, and on the West by Algeria and Tunisia. It consists of the three provinces of Tripolitania, Cyrenaica and the Fezzan, with a combined area of approximately 810,000 square miles and a population estimated (1954) at 1,091,000. The people of Libya are principally Arab with some Berbers in the West and African negroes in the Fezzan, and there is a considerable Italian minority in Tripolitania. Islam is the official religion of Libya, but all religions are tolerated. The official language is Arabic.

Vast sand and rock deserts, almost completely barren, occupy the greater part of Libya. The Southern part of the country lies within the Sahara Desert. There are no rivers and, as rainfall is precarious, a good harvest is infrequent. Agriculture is confined mainly to the coastal areas of Tripolitania and Cyrenaica, where barley, wheat, olives, almonds, citrus fruits and dates are produced, and to the areas of the oases, many of which are well supplied with springs supporting small fertile areas. Among the important oases are Gadames, Jofra, Sebha, Gat, Jalo, Bir Hakim and the Kufra group in the South-East. Exports from Libya include wool, cattle, sheep and horses, esparto grass, olive oil, sponges and hides and skins. Principal imports are foodstuffs, including sugar, tea and coffee and most constructional materials and consumer goods. A large number of oil companies are prospecting for oil in Libya and there have recently been some promising strikes.

The ancient ruins in Cyrenaica, at Cyrene, Ptolemais (Tolmeta) and Apollonia, are interesting to archaeologists, as are those at Leptis Magna near Homs, 70 miles from Tripoli and at Sabratha, 40 miles west of Tripoli.

Communications in Libya are good in the coastal area, where a motor road runs from the Tunisian frontier through Tripoli to Benghazi, Tobruk and the Egyptian border, serving the needs of the main population centres. Elsewhere roads are poor and the transport inland is confined to caravan and occasional motor bus routes. Small railway systems exist in the Tripoli and Benghazi areas. There are airports near Tripoli (Idris el Awal) and Benghazi (Benina) regularly used by commercial airlines, and military airfields at El Adem (near Tobruk, R.A.F.), and Wheelus Field, Mellaha (near Tripoli, U.S.A.A.F.).

Government.—Libya was occupied by Italy in 1911-12 in the course of the Italo-Turkish War, and under the Treaty of Ouchy (Oct., 1912) the sovereignty of the province was transferred by Turkey to Italy. In 1939 the four Provinces of Libya (Tripoli, Misurata, Benghazi and Derna) were incorporated in the national territory of Italy as Libia Italiana. After the Second World War Tripolitania and Cyrenaica were placed provisionally under British and the Fezzan under French administration, and in conformity with a resolution of the General Assembly on Nov. 22, 1949, Libya became on Dec. 24, 1951, the first independent state to be created by the United Nations.

Libya has a federal form of government and an hereditary monarchy. Government is by a two-chamber parliament. The Senate of 24 members, equally divided between the three Provinces, is nominated half by the King and half by the three Provincial Legislative Councils. The first Senate was wholly nominated by the King, but in future half the members are to be nominated every four years. The House of Representatives is an elected body at present consisting of 55 members, 34 from Tripolitania, 15 from Cyrenaica and 6 from the Fezzan. Members are elected on a basis of one for every 20,000 inhabitants provided that the number of members in any one of the three provinces shall not be less than 5, and elections of all members are to be held every four years. Legislation may be initiated by the King, the Senate or the House of Representatives, except laws concerning the Budget or taxation, which may not be introduced by the Senate.

The three Provinces of Tripolitania, Cyrenaica and the Fezzan are each administered by a Governor assisted by an Executive and a Legislative Council.

Currency.—Libya entered the Sterling Area on January 3, 1952, and a new currency was introduced on March 24, 1952. The \mathcal{L} Libyan is equal to the \mathcal{L} Sterling and is divided into 100 piastres and 1,000 millièmes. There are seven denominations of notes (\mathcal{L} 20, 5, 2, 1, and $\frac{1}{2}$, 10 piastres and 5 piastres) and five denominations of coins (1 and 2 piastres, 5, 2 and 1 millièmes).

Grants have been made by the United Kingdom, France, Italy and the United States to foster Libya's economic development and technical assistance is being provided by the United Nations and the United States.

A treaty of alliance and friendship between the United Kingdom and Libya, together with military and financial agreements, was signed at Benghazi on July 29, 1953. The United Kingdom will provide financial aid to Libya for 20 years. During the first five years \mathcal{L} 1,000,000 was paid annually for economic development, while from 1953–55 \mathcal{L} 2,750,000, in 1956 \mathcal{L} 3,000,000 and 1957 \mathcal{L} 3,250,000 was paid to the Libyan Budget. The figure for the second five-year period has been fixed at \mathcal{L} 3,250,000 for the Budget: the development aid from this source has ceased. Libya will make military facilities available to British troops (including the R.A.F.) which will be stationed in Libya under certain conditions. The United States Government is permitted under the terms of the United States–Libyan Base Rights Agreement of Oct. 30, 1954, to maintain armed forces and installations in Libya. A separate exchange of notes governs the financial assistance which the United States Government will provide for Libya's economic development during the period of this Agreement which runs until Dec. 24, 1970.

Trade with U.K., 1958.—Imports, \mathcal{L} 7,330,399; Exports, \mathcal{L} 1,056,404.

CAPITAL. Tripoli and Benghazi are the joint capitals of Libya. A new Federal capital is under construction at Beida in Cyrenaica.

The principal towns with the latest available estimates of populations are Tripoli (209,728); Misurata (56,902); Benghazi (69,718); Homs-Cussabat (62,272); Derna (15,891); Barce (9,992); Tobruk (4,995); Sebha (7,298).

FLAG. The Libyan National flag is a tricolour of red, black and green horizontal stripes, bearing a white crescent and star in the centre.

EMBASSY IN LONDON

27 Wilton Crescent, S.W.1.

Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary and Consul-General, Monsieur André J. Clasen (1955).

A Grand Duchy in Western Europe, bounded by Germany, Belgium, and France. Established as an independent State under the sovereignty of the King of the Netherlands as Grand Duke by the Congress of Vienna in 1815, it formed part of the Germanic Confederation, 1815–66, and was included in the German "Zollverein." In 1867 the Treaty of London declared it a neutral territory. On the death of the King of the Netherlands in 1890 it passed to the Duke of Nassau. The territory was invaded and overrun by the Germans at the beginning of the war in 1914, but was liberated in 1918. By the Treaty of Versailles, 1919, Germany renounced her former agreements with Luxembourg in respect of the customs union, etc., and in 1921 an economic union was made with Belgium (Belgolux). The Grand Duchy was again invaded and occupied by Germany on May 10, 1940. The constitution of the Grand Duchy was modified on April 28, 1948, and the stipulation of permanent neutrality was then abandoned. Luxembourg is now a fully effective member of the Western association of powers and a signatory of the Brussels and North Atlantic Treaties. She is also a member of the European Coal and Steel Community, the High Authority and Court of which have their seat in Luxembourg; of the European Economic Community and of "Euratom". Besides Belgolux, Luxembourg is also a member of the Belgium-Netherlands-Luxembourg Customs Union (Benelux).

The area is 1,000 square miles; the population (estimated, 1956) 313,600, nearly all Roman Catholics. There is a Chamber of 52 Deputies, elected by universal adult suffrage for 5 years. Legislation is submitted to the Council of State. The Grand Duchy is rich in iron-ore and possesses an important iron and steel industry with an annual productive capacity of over 3,000,000 tons. The revenue for 1959 was estimated at Francs 4,857,890,000, expenditure Francs 5,057,202,000. The Luxembourg franc has at present the same value as the Belgian franc and the latter is legal tender in the Grand Duchy. Exchange Rate, 120 Francs = £1. There are approximately 260 miles of railway. Exports to the United Kingdom in 1958 totalled £352,562; imports from United Kingdom, £476,010. The capital, Luxembourg, pop. (1957), 67,500, is a dismantled fortress. The country is well wooded, with many deer and wild boar. The language is Letzeburgesch but French is the official language: all speak German and many English.

MEXICAN EMBASSY IN LONDON

48 Belgrave Square, S. W. 1

Ambassador, Dr. Pablo Campos Ortiz.

Minister-Counsellor and Acting Consul-General,

Señor Don Gustavo Luders de Negri.

1st Secretary, Señor Don Salvador Alva Cejudo.

Area and Population.—Mexico occupies the southern part of the continent of North America, with an extensive seaboard to both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, extending from 14° 33' to 32° 43' N. lat. and 86° 46' to 117° 08' W. long., and comprising one of the most varied zones in the world. It contains 29 states, 2 territories, and the federal district of Mexico, making in all 32 political divisions, covering an area of 758,000 square miles, with a population (1959 estimate) of 33,304,253.

The two great ranges of North America, the Sierra Nevada and Rocky Mountains, are prolonged from the north to a convergence towards the narrowing Isthmus of Tehuantepec, their course being parallel with the west and east coasts. The surface of the interior consists of an elevated plateau between the two ranges, with steep slopes both to the Pacific and Atlantic (Gulf of Mexico). In the west is the Peninsula of Lower California, with a mountainous surface, separated from the mainland by the Gulf of Lower California. The Sierra Nevada, known in Mexico as the Sierra Madre, terminates in a transverse series of volcanic peaks, from Colima on the west to Citlaltépetl ("El Pico de Orizaba") on the east. In February, 1943, a new volcano (El Parícutin) was in eruption about 250 miles from Mexico City and 20 miles from the town of Uruapan, but is no longer active. The low-lying lands of the coasts form the Tierra Caliente, or tropical regions (below 3,000 feet), the higher levels form the Tierra Templada, or temperate region (from 3,000 to 6,000 feet), and the summit of the plateau with its peaks is known as Tierra Fria, or cold region (above 6,000 feet). The only considerable rivers are the Rio Grande del Norte, which forms part of the northern boundary, and is navigable for about 70 miles from its mouth in the Gulf of Mexico, and the Rio Grande de Santiago, the Rio Balsas and Rio Papaloapan. The remaining streams are governed by the formation of the land, and run in mountain torrents between deep-cut cañons or "barrancas." The largest fresh-water lakes are Chapala (70 miles long and 20 miles wide), and Pátzcuaro. In the north-west are saline lakes amid bare and dry regions. The climate varies according to the altitude, the rainy season lasting from June to October.

Government.—The Toltec invaders of Mexico gave place in the 13th century to the Aztecs, who were conquered in the 16th century by Spanish adventurers under Hernan Cortes, whose remains have been definitely located in the Temple of Jesus, Mexico City. They are contained in a marble vault, with the funeral garments.

Spanish rule was established at Tenochtitlan, a 14th century Aztec city (now Mexico City), and Mexico remained a Spanish dominion until its freedom was asserted by a revolutionary war, 1810-1821. In 1810 a Republic was proclaimed, but Iturbide declared himself Emperor in 1821. He was shot in 1824, and a Republic was again established. From 1837-1848 the province of Texas gave rise to hostilities with the United States, terminating in a three years' war and a cession of the disputed territory to the victorious northern States.

In 1862 the French troops came to Mexico, and in 1864 an Empire under Ferdinand Maximilian of Austria was declared. In 1867 the downfall of the Empire and the execution of the Emperor gave rise to the new Republic, which has endured to the present day. Presidents are elected for six years only. There is no re-election.

Under the Constitution of Feb. 5, 1917 (subsequently amended in detail) Congress consists of 1 Senate of 60 members, elected for 6 years, and of a Chamber of Deputies at present numbering 162, elected for 3 years.

Archaeological Remains.—Mexico is rich in archaeological remains, and work is proceeding in every district to remove the earth covering which for many centuries has kept them from view. Near the City of Mexico at Teotihuacán are a number of pyramids forming part of the great ceremonial centre of a pre-Aztec culture believed to date from c. 100–500 A.D. The Pyramid of the Sun is 761 feet from N. to S., and 725 feet from E. to W., and rises to a height of 216 feet. The Pyramid of the Moon is 426 feet by 511 feet, and rises to 180 feet. Other places of interest are Monte Alban and Mitla near Oaxaca, Palenque and Bonampak (Chiapas), Chichén-Itzá and Uxmal (Yucatan), El Tajín (Veracruz) and Tula (Hidalgo).

Communications.—Veracruz, Tampico, Progreso, and Coatzacoalcas (Puerto Mexico) are the chief ports on the Atlantic, and Mazatlán, Guaymas, Acapulco, Manzanillo and Salina Cruz on the Pacific. Registered merchant marine amounted at the end of 1956 to 252,718 gross tons, with 802 ships. There were 23,765 kilometres of railway track open in Mexico in 1956. Work is proceeding on the reorganization, rehabilitation and re-equipment of the systems, and on extensions in the East and South-East of the Republic. Various loans from the United States and from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development have recently enabled the railways to buy certain quantities of rails, diesel locomotives, shop equipment and spare parts. The South-Eastern Railway, providing the first land communication between the peninsula of Yucatan and the rest of Mexico, was opened in 1950. Early in 1952 the Government bought the U.S.-owned Southern Pacific Railway of Mexico, which is being extensively rehabilitated.

The total length of road under federal maintenance at the end of 1957 was 29,711 kms. The Pan-American Highway, providing through communication from the U.S. border at Ciudad Juárez to the Guatemalan border, was opened in May, 1950. Other main routes completed during the term of office of the last Government were Ciudad Juárez–Mexico via Saltillo and Queretaro, Guadalajara–Nogales, Guadalajara–Manzanillo, Veracruz–Puerto Mexico, Salina Cruz–Puerto Mexico and Tampico–Tuxpan. Roads which it is planned to complete during the term of the present Government are Mexico–El Ocotal (to be continued to Guatemala City), Chetumal–Escarcega–Campeche–Merida–Puerto Juárez, and Durango–Mazatlán.

The National telegraph system's lines were 188,614 kms. in length in 1956. International telegraph services to the U.S. border are provided by the nationalized Mexican Telegraph Company, and thence through the U.S. to Canada and Europe. Telephone communications with Canada and Europe are similarly effected through the United States. There is an extensive internal network of air services, its routes measuring 195,256 kms. Registered civil aircraft in 1957 numbered 1,590, of which 735 were commercial and 855 private.

The principal international air services are Mexico–New York direct; Mexico–Vancouver, Mexico–Windsor (Ontario) and Mexico–Lima direct; Mexico–Montreal via Tampa (Florida); Mexico–Los Angeles; Mexico–Chicago via Monterrey, San Antonio and Dallas; Mexico–Havana via Merida and Mexico–Miami; Mexico–Guatemala City and other Central American capitals; and Mexico–Miami–Paris.

Production.—The total acreage of arable land is estimated at 60,000,000 acres, though only some 25,000,000 acres are considered arable without artificial irrigation. Approximately 13,000,000 acres are under cultivation. Grazing land is estimated at 80,000,000 acres and about 50,000,000 acres are under forest. The principal agricultural crops are maize, beans, wheat, chile-pepper, sugar cane, coffee, cotton, tobacco, tomatoes, chick peas, rice, groundnuts, sesame, alfalfa, vanilla, cocoa and many kinds of fruit, both tropical and temperate. The maguey, or Mexican aloe, yields a favourite beverage, "pulque"; other species of the same plant supply pita-flax and sisal-hemp (henequen). About half the world's supply of henequen comes from the province of Yucatan. The forests abound in mahogany, rosewood, ebony, and caoutchouc trees.

The livestock numbered 30,850,000 head of cattle in 1958, and 5,623,204 sheep and 10,110,452 goats, 4,805,581 horses, 2,381,421 mules, 2,170,399 donkeys, 8,789,371 swine and 106,306,860 poultry in 1957.

The principal industries (apart from agriculture) are mining and petroleum, but during recent years there has been very considerable expansion of both light and heavy industries, 80 per cent. of all consumer goods now being made in Mexico. Most of the remaining 20 per cent. is in fact made up of bulk imports of foodstuffs and motor vehicles for assembly, so that the true figure for local manufacture of consumer goods is nearer to 92 per cent. The steel industry has expanded rapidly and produced 495,572 tons of pig iron and 1,125,000 tons of steel in 1958. The mineral wealth is great, but in recent years the low world market prices have created a slump in the mining industry. The principal minerals are gold, silver, copper, lead, zinc, quick-silver, iron and sulphur.

PRINCIPAL MINERALS, 1958

	(Metric tons)		(Metric tons)
Gold.....	10.33	Zinc.....	224,105
Silver.....	1,481	Sulphur...	1,271,466
Copper....	64,964	Manganese.	78,651
Lead.....	201,924	Coal.....	1,471,373

Very large reserves of petroleum exist; in 1958 crude petroleum production amounted to 93,900,000 U.S. barrels, compared with 92,207,000 U.S. barrels in 1957. Total petroleum reserves are said to be around 4,000 million U.S. barrels.

In 1959 Petroleos Mexicanos received foreign credits from various countries, including the United Kingdom, totalling almost 150 million U.S. dollars.

Woollen and cotton spinning and weaving, the making of footwear and clothing and of domestic appliances of all kinds as well as most other consumer goods have made such progress in recent years that all these industries are protected by high import duties and import licence restrictions.

An indication of the rapid industrial expansion of Mexico is that output of electricity increased from 4,423 million kwh in 1950 to 9,078 million kwh in 1958. In the same period cement production increased from 1,388,000 tons to 2,560,000 tons.

Defence.—The Army has a strength of one Infantry brigade, the Presidential Guard and 52 regular infantry battalions, 21 regiments of cavalry and a small number of artillery and engineers. The Navy has some 36 ships of all kinds, and the Air Force some 160 aircraft.

Language and Literature.—Spanish is the official language of Mexico and is spoken by about 90 per cent. of the population. About 2,500,000 inhabitants speak Indian languages, but half of these speak Spanish as well. Of those speaking indigenous languages only about 30 per cent. speak Nahuatl, 9 per cent. Maya, 8 per cent. Zapotec, 7 per cent. Otomi and 10 per cent. Mixtec, the remainder speaking other varieties of the minor linguistic families. The National Library at the capital contains about 500,000 volumes. The Press of Mexico is in a flourishing condition with many daily newspapers in the capital and in other urban centres. The first printing press and the first regularly issued newspaper in the New World were established by the Spaniards in Mexico City.

Education.—Education is divided into primary, secondary and university. Primary education is free, secular and nominally compulsory. In 1957 there were 28,417 primary schools with 3,814,940 pupils, 889 secondary schools with 276,838 pupils, and 864 technical and commercial secondary schools with 174,126 pupils. The National University of Mexico was founded in 1533 and re-organized in 1920. There are 9 other Universities, including one exclusively for women. The prevailing religion is Roman Catholic. In 1957, only 28 per cent. of the population above 6 years old were illiterate; while progress in reducing illiteracy has been steady over the last few years, it has barely kept pace with the rapidly increasing population.

Monaco—Consul-General, L. Pott, C.B.E.

MONGOLIA

(Mongolian People's Republic)

Prime Minister, Tse Den-bal (May, 1952).

Area and Population.—Mongolia is an almost entirely unsurveyed tract in Asia, bounded by the Siberian provinces of U.S.S.R. in the north, the Chinese province of Sinkiang and the Great Wall of China in the south, by Manchuria in the east and by the Tarbagatai Mountains and the Turkestan provinces of U.S.S.R. on the west.

The total area is estimated at 1,750,000 to 2,000,000 square miles with a total population (not yet enumerated) of 3,000,000 to 5,000,000, of whom the greater number are traditionally adherents of Lamaism, a form of Buddhism.

North-West Mongolia consists of an elevated plateau bounded by the Russian Altai range (N.W.), the Sayans (N.E.), the Kental (S.E.), and the Ektagh Altai (S.W.). The plateau contains many lakes and is watered by numerous rivers, among which are the headwaters of the Yenisei, the Irtysh and the Selenga. Agriculture is almost unknown, but excellent pasture provides grazing grounds for numerous cattle and sheep, and particularly for transport animals (camels and oxen). The exports are wool, hides, skins, and gold.

The principal town of North-Western Mongolia is Ulan Bator (Ulan-Bator-Khoto, "Town of the Red Knight") which has an estimated population of 80,000 to 100,000; other centres are Uliassutai, and Kobdo, of importance as trading posts on the main caravan routes. Part of North-Western Mongolia has been incorporated in the Soviet Union as the Tannu Tuva autonomous Province which lies between the Sayan and Tannu Ola ranges, the capital being Kyzyl.

South-East and South Mongolia include the Gobi ("Desert"), or Sha-mo ("Sand Desert"), which covers nearly one-third of the total area, and in the extreme south-east the Ordos Desert, bounded on the south by the Great Wall of China, and encircled on the north by part of the main stream of the Hwangho river. Agriculture is carried on wherever Chinese influence has been exerted, but is mainly confined to the south-eastern borders. The principal industry (as in North-West Mongolia) is sheep and cattle raising and the breeding of camels, oxen and horses for transport, in order to supply the caravan routes from China to Siberia. The centres of population depend mainly upon the overland commerce of China and Eastern Russia across the Gobi. Of recent years this trade has been organized and financed by Soviet Russia. The principal centres are: Kalgan, Kuku-khoto, Kuku-erghi, Dolon-Nor and Birukhoto. In the north-east, Keru-lun (on the river of that name), is a junction of the southern routes from the Chinese province of Perchili and the western routes from Urga, in N.W. Mongolia.

Government.—In 1915 Mongolia threw off its allegiance to China, and by the Treaty of Kiakhta was recognized as an Autonomous Republic. Negotiations with Russia, after the 1917 revolution, led to an alliance, and by Treaty (May 31, 1924) the U.S.S.R. acknowledged the suzerainty of China over Outer Mongolia, but by the Russo-Chinese Treaty of Aug. 25, 1945, China recognized the complete independence of Outer Mongolia.

Area and Population.—Morocco is situated in the north-western corner of the African continent between latitude 27° 40'–36° N. and longitude 2°–11° W. with an area estimated at approximately 180,000 sq. miles, and a population (estimated, 1958) of approximately 10,000,000. It is traversed in the north by the Rif mountains and in a general S.W. to N.E. direction by the Middle Atlas, the High Atlas, the Anti-Atlas and the Sarroho ranges. The northern flanks of the Middle and High Atlas Mountains are well wooded but their southern slopes, exposed to the dry desert winds, are generally arid and desolate, as are the whole of the Anti-Atlas and Sarroho ranges. The north-westerly point of Morocco is the peninsula of Ceuta which is separated from the continent of Europe by the narrow strait of Gibraltar. The Jebel Mousa dominates the promontory and, with the rocky eminence of Gibraltar, was known to the ancients as the Pillars of Hercules, the western gateway of the Mediterranean.

Climate.—The climate of Morocco is generally good and healthy, especially on the Atlantic coast, the country being partially sheltered by the Atlas mountains from the hot winds of the Sahara. The rainy season may last from November to April. The plains of the interior are intensely hot in summer. Average summer and winter temperatures for Rabat are 81° F. and 45° F.; for Marrakesh 101° F. and 40° F. respectively.

Administration.—The Treaty of Fez of 1912 provided for the establishment of a French Protectorate over Morocco, and France became responsible for the foreign relations of the Sultan and for the defence and administration of the country. The subsequent Franco-Spanish Treaty of 1912 provided for the establishment of a Spanish "sphere of influence" extending over northern Morocco with the exception of the Zone of Tangier. Ceuta and Melilla (see under Spain) are Spanish "State Territories." Ceuta, situated opposite Gibraltar, has been a Spanish possession since the close of the sixteenth century and Melilla, further east on a rocky promontory of the Rif coast, has been a Spanish possession since 1492. The Penon (Rock) of Alhuma, Penon de Velez and the Zaffarin Islands are Spanish possessions. The pacification of the French Zone of Morocco was completed in 1934.

Tangier, though in Moroccan territory, has always enjoyed a special régime. Before the war of 1924–1928, negotiations between the British, French and Spanish Governments took place but the outbreak of the war prevented the proposed international régime for Tangier from being put into operation. A new Convention providing by the Tangier Statute for the international administration of the Tangier Zone was, however, signed by the three Governments at Paris on December 18, 1923. It was brought into force on June 1, 1925, and modified by a Protocol of July 25, 1928, by which Italy adhered to it. Under the Convention only native affairs were reserved to the Sherrefian authority. In March 1941 Spain suppressed the international administration, deposed the Sultan's representative in Tangier and substituted for him the Sultan's Khalifa in the Spanish Zone. In 1956 negotiations between the Moroccan Government and the Statutory Powers culminated in the Tangier Conference which sat in Tangier in October. The international régime was abrogated and a Protocol adopted. This was followed by the grant of a Royal Charter on August 26, 1957, ensuring the continuation of a free monetary system and free trade in Tangier.

On August 20, 1953, Sidi Mohammed ben Youssef, Sultan of Morocco for 25 years, was de-throned, and exiled together with his family. Sidi ben Moulay Arafa was proclaimed Sultan in his stead but although a series of reforms was instituted as a progressive handing over of government to the Moroccans, the Nationalist movement increased rapidly and civil disturbances became serious. The insistent Moroccan desire for the return of their former Sultan led to the withdrawal in September, 1955 of Sultan Moulay Arafa. Mohammed ben Youssef was reinstated as Sultan and he returned to Morocco on November 16, 1955. The formation of a Moroccan Government quickly followed; negotiations with France which opened in February 1956 culminated in a joint Franco-Moroccan declaration of March 2, 1956, which recognized Morocco's independence and sovereignty. Negotiations with the same end in view were then engaged with Spain, resulting in a similar joint declaration of April 7, 1956.

Defence.—In the protectorate era, the protecting powers were responsible for defence. Arrangements were completed during 1951 with France for the use of air bases in the Southern (former French) Zone by the U.S. Air Force. Bases have been constructed at Nouaceur, Sidi Slimane and Benguerir. The Moroccan army, formed in 1956, is about 30,000 strong.

Production and Trade.—Morocco's main sources of wealth are agricultural and mineral. The construction of dams for irrigation and for electric power is an important factor in the country's development. Its industries are in the main extractive and such as rely on local raw materials. Importance is also attached to the tourist trade.

Among agricultural, forest and animal products in sufficient quantity for export are barley, wheat, citrus fruits, early and canned vegetables, leguminous plants, esparto, vegetable fibre, cork, skins and hides, casings, raw wool, fish (preserved and canned). There were an estimated 27,150,000 head of livestock in 1955, sheep predominating.

Morocco's leading mineral exports are phosphates, manganese, iron ore, lead and zinc. Other minerals produced include coal, petroleum, cobalt, graphite, copper, molybdenum, tin, antimony, ochre and gypsum. Production of phosphates reached 6,336,000 tons in 1958 and almost as much was exported. There is an oil refinery at Petitjean; 75,100 tons of crude petroleum were extracted in 1957, sufficient to cover one-seventh of the country's needs.

Morocco's main import requirements are petroleum products, motor vehicles and tyres, building materials, fabrics, agricultural and other machinery, chemical products, clothing, householdware, sugar, green tea and other foodstuffs.

The trade of Morocco, which is chiefly with France and the franc area, the U.S.A., Germany, Cuba, China, the United Kingdom, Spain, Italy, Netherlands and Belgium, was valued in 1958 at: Imports, M.francs 167 milliard; Exports, M.francs 145 milliard. Trade with U.K., 1958: Imports from U.K., £5,577,561; Exports, £10,440,487. These figures exclude trade of Tangier Province.

Imports from U.K.	£775,692	£888,612
Exports to U.K.	43,463	90,327

There are British Chambers of Commerce at Casablanca (101 Boulevard 4ème Zouave) and at Tangier (Boite Postale 2142, Zocco).

Finance and Currency.—The unit of currency is the Moroccan franc, Morocco being a member of the franc monetary area.

The 1958 Budget amounted to 139.2 milliard francs for the Ordinary Budget and 36.4 milliards for the Development Budget. Of the latter nearly one half was to be financed from abroad.

Communications: Railways.—The railway runs south from Tangier to Petitjean. From this junction, one line runs eastwards through Fez and Oujda to Algeria, and another continues southwards, through Rabat and Casablanca, to Marrakesh. A line running due South from Oujda skirts the Morocco-Algeria frontier and reaches Colomb-Bechar in Algeria, the beginning of the Mediterranean-Niger project. Moroccan railroads cover 1,092 miles and traction is electric or by diesel locomotives.

Roads.—In the Southern Zone the road network is extensive (9,000 miles of road suitable for year-round traffic and some 20,000 miles of dry-season tracks). In the Northern Zone an asphalt road links Tangier with Tetuan, branches north to Ceuta, and continues eastward through Villa San Jurjo to Mellila, and on to Oujda through Berkane.

Tangier is distant from London about 1,200 miles or 1 day by air, 4 days by sea. There are air services between Tangier and Gibraltar connecting with B.E.A. services to London. Air-France and Royal-Air-Maroc operate internal services and many between Morocco and towns in France and Spain. There are also regular services to other European countries and to Algeria, West Africa, Equatorial Africa and the Belgian Congo.

Language.—Arabic is the official language. Berber is the vernacular mainly in the mountain regions. French and Spanish are also spoken, mainly in the towns, the European population in Morocco being about 500,000 with a tendency to decrease. Three Arabic, five French and one Spanish newspapers are published daily.

Education.—There are government primary, secondary and technical schools. At Fez there is a theological university of great repute in the Moslem world. Schools for special denominations, Jewish and Catholic, are permitted and may receive government grants.

CAPITAL. Rabat (population 155,000). The other chief towns are: Casablanca (685,000); Marrakesh (216,262); Tangier (123,244); Fez (280,000); Meknes (140,380); Tetuan (82,500); Oujda (80,590); Safi (56,750); Port-Lyautey (55,900). The towns of Fez, Marrakesh and Meknes were capitals at various times in Morocco's past history.

Nepal (area about 54,000 sq. miles; pop. (1955), 8,337,537) lies between India and Tibet on the S. slopes of the Himalayas, and includes Mt. Everest (29,002 ft.). Amid the mountains lie many fertile valleys. The lower hills are covered with jungle, in which wild animals abound. Rice, wheat, maize, etc., are grown. The chief trade route is that between Katmandu and the Bihar frontier, to link which an 80-mile road has been constructed by India. Nepal exports rice and other grains, hides, oilseeds, ghi, cattle, jute, large quantities of timber, &c., and imports cotton goods and yarn, sugar, salt, spices, petrol, metals, &c. The revenue realized chiefly from land rent, forests, customs, &c., is approximately £2,750,000. A State Bank was inaugurated on April 26, 1956, to issue bank notes, regulate the Nepalese currency, fix foreign exchange rates and help in the preparation of a national budget. The inhabitants are of mixed stock with Mongolian characteristics prevailing in the north and Indian in the south, and their religions are Buddhism and Hinduism. They were originally divided into numerous hill clans and petty principalities, one of which, Gorkha or Gurkha, became predominant in about 1769. During the 1914-18 and the 1939-45 wars, the Nepalese Government rendered unstinted and unconditional assistance to the British Government in men, money and material.

From the middle of the nineteenth century, Nepal was ruled by the Rana family which provided the hereditary prime ministers of the country. After the Second World War, a revolutionary movement in 1950 and 1951 achieved the aim of restoring to the monarchy the powers which it had lost 104 years before and of breaking the hereditary power of the Ranas. After eight years, during which various parties and individuals tried their hand at government, the first general elections to be held in Nepal took place in February, 1959, resulting in an overwhelming victory for the Nepal Congress. Under the Constitution granted by King Mahendra on February 12, 1959, a Government was formed by Mr. Koirala in May.

Area and Population.—The Kingdom of the Netherlands is a maritime country of Western Europe, situated on the North Sea, in lat. 50° 46'–53° 34' N. and long. 3° 22'–7° 14' E., consisting of 12 provinces plus the North-East Polder (reclaimed part of the Zuider Zee) and containing a total area of 34,830 sq. kms. The population on Jan. 1, 1959, was 11,257,000. The live birth-rate in 1958 was 21.2 per 1,000 of the population, and the death-rate 7.5.

The land is generally flat and low, intersected by numerous canals and connecting rivers—in fact, a network of water courses. The principal rivers are the Rhine, Maas, and Yssel, with the mouths of the Schelde. The chief agricultural products are potatoes, sugar beet, cattle, horses, swine, butter, wheat, rye, barley, oats, beans, peas, flax-seed, cheese, poultry, eggs, vegetables, fruit and flower bulbs and there is an important fishing industry. Among the principal industries are engineering, motors, shipbuilding, iron and steel, incandescent lamps, radio, electrical and telecommunications equipment, cotton, woollen, linen and rayon spinning and weaving, earthenware, glass, leather goods, boots and shoes, chemical and pharmaceutical products, oils, paper and board, cigars, sugar, "genever" liqueurs, beer, clothing, bicycles, tyres and rubber products. Coal production (1958) was 11,880,000 metric tons. Diamond-cutting, though still an important industry, has declined considerably in importance, now employing about 1,100 hands, compared with about 3,500 before the war.

Government.—In 1815 the Netherlands became a constitutional Kingdom under King William I., a Prince of Orange-Nassau, a descendant of the house which has taken a leading part in the destiny of the nation since the 16th century. The States-General comprise the Eerste Kamer (First Chamber) of 75 members, elected for 6 years by the Provincial Diets; and the Tweede Kamer (Second Chamber) of 150 members, elected for 4 years by men and women voters of 23 years and upwards. Members of the Tweede Kamer are paid.

General elections were held on March 12, 1959, for the Second Chamber of the States-General. Party representation (after the increase in the Chamber's membership of Nov. 6, 1956) now stands at Catholic People's Party 49; Labour Party, 48; Liberal, 19; Anti-Revolutionary, 14; Christian Historical Union, 12; Communists, 3; Pacifist Socialists, 2; Political Reformed, 3. The present Cabinet was formed on May 19, 1959, after an interregnum of four months.

The Upper House of the States General was elected by the Provincial Councils after the General Elections. Representation (after the increase in the Chamber's membership of Nov. 6, 1956) is: Catholic People's Party, 25; Labour Party, 22; Anti-Revolutionary Party, 8; Christian Historical Union, 8; Party of Freedom and Democracy, 7; Communist, 4; Political Reformed Party, 1.

Defence.—The post-war army is being formed as a component of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The Royal Netherlands Navy is being built up to a modern force of one aircraft carrier, 2 heavy cruisers, 12 modern destroyers and 6 submarines, supported by an escort force of 24 frigates and a considerable number of ancillary vessels. The Air Force, which since 1953 has been independent of the Army with the title "Royal Netherlands Air Force," has been reconstituted since the war, and now forms an integral part of the air defences of the N.A.T.O. countries. After a period of reorganization and expansion it has now attained a considerable strength consisting mainly of jet-fighters which are divided between an air defence and a tactical air command. Part of the latter is integrated into a N.A.T.O. tactical air force.

Language and Literature.—Dutch is a West-Germanic language of Saxon origin, closely akin to Old English and Low German. It is spoken in the Netherlands and the northern part of Belgium. It is also used by many people in the Netherlands West Indies. Afrikaans, one of the two South African languages, has Dutch as its origin, but differs from it in grammar and pronunciation. There are eleven national papers, four of which are morning papers, and there are several regional daily papers.

Education.—Illiteracy is practically non-existent. Primary and secondary education is given in both denominational and State schools, the denominational schools being eligible for State assistance on equal terms with the State schools. Attendance at primary school is compulsory. Secondary schools for working classes are numerous, well equipped and well attended. The principal Universities are at Amsterdam, Groningen, Leiden, Nijmegen (R.C.), and Utrecht, and there are technical universities at Delft (polytechnic), Rotterdam (economics), Wageningen (agriculture), Tilburg (R.C.) (commercial) and Eindhoven (polytechnic) (opened in Sept. 1957).

Communications.—The total extent of navigable rivers is 4,232 miles (large rivers comprising 666 miles) and of main roads 1,881 miles. On Dec. 31, 1958, the total length of the railway system amounted to 1,936 miles, of which 975 miles were electrified. The mercantile marine on Jan. 1, 1959, consisted of 1,578 ships of total 4,545,000 gross registered tons, including vessels registered in the Netherlands Antilles and Surinam, but excluding tugs and contractors' equipment.

TRADE

In 1958 Dutch imports amounted to fls. 13,774,000,000 and exports to fls. 12,227,000,000, so that imports were covered by exports to the extent of 88.7 per cent. The Netherlands have removed quantitative restrictions on the great majority of imports in accordance with the agreement between O.E.E.C. countries. A Common Benelux liberalization list came into force in June, 1955. The extent of liberalization on January 1, 1959, was 95.6 per cent. Imports from U.S.A. had been liberalized to the extent of 86 per cent by October 1, 1957. Quota lists for United Kingdom-Netherlands trade each way in non-liberalized items are established each year by negotiation. During 1958 further progress was made towards the establishment of a common trade policy in the three countries (the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg), which already form part of the Benelux customs union.

The rate of overall industrial production remained at 126 in 1958, and that of production per worker rose from 115 to 118 (1953=100).

OVERSEAS TERRITORIES

I. Netherlands New Guinea:—

The territory of Netherlands New Guinea (estimated population 1956, 730,000), comprises the western half of the island of New Guinea. Mount Wilhelm is the highest point in Oceania.

It was decided at the Round Table Conference between Holland and Indonesia that the future status of New Guinea would be decided by negotiation between the two parties within a year of the transfer of sovereignty to Indonesia on December 27, 1949. A joint Dutch-Indonesian Commission was formed to investigate the facts of the case, and reported back to the two Governments in 1950. As a result of the failure of the two sides of the Commission to agree, the position of New Guinea remains unchanged under Dutch sovereignty. Governor of Netherlands New Guinea, Dr. J. Platteel.

II. Netherlands West Indies:—

"Nederlandsch West-Indië" comprise Surinam (Dutch Guiana) in South America, and certain islands in the West Indies known as the Netherlands Antilles (Curaçao, Bonaire, Aruba, part of St. Martin, St. Eustatius, and Saba). The area of Surinam is about 54,000 sq. miles, with a population in 1952 of about 237,930; area of Netherlands Antilles, 394.1 sq. miles, with a population of 290,340 at January 1, 1958. Under the Realm Statute which took effect on December 29, 1954, Surinam and the Netherlands Antilles received autonomy in domestic affairs, as parts of the Netherlands Realm under the Crown. Agreement on their new status was reached after prolonged negotiations between the Netherlands Government and representatives of the territories concerned. Bauxite is an important export of Surinam. The United Kingdom has a considerable trade with the Netherlands Antilles, U.K. Imports in 1958 being £23,556,040; Exports to Netherlands Antilles, £15,977,097. Surinam: Imports from U.K., 1958, £994,718; Exports, £8,138. The administrative capital of Surinam is Paramaribo (population, 1952, 86,400); the capital of Curaçao is Ψ Willemstad (pop. 45,000); of Aruba, Ψ Oranjestad; of Bonaire, Ψ Kralendijk; of St. Martin, Philipsburg; of St. Eustatius (St. Eustatius), Oranjestad; and of Saba, Bottom. Governor of Netherlands Antilles, Dr. A. B. Spekenbrink. Governor of Surinam, J. van Tilburg.

NICARAGUA

(República de Nicaragua)

President, Col. Luis Somoza, re-elected Feb. 2, 1957.
Foreign Affairs, Dr. Alejandro Montiel Argüello.

Area and Population.—Nicaragua is the largest State of Central America, with a long seaboard on both the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, situate between 6° 45'–15° N. lat. and 83° 40'–87° 38' W. long., containing an area of 57,145 English square miles and a population (1954 estimate) of 1,224,450, of whom about three-quarters are mixed blood. Another 15 per cent. are white, mostly of pure Spanish descent, and the remaining 10 per cent. are Indians, negroes or mulattoes. The latter group includes the Mosquitos, who live on the Atlantic Coast and were formerly under British protection.

Government.—The eastern coast of Nicaragua was touched by Columbus in 1502, and in 1519 was overrun by Spanish forces under Davila, and formed part of the Spanish Captaincy-General of Guatemala until 1821, when its independence was secured. The present constitution took effect on May 1, 1951. The President is elected by direct suffrage for six years. Congress comprises a Senate of 15 members (together with ex-Presidents of the Republic) and a Chamber of Deputies of 55 members.

Agriculture and Industry.—The country is mainly agricultural. The major crops are coffee, cotton, sesame, sugar, rice and maize. Bananas, beans, cocoa and ipeacacuanha are also important. Livestock and timber production, already considerable, are capable of unlimited expansion. Nicaragua possesses deposits of gold and silver, both of which are mined and exported by United States and Canadian concessionaires.

Communications.—There are 270 miles of railway, all on the Pacific side, 3,159 miles of telegraph and 3,216 miles of telephone, and there are several powerful wireless stations at Managua. An automatic telephone system has been installed in the capital. Transportation, except on the Pacific slope, is still attended with difficulty but many new roads have either been opened or are under construction. The Inter-American Highway runs from the Honduras frontier in the north to the Costa Rican border in the south; the interoceanic highway, running laterally to Rama, whence there is a natural waterway to Bluefields on the Atlantic, is progressing and admits of a through passage in dry weather.

Until the advent of aircraft, the Atlantic littoral was practically isolated from the rest of the Republic and the chief centres of population, but LANICA Airways now have a daily service between Managua and the Atlantic littoral.

Language and Literature.—The official language of the country is Spanish. In 1956 there were 5 daily newspapers published at Managua, and 4 in the provinces. Education is backward, at least 60 per cent. of the population being illiterate. There is a university at León.

Area and Population.—Norway ("The Northern Way"), a kingdom in the northern and western portion of the Scandinavian peninsula, was founded in 872. It is 1,752 km. in length, its greatest width about 430 km. The length of the coastline is 2,650 km., and the frontier between Norway and the neighbouring countries is 2,555 km. (Sweden 1,643 km., Finland 716 km. and U.S.S.R. 196 km.). It is divided into 20 counties (fylker) and comprises an area of 323,917 sq. km. with a population (1958) of 3,541,000. In 1957 there were 63,063 births (18.0 per 1,000 inhabitants), 30,560 deaths (8.7 per 1,000) and 24,472 marriages (7.7 per 1,000); the infant mortality rate in 1957 was 20.5 per 1,000 live births.

The Norwegian coast-line is extensive, deeply indented with numerous fiords, and fringed with an immense number of rocky islands. The surface is mountainous, consisting of elevated and barren tablelands, separated by deep and narrow valleys. At the North Cape the sun does not appear to set from the second week in May to the last week in July, causing the phenomenon known as the Midnight Sun; conversely, there is no apparent sunrise from about Nov. 18 to Jan. 23. During the long winter nights are seen the multiple coloured Northern Lights or Aurora Borealis, which have a maximum intensity in a line crossing North America from Alaska to Labrador and Northern Europe to the Arctic coast and Siberia. A similar phenomenon occurs in the Antarctic and is known as Aurora Australis.

Production.—The cultivated area is about one-fortieth part of the country; forests cover nearly one-fourth; the rest consists of highland pastures or uninhabitable mountains.

The Gulf Stream pours from 140 to 170 million cubic feet of warm water per second into the sea around Norway and causes the temperature to be higher than the average for the latitude. It brings shoals of herring and cod into the fishing grounds and causes a warm current of air over the west coast, making it possible to cultivate potatoes and barley in latitudes which in other countries are perpetually frozen.

The chief industries are agriculture and forestry, mining, manufactures, fisheries, whaling and shipping. The most recent figures showed that 34 per cent. of the population lived on industry, 22 per cent. on agriculture and forestry, 9 per cent. on trading, 9 per cent. on transport and communications and 6 per cent. on fishery and whaling. Manufactures are aided by great resources of water power, estimated at 12,500,000 kw. at 75 per cent. efficiency, of which over 2,700,000 kw. are utilized. In normal years the quantity of fish caught by Norwegian fishing vessels is greater than that of any other European country. In 1957 the total catch amounted to 1,557,000 metric tons. Whale oil production, chiefly from pelagic whaling in the Antarctic, was, in 1956, 1,859,000 barrels.

Government.—From 1397 to 1814 Norway was united with Denmark, and from Nov. 4, 1814, with Sweden, under a personal union which was dissolved on June 7, 1905, when Norway regained complete independence. Under the constitution of May 17, 1814, the Storting (Parliament) itself elects one-quarter of its members to constitute the Lagting (Upper Chamber), the other three-quarters forming the Odelsting (Lower Chamber). Legislative questions alone are dealt with by both parts in separate sittings.

On April 8-9, 1940, Germany invaded Norway, and it was not until June 7, 1945, that the late King Haakon was able to return from Great Britain to Oslo.

Defence.—Norway is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and the Headquarters of Allied Forces, Northern Europe, is situated near Oslo. Extensive reorganization of the Norwegian armed forces is in progress. Compulsory national service lasts 18 months in the navy and air force and 16 months in the Army.

Education is compulsory and free between the ages of 7 and 14, schools being maintained by local taxation with State grants in aid. Secondary schools are provided by the State, by local authorities, and privately. There are many special schools and industrial and technical institutes. The University of Oslo (opened in 1811) was attended by 4,319 students and the University of Bergen (opened in 1948) by 747 students in 1958. The Norwegian Technical High School in Trondheim possesses University status and awards degrees in engineering and architecture. In 1958 it was attended by 1,351 students.

Language and Literature.—Norwegian is a branch of the Scandinavian languages and is the language of the mainland and of Svalbard. Old Norse literature is among the most ancient (and the richest) in Europe. Modern Norwegian became formed in the time of the Reformation and Ludwig Holberg (1684-1754) is regarded as the founder of Norwegian literature, although modern Norwegian literature dates from the establishment of a national university at Christiania (Oslo) in 1811 and with the writings of Wergeland (1805-1845). Some of the famous names are Henrik Ibsen (1828-1906) the dramatist, Bjørnstjerne Bjørnson (1832-1910) journalist, dramatist and novelist and Nobel Prize-winner in 1903, Jonas Lie (1833-1908) novelist, Knut Hamsun (1859-1952) novelist and Nobel Prize-winner in 1920, and Sigrid Undset (1882-1949), champion of Norwegian womanhood and herself a Nobel Prize-winner in 1928. In 1958 there were 87 daily newspapers in the country with a total circulation of 1,298,000, and 90 newspapers publishing on two or three days a week with a total circulation of 335,000.

Communications.—The total length of railways open in 1958 was 4,415 km., of which 63 were private lines. The length of telegraph and telephone lines in 1958 was 83,997 km. (State, 77,809) with 3,390,000 km. of wire (State, 3,184,000). At the end of 1958 a total of 421,032 road motor vehicles were registered, of which 166,162 were passenger cars (including taxis) and 128,579 were motor cycles.

Civil Aviation.—On scheduled airlines operated by Scandinavian Airlines System (SAS) on behalf of Det Norske Luftfartsselskap (DNL), by Braathens South American and Far East Airtransport (SAFE), and by Vestlandske Luftfartsselskap A.S. and Widerøes Flyveselskap and Polarfly A.S. in 1958:—kilometres flown, 20,276,000; passengers carried, 514,285.

Mercantile Marine.—The Mercantile Marine, Jan. 1, 1959, consisted of 2,169 vessels of 9,608,000 gross tons (vessels above 100 gross tons, excluding fishing boats, floating whaling factories, tugs, salvage vessels, icebreakers and similar types of vessel). The fleet ranks fourth among the merchant navies of the world.

SVALBARD

(Spitsbergen and Bear Island)

By Treaty (Feb. 3, 1920) the sovereignty of Norway over the Spitsbergen ("Pointed Mountain") Archipelago was recognized by the Great Powers and other interested nations, and on Aug. 14, 1925, the Archipelago was officially taken over by Norway. In September, 1947, Allied forces (British, Canadian and Norwegian) landed on the main island. After destruction of the accumulated stocks of coal and dismantlement of mining machinery and the wireless installation, the Norwegian inhabitants (about 600) were evacuated to a British port and the Russians (about 1,500) to the U.S.S.R. After the war the Norwegian mining plants were rebuilt. In 1956 the production of coal, the chief mineral of the archipelago, was 390,000 tons.

The Svalbard Archipelago lies between 74°-82°
 N. lat. and between 10°-35° E. long., with an estimated area of 24,295 square miles. The archipelago consists of a main island, known as West Spitsbergen (15,200 sq. miles); North East Land, closely adjoining and separated by Hinlopen Strait; the Wiche Islands, separated from the mainland by Olga Strait; Barents and Edge Islands, separated from the mainland by Stor
 Fjord (or Wybe Jansz Water); Prince Charles
 Forland, to the W.; Hope Island, to the S.E.;
 Bear Island (68 square miles) 127 miles to the S.; with many similar islands in the neighbourhood of the main group. In addition to those engaged in coal-mining, the archipelago is also visited by hunters for seal, foxes and polar bears.

South Cape is 360 miles from the Norwegian Coast. Ice Fjord is 520 miles from Tromsö, 650 miles from Murmansk, and 1,300 miles from Aberdeen. Transit from Tromsö to Green Harbour 2½ to 3 days; from Aberdeen 5 to 6 days.

JAN MAYEN, an island in the Arctic Ocean
 (70° 49'—71° 9' N. lat. and 7° 53' 9' W. long.)
 was joined to Norway by law of Feb. 27, 1930.

Norwegian Antarctic

BOUVET ISLAND (54° 26' S. lat. and 3° 24' E. long.) was declared a dependency of Norway by law of Feb. 27, 1930.

PETER THE FIRST ISLAND (68° 50' S. lat. and 90° 35' W. long.), was declared a dependency of Norway by resolution of Government, May 1, 1931.

PRINCESS RAGNILD LAND (from 70° 30' to 68° 40' S. lat. and 24° 15' to 33° 30' E. long.) has been claimed as Norwegian since Feb. 17, 1931.

On Jan. 14, 1939, the Norwegian Government declared the area between 20° W. and 45° E., adjacent to Australian Antarctica, to be Norwegian territory.

Panama on the isthmus of that name which connects N. and S. America, was formerly one of the nine Departments of Colombia. After a revolt (Nov. 3, 1903) it declared its independence and established a separate Government, with a single chamber legislature elected every four years and now consisting of 53 elected members. The area of the Republic is 31,890 sq. m., the population (1950) was 805,285, including 48,654 tribal Indians. In 1958 it was estimated at 1,000,000. The birth rate in 1957 was 40.4 and the death rate 9.4 per thousand. The soil is extremely fertile, but nearly one-half of the land is uncultivated. The chief crops are bananas, coconuts, cacao, coffee and cereals. The shrimping industry plays an important rôle in the Panamanian economy. A railway 47 miles in length joins the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

Education is compulsory and free from 7 to 15 years. In 1957 there were 1,074 official primary schools and 85 private primary schools; 20 official secondary and 91 private secondary schools.
 Primary students numbered 142,676 in 1957; secondary students, 30,710. 3,500 students were enrolled at Panama University in 1958.

Language and Literature.—The official language is Spanish. There are 9 daily newspapers published in the capital, 2 of which print editions in English. There is also one English weekly newspaper.

THE PAPAL STATE

(Stato della Città del Vaticano)

Sovereign Pontiff (262nd), His Holiness Pope John XXIII (Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli), born at Sotto il Monte (Bergamo), Nov. 25, 1881, elected Pope (in succession to Pius XII) Oct. 28, 1958.

The office of the ecclesiastical head of the Roman Catholic Church (Santa Sede or Holy See) is vested in the Pope of Rome, the Sovereign Pontiff. For many centuries the Sovereign Pontiff exercised temporal power, and in 1859 the Papal States had an area of 17,218 square miles, with a population of 3,224,688. During the reign of Pius IX. (1846–1878), the Papal States of Romagna, Umbria and the Marches were incorporated in the Kingdom of Sardinia and with the remaining States (Rome, Comacchio, Viterbo, Civita Vecchia, Velletri and Frosinone) became part of Unified Italy in 1870. The territory of the Papacy was confined to the palaces of the Vatican and the Lateran and the Villa of Castel-Gandolfo and the temporal power of the Pope was in suspense until the treaty of Feb. 11, 1929, which recognized the full and independent sovereignty of the Holy See in the City of the Vatican. Accompanying the treaty were conventions regulating the condition of religion and of the Catholic Church in Italy and agreeing to pay 750,000,000 lire in cash and the income at 5 per cent. on 1,000,000,000 lire State bonds as a final settlement of the claims of the Holy See against Italy for the loss of temporal power. The population of the Vatican City at the census in March, 1947, was 940.

Area and Population.—Paraguay is an inland sub-tropical State of South America, situate between Argentina, Bolivia and Brazil. The area is computed at 157,000 square miles, with a population (1950 Census) of 1,408,000.

Paraguay proper consists of a series of plains, intersected by abrupt ranges of hills, some of which reach an altitude of 2,000 to 3,000 feet above sea level. The Paraguay and Alto Paraná rivers are navigable at all seasons for vessels of 6 to 7 feet draught. Many of the tributary streams are also navigable for much of the year. The Pilcomayo river is navigable for small craft for 120 miles from Asunción; but is liable to shrink unduly with drought. Paraguay is a country of grassy plains and dense forest, the soil being marshy in many parts and liable to floods; while the hills are covered for the most part with immense forests. The streams flowing into the Alto Paraná descend precipitously into that river. In the angle formed by the Paraná-Paraguay confluence are extensive marshes, one of which, known as "Neembucu," or "endless," is drained by Lake Ypoa, a large lagoon, south-east of the capital. The Chaco, lying between the rivers Paraguay and Pilcomayo and bounded on the north by Bolivia, formed the subject of a long-standing dispute with that country and led to war between Paraguay and Bolivia from 1932 to 1935. The Chaco is practically a dead level, though a slight and uniform rise westward is now known to exist; it suffers much from floods and still more from drought.

Government.—Paraguay was visited in 1527 by Sebastian Cabot, and in 1535 was settled as a Spanish possession. In 1811 Paraguay declared its independence of Spain.

The Senate was abolished under the constitution adopted in 1940 and replaced by a Council of State nominated by the government. The Chamber of Representatives comprises 40 members. In 1954 women were accorded civil rights.

Production.—About three-quarters of the population are engaged in agricultural and pastoral pursuits, cattle breeding being the principal industry. In addition to canned meat, timber, quebracho extract, cotton, hides, yerba maté, tobacco, and petit grain essence (which are the principal exports), mandioca, sugar, maize, rice, citrus fruits and edible oils are also produced for home consumption. Grape fruit is now exported. The production of rice, wheat and ground nuts is being encouraged by the government. The forests contain many varieties of timber, but only cedar and a few of the best known hardwoods find a market abroad.

Communications.—A railway, 985 miles in length, connects Asunción with Buenos Aires

The journey takes 55 hours. Train ferries enable the run to be accomplished without break of bulk. River steamers also connect Buenos Aires and Asunción (3 to 5 days). Direct shipping services operate frequently between Hamburg, Antwerp, Amsterdam and Asunción, and monthly between Liverpool, London and Asunción. A shipping service from New York was started early in 1955. Five airlines operate services from Asunción. Aerolineas Argentinas operates a service with Sunderland flying-boats six times weekly between Asunción and Buenos Aires, stopping at Corrientes. Twice a week this service also calls at the river ports of Rosario and Formosa, and once a week at Posadas. There are also landplane services twice a week. Braniff (American) has a bi-weekly service through Asunción between Buenos Aires and the United States (calling also at Lima and La Paz). Panair do Brasil, a Brazilian company affiliated to Pan American Airways, operates a twice weekly service between Asunción and Rio de Janeiro, and weekly services between Asunción and Buenos Aires and Santiago. Pluma (Uruguayan) carries on a twice-weekly service between Montevideo and Asunción, while Real, another Brazilian airline, operates a service five times a week between Rio de Janeiro and Asunción, calling at São Paulo and Foz do Iguaçu. There are about 100 miles of asphalted roads in Paraguay, and about 200 miles of earth roads in fairly good condition. Bus services connect the principal towns.

Defence.—There is a permanent military force of about 8,000 all ranks. Two gunboats and a number of torpedo boats patrol inland waters.

Language and Literature.—The language of the country is Guarani (the idiom of the most advanced tribe of Indian inhabitants with whom the Spanish explorers formed an alliance) but Spanish is spoken in the larger towns. Three daily newspapers are published in Asunción.

Education.—Primary education is free and compulsory. There are a few secondary and special schools and a national university with close on 1,000 students.

Area and Population.—Persia comprises an area of 628,000 sq. miles, with a population estimated at 18,000,000 in the 1956 census. It is mostly an arid table-land, encircled, except on the east, by mountains, the highest in the north rising to 18,700 ft.

* On Oct. 26, 1949, it was announced that foreigners might henceforth use the name Persia.

The central and eastern portion is a vast salt desert.

The Persians are mostly Shi'ah Moslems but amongst them are a few hundred thousand Zoroastrians, Bahais, Sunni Moslems and Armenian Christians. There is also a substantial Jewish community. Civil and Penal codes based on those of France and Switzerland are in force.

Government.—Persia was ruled from the end of the 18th century by Shahs of the Qajar Dynasty, with despotic power, subject only to the influence of interpreters of the sacred law. A nationalist movement became active in Dec., 1905, and in Aug., 1906, the Shah, Muzaffer-ud-Din, admitting the need for reforms, granted a Constitution. After the war of 1914-18, the subsequent troubles and the signature of the Soviet-Persian Treaty of 1921, a vigorous Prime Minister, Reza Khan, formerly an officer of the Persian Cossack Regiment, re-established general order. On Oct. 31, 1925, the last representative of the Qajar Dynasty, Sultan Ahmed Shah, who had been absent from the country for some time, was deposed by the National Assembly, which handed over the government to the Prime Minister, Reza Khan, who was elected Shah on Dec. 13, 1925, by the Constituent Assembly, and took the title Reza Shah Pahlavi.

Owing to Nazi German penetration before and during the early part of the war of 1939-45, the Shah and his Government tended so far to favour the Axis powers that, after the German invasion of the U.S.S.R. in 1941, counter-measures became necessary; British and Soviet Forces entered the country from south and north on August 25, 1941, and expelled the agents of the Axis. On September 16, 1941, Shah Reza abdicated and left the country, nominating the Crown Prince as his successor. The Prince ascended the throne under the title of Mohammad Reza Shah Pahlavi.

Under the Anglo-Soviet-Persian Treaty of Alliance of January 29, 1942, the independence and territorial integrity of the country were guaranteed by the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. Evacuation by the forces of both powers was to take effect within six months of the signature of the armistice with Germany and her associates. On September 9, 1942, Persia declared war on the Axis powers and on February 28, 1945, on Japan. During the remainder of the war with Germany, Persia became one of the principal routes of aid to the Soviet Union. United States Forces, which had joined British and Soviet troops in Persia to participate in the delivery of aid to Russia, were withdrawn from the country at the end of 1945. British troops evacuated Persia, in accordance with the Anglo-Soviet-Persian agreement, by March 2, 1946, six months after the conclusion of hostilities with Japan. Soviet troops, nevertheless, remained; and when Communist disturbances took place in the north-west part of Persia known as Azerbaijan, they refused to allow Persian forces to enter the area, with the result that an autonomous government was established at Tabriz. Soviet forces, however, eventually left the country in the month of May. This belated evacuation took place in accordance with an agreement which included provision for the formation of a Perso-Soviet Oil Company to operate in the north of Persia, subsequently rejected by the Majlis, and an understanding that the question of Azerbaijan should be peaceably settled. In December, 1946, Persian Government forces entered the province, virtually unopposed by the partisans of the autonomous Government, which itself collapsed upon the flight of the revolutionary leaders into the Soviet Union.

In March, 1949, the Shah issued an Imperial Firman convoking a Constituent Assembly to make certain revisions to the Constitution and the Assembly was duly elected and convened on April 27. After this Assembly the Senate was formed for the first time.

On March 17, 1951, the Majlis adopted a Bill for the nationalization of the Persian oil industry, and on March 20, the Bill was approved by the Senate. On April 28, the Majlis agreed to a resolution, which was passed on April 30 by the Senate, recommending the immediate taking over of all installations, including those of "the late Anglo-Iranian Oil Company." On April 29 the Shah appointed Dr. Mussadiq Prime Minister. The oil company sought arbitration, but this was rejected by the Persian government, and on May 26 the British government applied to the International Court of Justice at The Hague for a declaration that this refusal to submit to arbitration was illegal. The application was not approved.

In August, 1953 after the Shah had appointed Gen. Zahedi as Prime Minister, fighting broke out between his followers and those of Dr. Mussadiq. The Shah temporarily left the country, but Gen. Zahedi's forces were successful, and Dr. Mussadiq was arrested together with a number of the members of his former Cabinet. In December, 1953, diplomatic relations with Great Britain, which Persia had broken off in October, 1952, were re-established, and in August, 1954, the oil dispute was settled by an agreement, ratified on October 29, which provided for compensation to the A.I.O.C. and for the production, refining and sale of Persian oil by a Consortium in which the A.I.O.C. have a 40 per cent. share (Production and Industry, below).

For the purposes of local government the country is divided into 22 Provinces (Ustans) comprising 76 Sub-Provinces (Shahristans), under Governors-General and Governors, respectively.

Defence.—The present strength of the Persian Army, mainly conscript, is approximately 170,000, including 10,000 officers and 40,000 N.C.O.'s. The N.C.O. cadre is up to establishment but officers are still under strength. The army, to which is attached a U.S. Advisory Mission, is well-equipped by 1939 standards. The present strength of the Air Force is approximately 5,000. It is equipped with about 200 American aircraft, of which 60 are jet ground attack types.

The gendarmerie, to which is also attached a United States Mission, has been reorganized. The Persian Navy consists of a small fleet of gunboats, landing craft and motorboats in the Persian Gulf and a few motor-boats in the Caspian Sea.

Education.—Since 1943 primary education has been compulsory and free. There are over 9,000 schools, 1,700,000 pupils, and also a few foreign schools in Tehran; there are Universities in Tehran and Tabriz, and University Colleges at Isfahan, Meshed and Shiraz.

Language and Literature.—Persian, or Farsi, the language of Iran, and of some other areas formerly under Persian rule, is an Indo-European tongue with many Arabic elements added; the alphabet is mainly Arabic, with writing from right to left. Among the great names in Persian literature are those of Abu'l Kásim Mansúr, or Firdausi (A.D. 939-1020), Omar Khayyám, the astronomer-poet (died A.D. 1122), Muslihu'd-Din, known as Sa'di (born A.D. 1284) and Shems-ed-Din Muhammad, or Hafiz (died A.D. 1389). The Persian Press consists of a large number of Tehran and provincial newspapers and periodicals. Two Tehran dailies and three weeklies have circulations exceeding 20,000 copies. Circulations in the provinces are very small. English and French dailies are published in Tehran.

FINANCE

1958-59

Estimated Revenue..... Rials 57,700,000,000
Estimated Expenditure.... 58,980,000,000

The commercial rate of exchange was stabilised in 1955 as follows: Bank Mellat buying rate: Rials 210 = £1. Selling rate Rials 214.2 = £1. The official rate of Exchange is Rials 75.75 = £1.

Production and Industry.—While petroleum is the principal product and by far the greatest export, Persia, except for its desert areas, is essentially an agricultural country and 80 per cent. of the inhabitants depend for their living on the land. Sheep and goats are numerous and good wool is produced. There are extensive forests in the north and west, the conservation of which is an urgent problem. The cultivation of opium is prohibited. A certain amount of progress has been made in the development of industry. Apart from petroleum, the principal industries are carpet weaving, cotton spinning, spinning and weaving (Isfahan, Tehran and Shahr areas), wool spinning and weaving, jute sacks, silk goods (Chalus), sugar, tea, fruit, caviar (Caspian Fisheries Company), meat canning, distilling and brewing, tobacco and cigarettes. The oilfields had produced over 200,000,000 metric tons of oil from their first output to Dec. 31, 1946, and subsequent figures (in metric tons) were 1946, 19,858,471; 1947, 21,737,949; 1948, 24,871,000; 1949, 26,807,000; 1950, 35,000,000; 1951 (to Oct.) 27,000,000. Oil shipments were resumed on Oct. 30, 1954, and recent production figures have been (long tons): 1955, 25,772,000; 1956, 25,934,000; 1957, 37,800,000.

The former functions of A.I.O.C. (now renamed "British Petroleum Company") in Persia were taken over for an initial period of 25 years by a consortium of 8 oil companies (including A.I.O.C., one French, one Dutch and five U.S.), A.I.O.C. receiving from Persia £25,000,000 cash in the 10 years from Jan. 1, 1957, in compensation for its oil assets in Northern Persia and in settlement of losses since 1951; and from the other members of the consortium for their shares, about £214,000,000 payable over 20-25 years. The consortium is responsible for the production, refining and sale of Persian oil through two operating companies, while "non-basic" operations are undertaken by the National Iranian Oil Company.

Communications.—The principal roads are from the frontier of Iraq at Khusruvi to Tehran; from Tehran via Arak to Ahwaz and Khorramshahr; from Tehran via Qum, Isfahan and Shiraz to Bushire; from Tehran into Azerbaijan, through Tabriz to Julfa (on the Soviet frontier) with branch roads into Turkey and Northern Iraq; from Tehran to Meshed; three roads through the Elburz mountains to the Caspian coast and the Soviet borders east and west of the Caspian Sea; and from Isfahan, via Yazd and Kerman to Zahidan and thence to Meshed. Zahidan is connected by road with Quetta (Pakistan). Some of these roads traverse extremely difficult mountainous country; others are desert tracks. Generally speaking, Persian roads are not asphalted but gravel-surfaced. Railways have been constructed since 1927. The Trans-Iranian Railway, from Bandar Shah, on the Caspian Sea, to Bandar Shahpur, on the Persian Gulf, was inaugurated in 1938; this line has a total length of 872 miles, the total cost, after eleven years' work, being approximately £30,000,000. The branch lines from Tehran to Meshed and to Tabriz have now been completed. There are also railroads from Tabriz to Julfa and from Zahidan to Mirjawa and branch lines from Ahwaz to Khorramshahr and from Khorramshahr to Tanuma in Iraq (on the Shatt el Arab, opposite Basra) were opened during the war. An extension from Qum to Khashan is now in operation.

Civil Aviation.—In May, 1946, a Department of Civil Aviation was created, subordinate to the Ministry of Roads. Progress has been made towards establishing first-class International Airports at Tehran and Abadan, with secondary airfields in accordance with ICAO standards. Iranian Airways (non-government owned) formed in May, 1946, runs services to some Middle Eastern countries as well as internal services. Persian Air Services (independently owned) formed in late 1954, runs non-scheduled passenger and freight services to adjoining countries and also to Europe. Air France, K.L.M., S.A.S., Iraqi, M.E.A., P.A.A., Luftansa, B.O.A.C., Alitalia and Aryana Airways operate services to Tehran.

Area and Population.—Peru is a maritime Republic of South America, situated between $0^{\circ} 00' 48''$ and $18^{\circ} 21' 00''$ S. latitude and between $68^{\circ} 39' 27''$ and $82^{\circ} 20' 13''$ W. longitude. The area of the Republic, including 4,440 square kilometres of the Peruvian section of Lake Titicaca and 32 square kilometres of the coastal islands, is about 531,000 square miles. The total population at the beginning of 1959 was estimated at 10,213,000. In 1956 there were 294,375 births, 103,062 deaths and 36,836 marriages.

Physical Features.—The country is traversed throughout its length by the Andes, running parallel to the Pacific coast, the highest points in the Peruvian sector being Huascarán (22,211 feet), Huandoy (20,855 feet), Ausangate 20,235 feet), Arequipa (or Misti) volcano (18,364 feet), Hualcan (20,000 feet), Chachani (19,037 feet), Antijasha (18,020 feet), Pichupichu (17,724 feet), and Mount Meiggs (17,583 feet).

There are three main regions, the Costa, west of the Andes, the Sierra or mountain ranges of the Andes, which include the Punas or mountainous wastes below the region of perpetual snow and the Montana, or Selva, which is the vast area of jungle stretching from the eastern foothills of the Andes to the eastern frontiers of Peru. The coastal area, lying upon and near the Pacific, is not tropical, though close to the Equator, being cooled by the Humboldt Current; its chief products are cotton, sugar, and petroleum. It contains the capital, Lima, and most of the white population. In the mountains, where most of the Indians live, are to be found minerals in great richness and variety, and cattle, sheep, llamas and alpacas are bred there. In the mountain valleys maize, potatoes and wheat are grown. Upon the eastern slopes of the Andes are to be found very large tracts suitable for cultivation and stock raising. The main products of the jungle are timber, barbasco and leche caspi.

Government.—Peru was conquered in the early 16th century by Francisco Pizarro (born 1478, died 1541). He subjugated the Incas (the ruling caste of the Quichua Indians), who had started their rise to power some 500 years earlier, and for nearly three centuries Peru remained under Spanish rule. A revolutionary war of 1821–1824 established its independence, declared on July 28, 1821. The constitution rests upon the fundamental law of Oct. 18, 1856 (amended in 1860, 1919, 1933, 1936 and in 1939), and is that of a democratic Republic. The President is elected for six years by direct vote of the people. Congress is composed of a Senate and of a Chamber of Deputies, both Houses being elected for six years. Voting is compulsory for all Peruvian men and women between the ages of 21 and 60, for married men and women between 18 and 60 and for single men and women between the ages of 18 and 21 who are legally released from parental tutelage.

Production.—Agriculture and mining are the principal industries, employing over 70 per cent. of the inhabitants. The chief crops in order of value are cotton, potatoes and other vegetables, sugar, fruit, maize, rice, wheat barley, grapes and coffee. At the end of 1956 the gainfully employed population numbered 3,360,083, of whom 2,158,867 were absorbed in agricultural and pastoral activities. About 4,202,000 acres were under cultivation at the end of 1956 and steps are being taken to increase this area, which was probably larger in Inca times, by more intensive irrigation. Minerals produced in 1956 were valued at soles 4,539,647,000 and included lead, zinc, copper, iron ore, petroleum, silver, gold, tungsten, bismuth, antimony and vanadium. The islands off the Pacific coast provided guano amounting to 328,014 metric tons in 1956.

Communications.—In recent years the coastal and sierra zones have been opened up by means of roads and air routes and there is air communication, as well as communication by protracted land routes, with the tropical eastern zones, which lie east of the Andes towards the borders of Brazil, and consist mainly of unexplored or little known country inhabited by Indians in a savage state. The completion in 1944 of the trunk road of the Andean Highway from the Pacific port of Callao, via Lima, Oroya, Cerro de Pasco (14,700 ft.), Huanuco, Tingo Maria, to Pucallpa, the river port on the Ucayali, one of the largest tributaries of the Amazon and accessible all the year round to vessels of 3,000 tons, forms a link between the Pacific, the Amazon and the Atlantic. The trunk road runs through the Boqueron del Padre Abad, a pass rediscovered on July 22, 1937, in the backbone of the Blue Cordillera. The Peruvian section of the Pan American highway is complete and is asphalted throughout the major part of its length.

The first railway was opened in 1850 and of the 2,494 miles of railways now operating, Government lines account for 578 miles, the Peruvian Corporation 1,180 miles and private enterprises about 726 miles. There is also steam navigation on the eastern rivers such as the Ucayali (see Andean Highway, above) and Huallaga, and in the south on Lake Titicaca. Air services are maintained throughout Peru, and a number of international services call at Lima.

Defence.—The Army is recruited by voluntary enlistment, supplemented by conscription, and numbers about 30,000 of all ranks; the Navy consists of 3 destroyer escorts and 3 frigates; 4 new submarines completed in U.S.A. in 1954–57; 4 L.S.T.'s; 8 river gunboats; 2 transports; 2 river transports; 3 (8,000 ton) oil tankers and five smaller tankers; 6 motor launches; a fleet supply ship; a submarine salvage vessel and 2 tugs. There is a naval cadet school at La Punta and a submarine base at Callao. There are military aerodromes at Talara, Chiclayo and Las Palmas (near Lima), an air transport squadron at Lima and a seaplane base at Iquitos. The air force is equipped with P.47's, Catalinas, D.C. 3's, Beavers, A.T.6's, F.86's, T.33's, Hunters and Canberras.

Education.—Elementary education is compulsory and free for both sexes between the ages of 6 and 14. In 1957 there were 1,233,937 pupils undergoing primary education and 111,191 attending secondary schools. There were 11,422 state primary schools with 27,108 teachers and 138 state secondary schools with 3,225 teachers, providing 5 year courses from 12 to 17. In addition there were 1,795 private schools providing primary and secondary education with 8,450 teachers and 317 schools conducted by religious orders. The State provides rural agricultural schools for Indians, mining schools and polytechnics in the more populated centres. The University of San Marcos at Lima, founded in 1551, had 10,557 students in 1956, and there are smaller universities at Cuzco, Arequipa and Trujillo, a Catholic university at Lima, and a national engineering university.

Language and Literature.—Spanish is the official language of the country and notably of the original Spanish stock from which the governing and professional classes are mainly recruited, but more than half the nation is composed of Indians, whose principal languages (Quichua and Aymara) are widely spoken. Before the arrival of Pizarro, the Incas had attained a high state of culture, some traces of which survived three centuries of Spanish rule. Modern Peruvian literature includes a national drama in the Spanish tongue and many Peruvian writers have attained international fame. The national library founded at Lima in 1821 was pillaged by Chileans in the Pacific War of 1879-1882, but many of the scattered manuscripts and books have since been recovered. The greater part of the historical section of the library was destroyed by fire in 1943. The first printed news-sheet in South America was issued at Lima in 1594 and in 1955 there were 5 main national daily papers, and 45 provincial ones with a small and purely local circulation. A chair of English was established in 1938 at the Universidad Mayor de San Marcos in Lima.

PHILIPPINE EMBASSY IN LONDON

9a Palace Green, W.8

[Western: 3646]

Ambassador in London, His Excellency Leon Ma. Guerrero (1954).

Area and Population.—The Philippines are situated between 21° 20'–4° 30' N. lat. and 116° 55'–126° 36' E. long., and are distant about 500 miles from the south-east coast of the continent of Asia.

The total land area of the country is 114,834 square miles, of which total 106,914 square miles are contained in the eleven largest islands, the 7,079 other islands having a combined area of 7,920 square miles.

The principal islands are:—

Name	sq. miles	Name	sq. miles
Luzon.....	40,422	Mindoro.....	3,759
Mindanao..	36,538	Leyte.....	2,786
Samar.....	5,050	Cebu.....	2,703
Negros.....	4,906	Bohol.....	2,492
Palawan...	4,550	Masbate.....	2,262
Panay.....	4,446

Other groups in the Republic are the Sulu Islands (Capital, Jolo), Babuyanes and Batanes; the Catanduanes; and Culion Islands.

The population of the Philippines at the 1953 census was 21,039,200.

The inhabitants, known as Filipinos, are basically all of Malay stock, with a considerable admixture of Spanish and Chinese blood in many localities, and over 90 per cent. of them are Christians, predominantly Roman Catholics. Most of the remainder are Mohammedan Moros in the south, and Pagans, mainly in the north. There is a Chinese minority estimated at 350,000, and other much smaller foreign communities, notably Spanish and American.

Government.—The Philippine Islands were discovered in 1521 by the Portuguese navigator Magellan who was slain by the natives of Mactan, a small island near Cebu. In 1565 Spain undertook the conquest of the country which was named "Filipinas," after the son of the King of Spain, and in 1571 the city of Manila was founded by the conquistador Legaspi, who subdued the inhabitants of almost all the islands, their conversion from barbarism and paganism being undertaken by the Augustinian friars in Legaspi's train. In 1762 Manila was occupied by a British force, but in 1764 it was restored to Spain. In the nineteenth century there were frequent disturbances in the islands, and at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War of 1898 a rebellion under Aguinaldo, a native leader, had just died down. After the Spanish fleet had been destroyed in Manila Bay (May 1, 1898), Manila was captured by American troops with the help of Filipinos, on Aug. 13, 1898, and the islands were ceded to the United States by the Treaty of Paris of Dec. 10, 1898. However, the Filipinos, under Aguinaldo, rose up in arms on Feb. 4, 1899, against the U.S. Government, maintaining a desultory rebellion until it was quelled in 1902. Following this, the Philippine Commission was established, consisting of a Governor-General and Commissioner appointed by the President of the United States, who exercised a large measure of executive and legislative authority.

A measure of local independence was granted under the Jones Act of August 29, 1916. On March 24, 1934, the Tydings-McDuffie Law, gave the Philippines a "Commonwealth" Status. The Republic of the Philippines came into existence on July 4, 1946. The Constitution provides for a President elected for a term of four years, and a bi-cameral Congress, consisting of a Senate composed of 24 senators and a House of Representatives of not more than 120 members. No person may serve as President for more than eight consecutive years. The term of office of Senators is six years and of Representatives four years.

Language and Literature.—The official languages are English, Spanish and the National language (of Malay origin) Tagalog. About one-third of the people read or understand English. The literacy rate is nearly 60 per cent. There is a National library in the capital with branches in other urban centres, and a flourishing English press. Education accounts for about a quarter of local expenditure in the national budget. Secondary and higher education is extensive. There are 20 universities recognized by the Government, including the Dominican University of Santo Tomas (founded in 1611), the first in the Far East and 25 years older than Harvard; the State-supported University of the Philippines at Manila (1908) and two women's universities, also at Manila. At Dumaguete there is Silliman University (Presbyterian).

Roads and Railways.—Communications suffered serious damage during the War of 1941-45 owing to the lack of proper maintenance during the Japanese occupation and destruction by bombardment. The highway system of approximately 17,000 miles of roads and streets is undergoing rehabilitation and extension. Before the war the railways, which were largely Government owned, operated approximately 843 miles of track of which some 625 miles were in operation in 1956. Rolling stock losses were also heavy, but have been largely made up, and the Manila railway, on Luzon island, is being converted to diesel traction.

Shipping.—The ports of entry are Manila, Cebu, Iloilo, Zamboanga, Davao, Jolo, Legaspi, Aparri, José Panganiban, San Fernando La Union and Tacloban. There are nearly 2,000 vessels of various types, totalling over 130,000 tons, engaged in coastwise and river traffic.

Civil Aviation.—Air transport plays an important rôle in inter-island travel and in communications overseas. Philippine Air Lines (54 per cent. Government-owned) operate eight weekly services to Hong-Kong; foreign airlines serve the Hong-Kong and other international routes.

Area and Population.—In 1939 the area of the Polish Republic was 150,572 square miles with a population of about 35,000,000, of whom 30 per cent. were national minorities (including over 3,000,000 Jews). Frontier changes took place at the end of the war as foreshadowed at the Tehran Conference in 1943. About 69,000 square miles of territory in the east were ceded to the Soviet Union. In exchange Poland received in the west 39,000 square miles of Eastern Germany. The southern boundary was not affected except for minor adjustments to that part formerly dividing Poland from Ruthenia (Czechoslovakia). The western boundary is formed by the Rivers Oder and Neisse. Poland now has a maritime frontier stretching from west of Kaliningrad (formerly Königsberg) to west of Szczecin (formerly Stettin). As a result of the change of frontier and of very great war-time losses, at the census of December 3, 1950, the population had fallen to 24,977,000 in an area of 122,000 square miles. By the end of 1957 the population was estimated to have grown to 28,500,000. Official reports show a rate of 27.5 per thousand live births and 9.5 per thousand deaths in 1957. The infant mortality rate is 77 per thousand. Roman Catholicism is the religion of the vast majority of the inhabitants.

Government.—The Republic of Poland (reconstituted within the limits of the old Polish Commonwealth) was proclaimed at Warsaw in November, 1918, and its independence guaranteed by the signatories of the Treaty of Versailles. The Polish Commonwealth had ceased to exist in 1795 after three successive partitions in 1772, 1793 and 1795, in which Prussia, Russia and Austria shared. During the Napoleonic wars, the small Grand Duchy of Warsaw was created but was dissolved by the final act of the Congress of Vienna. The so-called "Congress Kingdom" was then established on the Polish territory which had fallen to Russia's share and the Tsar assumed the title of King of Poland. Prussia acquired Poznan and Polish Pomerania, Austria acquired Galicia and the small Republic of Cracow came into existence under the joint control of Prussia, Russia and Austria. In 1831, after an insurrection, the Congress Kingdom was dissolved and annexed by Russia and in 1848 the Austrians absorbed the Cracow Republic, Poland as an independent state ceasing to exist until the end of the War of 1914-18, when she became independent once again, after 150 years of foreign rule.

In March, 1939, Great Britain entered into a treaty with Poland (France had done so in 1921) guaranteeing Polish territory against aggression, and on Hitler's invasion France and Britain implemented their guarantee. On September 17, 1939, Russian forces invaded eastern Poland and on September 21, 1939, Poland was declared by Germany and Russia to have ceased to exist. A line of demarcation was established between the areas occupied by German and Russian forces. At the end of the war a Coalition Government was formed in which the Polish Workers' Party played a large part. In December, 1948, the Polish Workers' Party and the Polish Socialist Party fused in the new Polish United Workers' Party. This is a Communist Party which closely controls every branch of State activity. A new Constitution modelled on the Soviet Constitution of 1936 was adopted on July 22, 1952. It changed the title of the country to the Polish People's Republic (Polska Rzeczpospolita Ludowa). It made no provision for a President of the Republic, whose functions were to be jointly exercised by a Council of State. Private ownership of land and freedom of religion was recognized. Church and State were to be separate.

Despite the guarantee of religious freedom in the Constitution, a campaign of encroachment in 1953 culminated in the arrest of the Primate of the Roman Catholic Church, Cardinal Wyszyński. Dissatisfaction with the régime and conditions of life led to riots in Poznań in June, 1956, and subsequently M. Wladyslaw Gomułka, who had been expelled from the Party in 1949, was reinstated and elected First Secretary of the Party. At the same time Cardinal Wyszyński was allowed to resume his functions. In Jan., 1957, elections to the Sejm were held and in Feb., 1957, a reconstructed Government, still led by M. Cyrankiewicz, took office.

Education.—Elementary education is compulsory and free. In 1949 there were over 3,000,000 pupils in elementary schools, and about 200,000 students in secondary, professional and trade colleges and schools. There are universities at Krakow, Warsaw, Poznań, Łódź, Wrocław, Lublin and Toruń and a considerable number of other seats of higher study.

Language and Literature.—Polish is a western Slavonic tongue (see U.S.S.R.), the Latin alphabet being in use, as in Czechoslovakia. Polish literature developed rapidly after the foundation of the University of Cracow (a printing press was established there in 1474 and there Copernicus died in 1543). A national school of poetry and drama survived the dismemberment and the former era of romanticism was followed by realistic and historical fiction, including the works of Henryk Sienkiewicz (1846–1916), Nobel Prize-winner for literature in 1905, Bolesław Prus (1847–1912), and Stanisław Reymont (1868–1925), Nobel Prize-winner in 1924. There are now 46 daily papers published in Poland, 11 of them in Warsaw.

Production and Industry.—On January 3, 1946, a decree was issued to provide for the nationalization of mines, petroleum resources, water, gas and electricity services, banks, textile factories and large retail stores. At present over 90 per cent. of Polish industry is stated to be "socialized", but 86 per cent. of agricultural land is privately farmed.

Area and Population.—Continental Portugal occupies the western part of the Iberian Peninsula, bounded on north and east by Spain, and on south and west by the Atlantic ocean; it contains an area of 34,500 square miles, with an estimated population (including the Azores and Madeira) of 8,980,682 (1958). It lies between 36° 58'–42° 9' 12" N. lat. and 6° 11' 48'–9° 29' 45" W. long., being 302 miles in length from N. to S., and averaging about 117 in breadth from E. to W. The Azores and Madeira Islands in North Atlantic are politically an integral part of the Republic.

In 1958 there were 212,467 live births, 91,801 deaths and 73,096 marriages in Continental Portugal.

Government.—From the eleventh century until 1910 the government of Portugal was a monarchy, and for many centuries included the Vice-Royalty of Brazil, which declared its independence in 1822. In 1910 an armed rising in Lisbon drove King Manuel II. and the Royal family into exile, and the National Assembly of Aug. 21, 1911, sanctioned a Republican form of government. The President is elected for seven years by indirect vote of the electors, who vote for members of an electoral college to select the President. He is not eligible for a second term. The Prime Minister is appointed by the President, who also appoints the other Ministers on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. The Government is responsible only to the President. There is a single Chamber Legislature (Assembleia Nacional) of 120 members elected by direct vote of the electors. There is also a "Corporative Chamber" consisting of representatives of local authorities and industrial, commercial, cultural and religious interests, to which all bills introduced into the Chamber must be submitted for its opinion. The Legislature is in session for three months in the year. In the recess the Government legislates by decrees or decrees-laws, of which the latter only must be confirmed by the legislature. Both men and women enjoy the franchise; but there are certain educational or tax-payment qualifications.

Production.—The chief agricultural products of Portugal are cork, wheat, maize, rye, rice, oats, barley, potatoes, beans, chickpeas, onions, olives, oranges, lemons, figs, almonds, resinous products, timber and wine (including the rich red "port" shipped from Oporto). Sardine fisheries are important.

There are extensive forests of pine, oak, cork, eucalyptus and chestnut, covering about 20 per cent. of the total area of the country, and lumbering is the second largest industry.

The principal mineral products are wolfram, lead, tin, antimony, pyrites, iron ore, coal, manganese, kaolin and slate. The principal manufactures are textiles, pottery and chemical products (fertilizers, etc.), paper and glassware.

The Second Six-Year Development Plan (1959-64) provides inter alia for irrigation, agricultural resettlement and afforestation, for the development of electricity generation, mainly by hydroelectric means, of the steel and chemical industries, for extensive port works including a new shipyard at Lisbon, railway electrification, a bridge over the River Tagus at Lisbon and the expansion of the fishing and merchant fleets.

Defence.—Military service is compulsory for all men who are physically fit, less than 25 per cent. being exempted each year. The peace strength of the army is: officers 2,821 (active list), and about 2,000 (reserve); other ranks—permanent cadre of 34,000 with a yearly class of 31,000. A considerable amount of modern equipment has been received from the U.S.A. The navy consists of 860 officers and 6,375 ratings, manning a total of over 50 destroyers, frigates, sloops, submarines, mine-sweepers, patrol vessels and other small craft. With one exception the larger ships are of pre-war or wartime construction, though some are being modernized. Four new ocean and 8 new coastal minesweepers were received from the U.S.A. during 1954-55, and a further 4 coastal minesweepers and 12 patrol vessels have recently been completed. The establishment of the Air Force is 500 officers and 1,984 men with 332 aircraft of all types.

Language and Literature.—Portuguese is a Romance language with admixtures of Arabic and other idioms. It is the language of Portugal and Brazil. Portuguese language and literature reached the culminating point of their development in the Lusíadas (dealing with the voyage of Vasco da Gama) and other works of Camoens (Camões), born in 1524, died in 1580. Until the second quarter of the nineteenth century Portuguese literature dominated that of Brazil. Modern literature, both prose and verse, is in a flourishing condition and there are more than twenty daily newspapers, of which 9 are published in Lisbon.

Education is free and compulsory for three years from the age of 7. In 1952 a series of new measures was decreed to ensure school attendance and to reduce illiteracy, which was 30 per cent. at the time of the 1950 Census. Secondary education is mainly conducted in State lycées, but there are also private schools. There are also military, naval, technical and other special schools. There are Universities at Coimbra (founded in 1290), Lisbon (1212) and Oporto (1212).

Communications.—On Jan. 1, 1957 there were 2,230 miles of railway open for traffic, of which 475 miles were narrow gauge. Electric traction on the Lisbon-Sintra (25 km.) and Lisbon-Carregado (40 km.) lines began in April 1957 and work on the electrification of the Carregado-Entroncamento line (70 km.) is proceeding. The mercantile marine consisted (Dec. 31, 1956) of 266 vessels over 100 tons, with a total tonnage of 515,162. In 1956, 32,042,493 gross tons of shipping entered ports in Continental Portugal and adjacent islands, including 6,485,609 gross tons under the British flag.

Civil Aviation is controlled by the Ministry of Communications. There is an international airport at Portela, about 5 miles from Lisbon, and the airport of Pedras Rubras near Oporto is also used for some international services. There is a civil airline, an inter-island service, services in Portuguese Africa and a separate airline running services within Portuguese India and to Karachi. British European Airways and Transportes Aéreos Portugueses operate a daily service between London and Lisbon by agreement between them. There are altogether 19 airlines operating a total of about 400 services a month through Lisbon airport.

ROUMANIAN LEGATION IN LONDON

4 Palace Green, W.8

Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary, His Excellency Petre Baleceanu (1957).

Area and Population.—Roumania is a republic of South-Eastern Europe, formerly the classical Dacia and Scythia Pontica, having its origin in the union of the Danubian principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia (and the addition thereto of a strip of Southern Bessarabia) under the Treaty of Paris (April, 1856). The area in October, 1945, was estimated at 91,600 sq. miles, with a population (Census, 1956) of 17,489,794.

Government.—The principalities remained separate entities under Turkish suzerainty until 1859, when Prince Alexandru Ion Cuza was elected Prince of both, still under the suzerainty of Turkey. Prince Cuza abdicated in 1866 and was succeeded by Prince Charles of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, in whose successors the crown was vested. By the Treaty of Berlin (July 13, 1878) the Principality was recognized as an independent State, and part of the Dobrudja (which had been occupied by the Roumanians) was incorporated. On March 27, 1881, it was recognized as a Kingdom.

The outcome of the War of 1914-18 added Bessarabia, the Bukovina, Transylvania, The Banat and Crişana-Maramures, these additions of territory being confirmed in the Treaty of St. Germain, 1919, and the Treaty of Petit Trianon, 1920.

On June 27, 1940, in compliance with an ultimatum from U.S.S.R., Bessarabia and Northern Bukovina were ceded to the Soviet Government, the area affected being about 20,000 sq. miles, with a population of about 4,000,000.

In August, 1940, Roumania ceded to Bulgaria the portion of Southern Dobrudja (about 3,000 sq. miles) taken from Bulgaria in 1919.

During 1947 the historical parties, the National Peasant Party and the National Liberal Party, were liquidated and the trials and condemnations of their leaders took place. On Dec. 30, 1947, King Michael was forced to abdicate and the establishment of the Roumanian Peoples' Republic was proclaimed. On February 23, 1948, the Social Democrats were swallowed up by the Communist Party when the two fused to form the Roumanian Workers' Party, since when the Social Democrat element has been steadily liquidated. On March 28, elections were held for the Grand National Assembly. The People's Democratic Front, composed and dominated by the Roumanian Workers' Party, with its puppets the Ploughmen's Front, the National Popular Party and the Popular Hungarian Union, allocated itself 405 out of 411 seats; the new Constitution was passed and the Præsidium and Council of Ministers appointed. Thereafter the progress of the new People's Democracy towards socialism was hastened by the nationalization law of June 11, which brought under State control all industrial enterprises, mining, banking, transport and insurance. In October the Uniate Church was forcibly suppressed. At the turn of the year the dictatorship of the proletariat was officially established. The landowners were dispossessed, disfranchised and exiled on March 2, 1949. In 1950 the creation of collective farms was intensified. The liquidation of the middle classes continued and on April 20 most buildings owned by former members of the "bourgeoisie" were nationalized without compensation.

The currency reform of January, 1952, effectively wiped out the savings of the peasants. In May, 1952, several ministers were attacked for opposing the currency reform, following a deviationist policy of economic opportunism, and sabotaging the economic development of Roumania. They were replaced by other ministers, and the changes were made the occasion for a tightening of the Workers' Party organization and the elimination of the remaining Social Democrats from the Government and Workers' Party.

A new Constitution, modelled on the Soviet Constitution of 1936, was adopted unanimously on September 24, 1952, by the Grand National Assembly. The Assembly was later dissolved and elections were held for a new Grand National Assembly on November 30, 1952; in each constituency there was only one candidate for election, representing the People's Democratic Front. Further elections on similar lines were held in March, 1956.

Agriculture.—The soil of Wallachia and Moldavia is among the richest in Europe, producing wheat, maize, millet, oats, barley, rye, beans, peas and other vegetables. Grape vines and fruits are abundant. The fertile plain of Transylvania yields large crops of maize, wheat, rye, oats, flax, and hemp. Agriculture and sheep and cattle raising are the principal industries of Roumania, but the climate of this part of South-Eastern Europe is of the Continental character, and the intense winter cold and summer heat, and fierce summer drought sometimes defeat these principal industries. The forests of the mountainous regions are extensive (17,851,401 acres), and the timber industry is important. The total arable land under cultivation in 1959 was about 10,000,000 hectares.

Natural Resources and Industry.—Petroleum is the backbone of Roumanian industry and of the country's general economy. Production in 1936 (the peak pre-war year) amounted to 8,700,000 tons. In the immediate post-war period, production declined to less than half this figure, but it is now claimed that, with the discovery of new oil-fields, production has recovered and reached a new peak of 11,336,000 tons in 1958. The country is also rich in other minerals, and produces in limited quantities coal, lignite, iron, gold, silver, mica and uranium. At the end of the first Five-Year Plan, 1951-55, the Government claimed to have exceeded their intention of increasing industrial production by 244 per cent. compared with 1950. A new Five-Year Plan was begun at the beginning of 1956 and it is planned to increase annual production by 60 per cent. compared with 1955 by the end of 1960. Production of crude oil is planned to reach over 13,000,000 tons per annum by 1960.

Other 1958 production figures, with 1960 targets in brackets are:

Coal.....	7,387,000 metric tons (11-11,500,000)
Steel.....	932,000 metric tons (1,600,000)
Pig Iron.....	737,000 metric tons (1,150,000)
Natural Gas..	5,075,000 cu. metres (10,000,000,000)
Electric Energy..	6,184,000,000 kWh (8,000,000,000)

Language and Literature.—Roumanian is a romance language with many archaic forms and with admixtures of Slavonic, Turkish, Magyar and French words. The folk-songs and folklore, composed by the people themselves, and transmitted orally through many centuries (and collected in the 19th century), form one of the most interesting of such collections. The publication of all books and reviews is controlled and authorized by the Editura de Stat, which comes under the jurisdiction of the Council of Ministers. In 1957, 31 daily newspapers were published. The dominating religion is that of the Roumanian Orthodox Church.

Education is free and nominally compulsory with 2,400,000 in attendance, including over 400,000 at secondary schools and 80,000 in higher education. There are four Universities, at Bucharest, Iași, Cluj and Timisoara. A "Marxist-Leninist" University was opened in Bucharest in 1951. There are four polytechnics at Bucharest, Timisoara, Craiova and Iași, two commercial academies at Bucharest and Brasov, and one agricultural college at Bucharest.

Communications.—In 1939 there were about 7,000 miles of railway open for traffic, of which about 1,000 miles were in Bessarabia and Northern Bukovina, now ceded to the Soviet Union. The mercantile marine, as a result of war losses, seizure and reparations, has been reduced to a few moderate-sized sea-going steamers and a number of coastal and river craft. The principal ports are Constantza (on the Black Sea), Giurgiu, Braila, and Turnu-Severin (on the Danube), and Sulina (on the Danube Estuary). Work on a canal linking the Danube and the Black Sea just north of Constantza was abandoned in 1953 and no more was heard of the project to build a canal linking Bucharest with Danube Estuary.

Internal Debt (1947).....	79,734,196,285
External Debt (1947).....	45,226,229,184

Up-to-date figures of the Public Debt are not available. No foreign loans (other than short-term commercial loans) are known to have been contracted since March, 1947. The internal debt was virtually wiped out by stabilization in August, 1947; there has been no internal loan issue since that date.

The Roumanian Leu (of 100 Bani) was revalued for the third time since the war on Feb. 1, 1954, foreign exchange rates being fixed at £1=16.80 lei and 1 U.S. $=6.00 lei. On July 1, 1957, the Roumanian State Bank announced the payment of 100 per cent. premium on all "capitalist" currencies for non-commercial transactions. This premium brings the tourist exchange rate to £1=33.60 lei and 1 U.S. $=12 lei.

TRADE 1947

Imports.....	U.S. $61,300,000
Exports.....	34,300,000

No complete figures for foreign trade have been published since the start of the Communist régime. Imports are chiefly semi-manufactured goods, raw materials, machinery and metals; exports consist principally of maize, wheat, barley, oats, petroleum, timber and cattle. Trade with U.K., and particularly exports to Roumania, increased considerably after the War, but has been relatively small recently. In 1958 the value of U.K. exports was £1,009,363; that of Roumanian exports to U.K. £3,064,418. By far the greater part of Roumania's foreign trade is now with the Soviet Union and the other countries of Eastern Europe. Roumania is a member of the Soviet-sponsored "Council for Mutual Economic Assistance."

CAPITAL, Bucharest, on the Dimbovitza, population (1956) 1,236,905. Other towns with a population of over 100,000 in 1956 are: Cluj (154,752); Timisoara (142,251); Stalin (123,882); Ploesti (114,560); Iași (112,989); Arad (106,457); and Braila (102,491).

FLAG: Three vertical bands, blue, yellow, red, with the emblem of the Republic (mountains, fir trees, and an oil derrick, with a rising sun in the background, the whole surrounded by ears of wheat, at the top a five-cornered star, and at the bottom a ribbon with the letters "R.P.R.") in the centre band.

SALVADOR

(República de El Salvador)

President, Lt.-Colonel José Lemus, took office Sept. 1956.

EMBASSY IN LONDON

6 Roland Gardens, S.W.7

[Fremantle: 2455]

Ambassador, Dr. Antonio Melendez (1958).

Secretary and Consul-General, Señor Don Guillermo Paz.

Area and Population.—The Republic of El Salvador extends along the Pacific coast of Central America for 160 miles with a general breadth of about 50 miles, and contains an estimated area of 8,058 square miles, with a population estimated (1958) at about 2,400,000. El Salvador is therefore one of the most densely populated countries of the new world. It is divided into 14 Departments.

The surface of the country is very mountainous, many of the peaks being extinct volcanoes. The highest peaks are the Santa Ana volcano (7,700 ft.) and the San Vicente volcano (7,200 ft.). Much of the interior has an average altitude of 2,000 feet. The lowlands along the coast are generally hot, but towards the interior the altitude tempers the severity of the heat. Much has been done in recent years to improve sanitary conditions and services. There is a wet season from May to October, and a dry season from November to April. Earthquakes have been frequent in the history of El Salvador, the most recent being that of May 6, 1952, when the towns of Jucuapa and Chinameca were destroyed.

The principal river is the Río Lempa. There is a large volcanic lake (Ilopango) a few miles to the east of the capital, while farther away and to the west lies the smaller but very picturesque lake of Cotepeque, which appears to have been formed in a vast crater flanked by the Santa Ana volcano.

Government.—Salvador was conquered in 1526 by Pedro de Alvarado, and formed part of the Spanish vice-royalty of Guatemala until 1821. In 1839 the Republic broke away from the federation of Central American States. A new Constitution was adopted in 1950. The President is elected for six years and the Legislature for two.

Production and Industry.—The chief industry is the cultivation of coffee, which is grown under shade-trees principally on the slopes of the volcanoes; cane sugar is also produced, as well as cotton, maize, sesame, indigo, rice, balsam, etc. In the lower altitudes towards the east, sisal is produced and used in the manufacture of coffee and sugar bags.

Education.—A high degree of illiteracy still prevails. Primary education is nominally compulsory, but the number of schools and teachers available is too small to enable education to be given to all children of school age. In recent Budgets, however, a high percentage of the national revenue has been devoted to education and great efforts are being made to eliminate the existing shortage of schools and teachers.

Language and Literature.—The language of the country is Spanish. Indigenous literature has not yet produced work of international repute. There are 4 daily newspapers published at the capital, and 4 in the provinces.

Communications.—A British railway (the Salvador Railway Co.), nearly 100 miles in length, connects Acajutla with the capital and with the important coffee centre of Santa Ana. The International Railways of Central America have a line from the port of La Unión (on the Gulf of Fonseca) to the capital and another one in the opposite direction which taps the richest coffee growing region in the country and proceeds to Zacapa (in Guatemala) thereby affording continuous railway communication between San Salvador and Guatemala City and Puerto Barrios on the Caribbean coast. The re-draining and re-paving of most of the capital has been completed, as has also the macadamizing or paving of several hundred miles of rural roads, many of which are now passable all the year round. There is a good motor road between the port of La Libertad and the capital (23 miles), while motor transportation is possible throughout the year between the capital and Guatemala City. The Pan-American Highway from the Guatemalan frontier follows this route and continues to the Honduran frontier. The highway is now completed through the country. Pan-American Airways and TACA connect El Salvador with the U.S., Mexico and Central American countries and KLM with Europe.

There are post and telegraph offices throughout the country. There are many broadcasting stations and a television station.

SAN MARINO

(Republica di San Marino)

Regents, Two "Capitani Reggenti".

CONSULATE GENERAL IN LONDON

37-39 High Holborn, W.C.1
[Holborn: 9861]

Consul General, G. T. MacEwan.

A small Republic in the hills near Rimini, on the Adriatic, founded, it is stated, by a pious stonemason of Dalmatia in the 4th century. The Republic always resisted the Papal claims and its integrity was respected by Italy, with which country it concluded (June 28, 1897) a treaty of amicizia e buon vicinato; a new treaty on similar lines was signed on April 29, 1953. The Republic is governed by a Council of 60, of whom two are elected as Regents for six months (1 April and 1 October), being thereafter ineligible for office for three years. A Council of Twelve forms a Supreme Court of Justice. The area is approximately 23 square miles, the population 14,900. There is an army of 180. The city of San Marino, on the slope of Monte Titano, has three castles, a fine church and Government palace, a theatre and a museum. The principal industries are wine, cereals, cheese, olive oil, cattle and ceramics, in addition to the utilization and export of worked stone from Monte Titano and production of white and hydrated lime at Gualdicciolo. A Treaty of Extradition between the Governments of Great Britain and the Republic of San Marino has been in force since 1899.

In 1958, revenue totalled lire 227,087,000; expenditure lire 287,660,950; there is no debt. The capital San Marino, has a population of 2,000.

FLAG: Two horizontal bands, white, blue (with coat of arms of the Republic in centre).

Area and Population.—A National State in the south-west of Europe, between 36°-43° 45' N. lat. and 4° 25' E.-0° 20' W. long., bounded on the south and east by the Mediterranean, on the west by the Atlantic and Portugal, and on the north by the Bay of Biscay and France, from which it is separated by the Pyrenees. Continental Spain occupies about eleven-thirteenths of the Iberian peninsula, the remaining portion forming the Republic of Portugal. Its coast-line extends 1,317 miles—712 formed by the Mediterranean and 605 by the Atlantic—and it comprises a total area of 190,700 square miles, with an estimated population (Dec., 1958) of 29,662,000. Provisional returns for 1958 gave 646,041 births, 256,070 deaths and 251,433 marriages. Infantile mortality was estimated at 35.66 per 1,000 births.

Physical Features.—The interior of the Iberian Peninsula consists of an elevated tableland surrounded and traversed by mountain ranges—the Pyrenees, the Cantabrian Mountains, the Sierra Guadarrama, Sierra Morena, Sierra Nevada, Montes de Toledo, &c. The principal rivers are the Douro, the Tagus, the Guadiana, the Guadalquivir, the Ebro, and the Minho.

Government.—Phoenician traders visited the peninsula more than a thousand years before the Christian era, but they were traders rather than settlers, although Cadiz has preserved its identity and claims to be "the oldest city in the world." The Roman occupation of Spain was completed after the close of the Second Punic War (201 B.C.) and Hispania was divided into two provinces. After the decline of the Roman Empire the Italian elements, which had partly displaced the Celts and Iberians, were in turn disturbed by settlers of Germanic origin. After the union of Aragon and Castile in the 15th century Spain was ruled by sovereigns of the Aragon, Habsburg and Bourbon lines (with the intervention of a Republic 1873-74). Alfonso XIII. succeeding at birth in 1886. On April 14, 1931, following the results of the Municipal Elections, which showed anti-monarchical feeling to be extremely high in all the chief towns of Spain, King Alfonso XIII. left the country, and the Queen and other members of the Royal Family on the following day. A Republic was immediately proclaimed and a Provisional Government, drawn from the various Republican and Socialist parties, was formed. The Republican Assembly (Cortes) was a single Chamber Congress of Deputies. Each Province had an Assembly (Diputación Provincial), and, with the approval of the Cortes, Provinces might combine to form an Autonomous Region within the Republic.

On July 18, 1936, a counter-revolution broke out in many military garrisons in Spanish Morocco and spread rapidly throughout Spain. The principal leader was General Francisco Franco Bahamonde, formerly Governor of the Canary Islands, from which office he was dismissed by the Azaña Government. The struggle, in its later phases, threatened to embroil some of the European Powers, those of Nazi-Fascist tendency lending aid to General Franco (leader of the Military-Fascist fusion, or Falange) while those of Communist views supported the Azaña (Popular Front) government. In October, 1938, many of the supporting troops were withdrawn, and on March 29, 1939, the Civil War was declared to have ended, the Popular Front Governments in Madrid and Barcelona surrendering to the Nationalists (as General Franco's followers were then named). On June 5, 1939, the Grand Council of the Falange Española Tradicionalista y de las Juntas Ofensivas Nacional-Sindicalistas, which replaced the former Cortes, met at Burgos to legislate for the reorganization of the country under the Presidency of General Franco, who had assumed the title of Caudillo (Leader) of the Empire and Chief of the State. In the Civil War of 1936-39 over 1,000,000 lives were lost.

On July 1, 1942, General Franco announced the reconstitution of the Cortes de España, which was composed (May, 1955) of 515 members: ex officio members—16 ministers, 101 National Councilors of Falange, the President of the Council of State, the President of the Supreme Court of Justice, the President of the Supreme Court of Military Justice, 12 rectors of universities, 3 presidents of Royal Academies, and 52 mayors of the provincial capitals including Ceuta and Melilla. Elected Members—159 representatives of national syndicates, 101 representatives of municipalities, 4 representatives of Royal Academies, and 15 representatives of professions. Nominated Members—50 persons of high ecclesiastical, military, administrative or social rank.

On April 1, 1947, a draft law was submitted to the Cortes by which Spain was again to become a monarchy, but for the present without a King. A Council of the Realm was, however, to assist General Franco, and to select a successor after his death or incapacity. On July 6, 1947, a referendum asking approval of this law was announced (July 27) to have received 14,145,163 affirmative votes out of a recorded total of 15,219,563. Under this law a Regency Council was to be set up in the event of the death or incapacitation of the Head of the State.

Defence.—Army.—Spain is divided into 9 Military Regions. Seven of these regions have a Corps headquarters with 2 infantry Divisions (with the exception of the 8th region, which has one Division). The 9th region has no Corps headquarters, and only one Division. There are independent commands in the Balearics and Canaries. There are also one armoured and one motorized cavalry Division. The Spanish Army in Morocco is being reorganized as a consequence of Moroccan independence.

The Navy consists of 4 cruisers, 13 destroyers, 8 frigates, 2 corvettes, 6 mine-layers, 1 gunboat, 19 minesweepers and 8 submarines, with many auxiliary craft.

The Air Force is divided into 5 Air Regions and 3 Oversea Commands. There are 3 Fighter Wings, 2 Light Bomber Wings, 2 Reconnaissance Wings, 2 Transport Wings, and 2 Air Sea Rescue Squadrons. An Air Defence Command was set up in April, 1956.

Education.—Primary education is free, but compulsory attendance cannot be enforced because of the inadequate number of schools. Official figures of illiteracy in 1950 give a total number of illiterates, excluding children under 10, of 3,983,800, or 14.24 per cent. of the population (men, 9.86 per cent., women, 18.30 per cent.). There are 11 Universities in continental Spain and 1 at La Laguna in the Canary Islands. The University of Salamanca was founded in 1230, Valencia (1245), Oviedo (1317), Valladolid (1346), Barcelona (1450), Saragossa (1474), Santiago (1501), Seville (1502), Granada (1526), Madrid, Murcia (1915).

Language and Literature.—Castilian is the language of more than two-thirds of the population of Spain and is the form of Spanish spoken in Mexico, Central and (except in Brazil) Southern America. Basque, reported to have been the original language of Iberia, is spoken in the rural districts of Vizcaya, Guipuzcoa and Alava. Catalan is a dialect in Provençal Spain, and Galician, spoken in the north-western provinces, is allied to Portuguese. The literature of Spain is one of the oldest and richest in the world, the Poem of the Cid, the earliest and best of the heroic songs of Spain, having been written about A.D. 1140. The outstanding writings of its golden age are those of Miguel de Cervantes Saavedra (1547-1616), Lope Felix de Vega Carpio (1562-1635) and Pedro Calderón de la Barca (1600-1681). The Nobel Prize for Literature has three times been awarded to Spanish authors—J. Echegaray (1904), J. Benavente (1922) and Juan Ramón Jiménez (1956).

FINANCE		1958

Public Debt (December 31, 1957) excluding para-statal entities and State-guaranteed issues: Pesetas 95,067,054,542.

The rate of exchange for the peseta was altered on July 20, 1959, to 168.0 pesetas = £1 sterling (see also p. 84).

Production and Industry.—The country is generally fertile, and well adapted to agriculture and the cultivation of heat-loving fruits—as olives, oranges, lemons, almonds, pomegranates, apricots and grapes. The agricultural products include wheat, barley, oats, rice, hemp and flax. In 1958 the orange crop, of which Germany, France and the United Kingdom were the chief importing countries, amounted to 1,325,000 tons. The vine is cultivated widely; in the south-west, Jerez, the well-known sherry and tent wines are produced. Exports of agricultural products in 1958 represented about 67 per cent. of Spain's export earnings.

Spain's mineral resources of coal, iron, wolfram, copper, lead and other ores are variously exploited. Many of the richer and more easily worked deposits have been exhausted, but the authorities are actively engaged in stimulating the exploitation of hitherto unworked or lower grade deposits. In 1958 the coal output amounted to 17,076,000 tons; iron ore 4,908,000 tons and pyrites 2,015,000 tons. The iron and steel industries produced 1,302,000 tons of pig iron and 1,560,000 tons of steel in 1958. Other production figures (in tons) included: raw steel, 1,347,000, lead, 70,500, zinc, 20,500, aluminium 16,100, copper 5,100 and cement 4,848,000. Production of electric power was 15,468 million kwh. The fishing industry is of importance.

The principal manufactures are textile goods of all kinds, footwear and other leather goods, ceramics, sewing machines, bicycles, chemical products and light engineering manufactures.

The tourist industry is becoming increasingly important and it is estimated that 2,247,000 tourists visited Spain in 1957.

Communications.—In 1958 there were 8,270 miles of railways in service. The sea-going mercantile marine in 1958 consisted of 1,481 vessels of 1,479,806 gross tons. Civil aviation is under the control of the Air Ministry; there are several inland and international services in operation.

The BALEARIC ISLES are an archipelago off the east coast of Spain. There are four large islands (Majorca, Minorca, Iviza and Formentera), and seven smaller (Aire, Aucanada, Botafoch, Cabrera, Dragonera, Pinto and El Rey). The islands were occupied by the Romans after the destruction of Carthage and provided contingents of the celebrated Balearic slingers. The total area is 1,935 square miles, with a population of 433,444. The archipelago forms a province of Spain, the capital being Ψ Palma in Majorca, pop. 138,071; Ψ Mahon (Minorca), pop. 20,000.

The CANARY ISLANDS are an archipelago in the Atlantic, off the African coast, consisting of 7 islands and 6 uninhabited islets. The total area is 2,807 square miles, with a population of 696,982. The Canary Islands form two Provinces of Spain.—Las Palmas (Gran Canaria, Lanzarote, Fuerteventura and the islets of Alegranza, Roque del Este, Roque del Oeste, Graciosa, Montaña Clara and Lobos), with seat of administration at Ψ Las Palmas (pop. 1948, 150,020) in Gran Canaria, where U.S. oil companies have installed tanks for re-fuelling shipping; and Santa Cruz de Tenerife (Tenerife, La Palma, Gomera and Hierro), with seat of administration at Ψ Santa Cruz in Tenerife, pop. 106,798. Trade with U.K., 1958: Imports from U.K., £3,210,188; Exports, £13,088,139.

ISLA DE LOS FAISANES or ILE DE LA CONFERENCE is a Franco-Spanish condominium, under the Treaty of Bayonne Dec. 2, 1856, and March 27, 1901. It lies at the mouth of the Bidassoa in La Higuera bay. It is uninhabited.

Ψ CEUTA is a fortified post on the Moroccan coast, opposite Gibraltar. The total area is 5 square miles, with a population of 67,790.

Ψ MELILLA is a town on a rocky promontory of the Rif coast, connected with the mainland by a narrow isthmus. Melilla has been in Spanish possession since 1492. The population is 94,319. Ceuta and Melilla are parts of Metropolitan Spain.

Spanish Colonies

The Spanish Colonies consist of certain settlements in, and islands round the coast of, Africa, with a total area of close on 82,400 square miles, and a population estimated in 1935 at 951,000.

SPANISH GUINEA, consisting of the islands of Fernando Póo and Annobon, the Corisco Islands and Río Muni (mainland). Fernando Póo lies in the Bight of Biafra in 3° 12' N. lat. and 8° 48' E. long., about 20 miles distant from the west coast of Africa, and is a mountainous island (Pico de Santa Isabel, 10,800 feet), with forests of oil palm, ebony, mahogany, and oak, and sugar-cane, cotton, and indigo. Cocoa, coffee, sugar, tobacco, vanilla, and kola nut are cultivated, and large quantities of cocoa and other products are exported. With its dependencies it has an area of about 800 square miles, and a population estimated at 34,200. The capital of Spanish Guinea is Ψ Santa Isabel (pop. 9,000) on the island of Fernando Póo. The total area, mainland and islands, is about 10,000 sq. miles, with an estimated population of 204,495, of whom about 4,224 are whites.

Annobon Island (Anno Bom), in the Gulf of Guinea, in 1° 24' S. lat. and 5° 3'E. long.; population 1,410.

Corisco Islands, consisting of Corisco, Elobey Grande, and Elobey Chico, lie in Corisco Bay, and export ebony, logwood, and other forest produce.

Río Muni is a coastal settlement between Cameroon and French Congo (1° N.—2° 20' N. lat.), extending about 125 miles inland. The inhabitants are Bantu tribes, and the principal settlements are at the mouths of the Muni, Benito, and Campa rivers, and at Ψ Bata (the principal town) on the coast.

WESTERN SAHARA.—Spanish possessions in the Western Sahara consist of two provinces—Ifrni and Spanish Sahara. Ifrni (capital, Sidi Ifrni) extends on the coast from the mouth of Bou Sedra (Asif Salogquad) (approximately 29° 38' N. lat.) to the River Assaka (Nun) which forms the S.W. boundary. The eastern boundary runs between 9° 50' and 9° 55' W. long. The coast line is 36 miles in length and the territory measures approximately 950 square miles. The province of Spanish Sahara extends from 27° 40' N. lat. in the north to La Agüera (Cape Blanco) in the south, though the main southern boundary runs along latitude $21^{\circ} 20'$. The land area is approximately 125,000 square miles. Spanish Sahara is divided into two regions separated by latitude 26° which passes south of Cape Bojador. The northern region is the Segua el Hamra (Rio Rojo) of which the capital is Aaiun. It extends eastward to approximately $8^{\circ} 40'$ W. long. The southern region is the Rio de Oro, of which the capital is Villa Cisneros. Its eastern boundary is approximately 12° W. long. Total population about 36,000.

SPANISH MOROCCO.—In addition to Ceuta and Melilla, Spain exercised until 1956 a protectorate over a part of Northern Morocco. Moroccan independence was proclaimed after negotiations with France and Spain in 1956 (see "Morocco"). Remaining Spanish settlements on the Moroccan seaboard are:—

Alhucemas, the bay of that name, includes six islands: population 366.

Peñon de la Gomeria (or Peñon de Velez) is a fortified rocky islet about 40 miles west of Alhucemas Bay; population 450.

The Chaffarinas (or Zaffarinas) are a group of three islands near the Algerian frontier, about 2 miles north of Cape del Agua; population 610.

Area and Population.—The Sudan extends from the southern boundary of Egypt, 22° N. lat., to the northern boundary of Uganda, $3^{\circ} 36'$ N. lat., and reaches from French Equatorial Africa about $21^{\circ} 49'$ E. (at $12^{\circ} 45'$ N.) to the north-west boundary of Eritrea in $38^{\circ} 35'$ E. (at 18° N.). The greatest length from north to south is approximately 1,300 miles, and from east to west 950 miles.

The northern boundary is the 22nd parallel of North latitude; on the east lie the Red Sea, Eritrea and Ethiopia; on the south lie Kenya Colony, the British Protectorate of Uganda and the Belgian Congo; and on the west French Equatorial Africa and Libya.

The White Nile enters from Uganda at the Sudan frontier post of Nimule in Equatoria Province, as the Bahr el Jebel, and leaves the Sudan at Wadi Halfa. The Blue Nile flows from Lake Tana on the Ethiopian Plateau. Its course in the Sudan is nearly 500 miles long, before it joins the White Nile at Khartoum. The next confluence of importance is at Atbara where the main Nile is joined by the River Atbara. The total length of the Nile, now accepted as the longest river in the world, is estimated to be 4,160 miles from its source to the Mediterranean Sea. Between Khartoum and Wadi Halfa occur five of the six Cataracts.

The estimated area is about 976,750 sq. miles, with a population of 10,262,536 (census, 1956), partly Arabs, partly Negroes, and partly Nubian of mixed Arab-Negro blood, with a small foreign element, including some 8,000 Europeans. The Arabs and Nubians are all Moslems. The Negroes are generally pagans, but some have been converted to Christianity. Population of provinces at the census of 1956 was: Bahr-el-Ghazal 991,022; Blue Nile 2,069,646; Darfur 1,328,765; Equatoria 903,503; Kassala 941,039; Khartoum 504,923; Kordofan 1,761,968; Northern 873,059; Upper Nile 888,611.

Government.—By virtue of the Condominium Agreement of 1899 between H.M. Government and the Egyptian Government, and Article 11 of the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty of 1936, the Sudan was administered by a Governor-General on the joint behalf of Great Britain and of Egypt.

On February 12, 1953, an Anglo-Egyptian Agreement guaranteed to the Sudanese the right to determine their own future and reserved the sovereignty of the Sudan until the day of self-determination for the Sudanese. The first Sudanese General Election was held at the end of 1953.

The Sudan House of Representatives on Dec. 19, 1955, voted unanimously a declaration that the Sudan was a fully independent sovereign state, and on Jan. 1, 1956, the Republic was proclaimed and was recognized by Great Britain and Egypt, a Supreme Commission being sworn in to take over sovereignty. On November 17, 1958, by means of a coup d'état, the Army took over control of the country. The constitution was suspended, Parliament and political parties dissolved. A Supreme Council of the Armed Forces and a Council of Ministers were set up.

Education.—Arabic has been adopted as the national language, and the Government has taken over formal education in the southern provinces, which had hitherto been largely in the hands of various Christian Missions. The University of Khartoum (formerly Gordon Memorial College) was raised to university status on July 24, 1956. It has nearly 1,000 students. There are 41 boys' and 2 girls' secondary schools with 5,425 boys and 520 girls; 622 boys' and 234 girls' elementary schools with 123,200 boys and 46,200 girls; 127 boys' and 23 girls' intermediate schools with 23,600 boys and 2,760 girls; 4 elementary teachers' training centres with 449 men; 1 intermediate teachers' training centre with 50 men; 3 girls' training centres with 240 girls; 9 technical intermediate schools with 932 boys; 3 secondary technical schools with 322 boys; Khartoum Technical Institute with 304 boys and 1,228 junior elementary schools with a total of 184,200 pupils.

Production.—The principal grain crop is dura (great millet), the staple food of the people in the Sudan. Sesame and ground-nuts are other important food crops, which also yield an exportable surplus. The principal export crop is cotton. Main production is of long-staple (Egyptian type) cotton, but smaller quantities of short-staple (American type) cotton are also grown. Much of the high quality, long-staple cotton is provided by the Sudan Gezira Scheme, a Government-controlled project irrigated from the Sennar Dam on the Blue Nile. The Sudan also produces the bulk of the world's supply of gum arabic. Livestock is the mainstay of the nomadic Arab tribes of the desert and the negro tribes of the swamp and wooded grassland country in the South.

Communications.—The railway system (3 ft. 6 in. gauge) has a route length of about 2,800 miles, linking Khartoum with Wadi Halfa, Port Sudan, Wad Medani, Sennar, Kosti, El Obeid and Nyala. Regular rail and Nile steamer services (operated by Sudan Railways) connect with the Egyptian State Railways to the North, and with the East African Railways and Steamers system to the South. Port Sudan is a well-equipped modern seaport. Sudan Airways run regular services from Khartoum to many parts of the Sudan and to Egypt, Greece, Italy and the United Kingdom.

Area and Population.—Sweden occupies the eastern half of the Scandinavian peninsula in N.W. Europe and comprises 25 local government districts, "Län," with an area of 173,436 sq. miles, and a population, Jan. 1, 1958, of 7,392,872. Of the 53,726 foreigners (non-Scandinavians) with permission to reside in Sweden, about 7,390 are Baltic refugees and 21,014 Germans. In 1957 there were 107,207 births (14.5 per 1,000 inhabitants), 73,111 deaths (9.9 per 1,000) and 52,366 marriages (7.1 per 1,000). In 1957 the infantile mortality rate was 17.4 per 1,000.

* This is the official title of the King of Sweden.

Government.—Under the Constitution of June 6, 1809 (with amendments) the throne is hereditary in the House of Bernadotte, Prince of Ponte Corvo, a Marshal of France, who was invited to accept the title of Crown Prince, with succession to the throne. The Marshal landed at Helsingborg on Oct. 20, 1810, and succeeded Charles XIII. in 1818. There is a Diet (Riksdag) of two Chambers, Första Kammaren of 150 members, elected for 8 years; and Andra Kammaren of 230 members, elected for 4 years. The Council of Ministers (Statsråd) is responsible to the Riksdag.

Production and Industry.—About 24 per cent. of the working population is devoted to agriculture, forestry and fisheries, about 290,000 being owners and 55,000 tenants of the land they cultivate. The country may be divided into three separate districts, the northern, forest; central, mining, industrial agricultural and forest; the southern, agricultural and industrial. The climate in the south is favourable for producing grain. The principal articles of cultivation are oats, wheat, rye, barley, potatoes, roots, oiliferous plants and grasses. Dairy produce, however, accounts for about half the value of Swedish agricultural production. Sweden contains the great lakes of Vänern, Vättern, Mälaren and Hjälmaren. The forests are very extensive, covering over one-half of the surface of the country, and consisting chiefly of pine, spruce and birch; these are of great importance, supplying timber, pitch, fuel and tar, in addition to sulphite, sulphate and mechanical wood pulp for the paper-making and rayon industries. The mineral resources are extremely rich; iron ore of excellent quality; lead, zinc, sulphur, manganese, arsenic, gold, granite and marble. There are also considerable deposits of low grade uranium ore. There is a railroad opening up the rich iron-ore districts of Lapland and mineral trains run from Gällivare and Kiruna to Luleå on the Gulf of Bothnia and to Narvik on the Atlantic; coal is being worked in Scania (Skåne).

In 1956 there were 16,904 industrial establishments (including mines and quarries) employing 691,246 operatives, and 179,327 in administrative and executive posts. The fishing industry landed catches valued at Kr.148,914,000 in 1957.

Communications.—Railroads totalling 10,140 miles in length (of which 9,375 are the property of the State) were open on June 1, 1956. At the beginning of 1958 there were 117 main telephone exchanges in operation, of which 76 were fully automatic; 3,720 of the 6,936 sub-stations were fully automatic. There were 326 telephones for every 1,000 of the population, 353 per 1,000 had obtained wireless licences and at the beginning of 1959 the number of television licences issued totalled about 250,000. The number of private cars in use on the same date was estimated at 950,000 or 2 to every 7 of the population. The Mercantile Marine (Jan. 1959), consisted of a total of 1,574 ships of 3,492,705 gross tons. Civil aviation is under the control of the Ministry of Communications, under whose supervision all matters concerning civil aviation are handled by the Department of Civil Aviation. Regular domestic air traffic is maintained by the Scandinavian Airlines system (on behalf of the Swedish Airlines) and by A. B. Linjeflyg. Regular European and inter-continental air traffic is maintained within the framework of the Scandinavian Airlines System in Copenhagen by the Swedish Airlines in collaboration with the Danish and Norwegian Airlines.

Defence.—Service in the Defence Forces is universal and compulsory, between 35,000 and 40,000 being trained annually; strength of the Army during the war of 1939-45 was about 500,000, equipped on modern lines and principally mechanized. The Navy consists of 3 cruisers, 14 destroyers, 13 frigates, 28 motor torpedo boats, 24 submarines and a large number of minor craft and auxiliaries. The naval stations are Stockholm, Karlskrona and Göteborg. The Air Force consists of 20 wings, chiefly fighters.

Religion.—The State religion is Lutheran Protestant, to which over 95 per cent. of the people adhere.

Language and Literature.—Swedish is one of the Teutonic languages spoken by the people of Scandinavia and is closely allied to Icelandic, Danish and Norse. Swedish national literature may be dated from the foundation of the University of Uppsala in 1477 and reached its golden age under Gustavus III. (1771-1792), who founded the Swedish Academy in 1786. Among modern Swedish authors who have achieved world-wide reputations are August Strindberg (1849-1912), dramatist and novelist; Selma Lagerlöf (1858-1940), who was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1909 on account of her pre-eminence as a novelist; Verner von Heidenstam (1859-1940), poet and Nobel Prize-winner (1916); Erik A. Karlfeldt (1864-1931), Nobel Prize-winner in 1931 after his death, and Par Lagerkvist, Nobel Prize-winner, 1951. In 1958 there were 200 daily newspapers in the country, 9 major papers being published at Stockholm, 5 at Göteborg and 4 at Malmö.

Education.—(i.) Primary: Compulsory and free, illiteracy rare. Maintained by the State and by local taxation. Attendance good. (ii.) Secondary: Well-developed, schools numerous and efficient. (iii.) Special schools make a feature of technics, commerce and navigation. (iv.) Universities: State Universities at Uppsala (founded 1477) and Lund (founded 1668) and private but grant-aided Universities in Stockholm and Göteborg.

situated between 45° 50'–47° 48' N. lat. and 5° 58'–10° 3' E. long. It is composed of 22 Cantons, 3 subdivided, making 25 in all, of very dissimilar size, united under a Constitution dated May 29, 1874, and comprises a total area of 15,950 square miles, with an estimated population (Dec. 1958) of 5,204,000. In 1957 there were 90,823 live births, 51,066 deaths and 41,669 marriages. The infant mortality rate was 23 per 1,000 live births. In 1950, out of a total of 47,000,000, 56 per cent. of the population was Protestant, 41 per cent. Roman Catholic and 0.4 per cent. Jewish.

Physical Features.—Switzerland is the most mountainous country in all Europe. The Alps, covered with perennial snow and from 5,000 to 15,217 feet in height, occupy its southern and eastern frontiers, and the chief part of its interior; and the Jura mountains rise in the north-west. The Alps occupy 61 per cent., and the Jura mountains 12 per cent., of the country. The Alps are a crescent-shaped mountain system situated in France, Italy, Switzerland, Bavaria and Austria, covering an area of 80,000 square miles from the Mediterranean to the Danube (600 miles). The highest peak, Mont Blanc, Pennine Alps (15,732 feet) is partly in France and Italy; Monte Rosa (15,217 feet) and Matterhorn (14,780 feet) are partly in Switzerland and partly in Italy. The highest wholly Swiss peaks are Finsteraarhorn (14,026), Aletschhorn (13,711), Jungfrau (13,671), Mönch (13,456), Elger (13,040), Schreckhorn (13,385), and Wetterhorn (12,150) in the Bernese Alps, and Dom (14,918), Weisshorn (14,803) and Breithorn (13,685).

The Swiss lakes are famous for their beauty and include Lakes Maggiore, Zürich Lucerne, Neuchâtel, Geneva, Constance, Thun, Zug, Lugano, Walensee and Brienz.

Production and Industry.—Agriculture is followed chiefly in the valleys, where wheat, oats, maize, barley, flax, hemp, and tobacco are produced, and nearly all English fruits and vegetables as well as grapes are grown. Dairying and stock-raising are the principal industries, about 3,000,000 acres being under grass for hay and 2,000,000 acres pasturage. The forests cover about one-quarter of the whole surface. The chief manufacturing industries comprise engineering and other metallurgical industries, clothing, watchmaking, wood-working, foodstuffs, chemicals, cotton, silk and rayon, embroidery and footwear.

Government.—The legislative power is vested in a Parliament, consisting of two Chambers, a National Council (Nationalrat) of 196 members, and a Council of States (Ständerat) of 44 members; both Chambers united are called the Federal Assembly, and the members of the National Council are elected for four years, an election taking place in October. The executive power is in the hands of a Federal Council (Bundesrat) of 7 members, elected for four years by the Federal Assembly and presided over by the President of the Confederation. The members of the Federal Council are elected for four years; each year the Federal Assembly elects from this council the President and the Vice-President; they are elected for one year. Not more than one of the same canton may be elected member of the Federal Council; on the other hand, there is a tradition that Italian and French-speaking areas should between them be represented on the Federal Council by at least two members.

Defence.—Army. Elite (ages 20 to 36), 16 yrs.; initial training, 118 days. Subsequently 8 training periods of 21 days; then Landwehr (36 to 48) and Landsturm (48 to 60). Air Force. Ground personnel: as Army. Flying personnel: age 20 to 36. Initial training 1 year. 6 weeks with squadron each year and completion of 70 hours' flying. After 36 revert to ground duties with Air Force or Army.

Communications.—In 1957 there were 3,467 miles of railway (including tramways, rack railways, etc.) in operation. At Dec. 31, 1958, there were 37,459 miles of telegraph and telephone lines, 968,136 telephone subscribers and 4,049 post offices. There were 1,349,505 licensed radio receivers and 50,304 television receivers. At the end of 1958, the total length of first-class roads was 10,815 miles, the number of motor vehicles being 725,577 (386,417 private cars, 265,355 motor cycles and motor scooters, 2,932 buses, 69,785 trucks and 1,088 tractors). A merchant navy, established in 1940, consisted in 1958 of 23 vessels with a total displacement of 171,125 tons.

In addition, there were 409 vessels with a total tonnage of 335,900 engaged in Rhine shipping. In 1958 goods handled in Rhine traffic at Basle amounted to 6,868,010 tons; 108 lake vessels transported 8,832,000 passengers and 399,772 tons of freight in 1958. In 1958 Swissair flew 32,912,000 kilometres and carried 1,058,715 passengers.

Education.—Control by cantonal and communal authorities. No central organ. Illiteracy practically unknown. (i.) Primary: Free and compulsory. School age varies, generally 7 to 14. (ii.) Secondary: Age 12-15 for boys and girls. Schools numerous and well-attended, and there are many private institutions. (iii.) Special schools make a feature of commercial and technical instruction. (iv.) Universities: Basle (founded 1460), Berne (1834), Fribourg (1889), Geneva (1873), Lausanne (1890), Zürich (1832), and Neuchâtel (1909), and the technical University of Zürich and commercial University of St. Gall.

Language and Literature.—There are three official languages: French, German and Italian. In addition Romansch is recognized as a national, but not an official language. German is the dominating language in 19 of the 25 cantons; French in Fribourg, Geneva, Neuchâtel, Valais and Vaud; Italian in Ticino, and Romansch in parts of the Grisons. Many modern authors, alike in the German school and in the Suisse Romande, have achieved international fame. Karl Spitteler (1845-1924) and Hermann Hesse (1877-) were awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature, the former in 1919, the latter in 1947.

ROYAL THAI EMBASSY IN LONDON

21 Ashburn Place, S.W.7

[Frobisher: 2983]

Ambassador in London, His Excellency Mom Luang Peckdhip Malakul (1958).

Area and Population.—The Kingdom of Thailand, or Muang Thai, formerly known as Siam, has an area of 198,247 sq. miles with a population (estimated 1956) of 22,811,701. Thailand is in South-Eastern Asia. It has a common boundary with the Federation of Malaya in the south, and is bounded on the west and north-west by the Union of Burma and in the north-east and east by the Kingdoms of Laos and Cambodia, which were formerly part of the French Colony of Indo-China. Although there is no common boundary between Thailand and China, the Chinese province of Yunnan is only separated from the Thai northern border by a narrow stretch of Burmese and Lao territory. The country slopes southwards from the north-west and from the great mountains of Tibet. The principal rivers are the Salween (which forms a boundary with Burma for 200 miles), the Menam Chao Phya with its tributary the Meping (which are Thai throughout) and the Mekong and its tributaries, which water the eastern plateau.

Government.—Thailand is a sovereign independent state. Under the interim constitution promulgated in February, 1959, following on the bloodless revolution of October, 1958, the King exercises legislative power by and with the advice and consent of a Constituent Assembly, executive power through the Council of Ministers and judicial power through the courts established by law. He is advised by a Privy Council appointed by himself. The 240 members of the Constituent Assembly, who were appointed in February, 1959, under the terms of the interim constitution, as well as acting for the time being as the national legislature, have the additional task of drafting a permanent constitution for Thailand, but no definite date has yet been set for the completion of this.

Language, Religion and Education.—Thai is basically a monosyllabic, tonal language, a branch of the Indo-Chinese linguistic family. The principal religion is Buddhism, its followers numbering over 16 millions in 1953, with 627,435 Moslems and some 70,000 Christians. The 2,500th anniversary of the Buddhist Era was celebrated in Bangkok from May 12–15, 1957, with religious and public ceremonies. Primary education is compulsory and free and secondary education in Government Schools is free. In 1956 there were nearly 23,500 schools of all kinds, with about 3,500,000 pupils and 105,000 teachers. There are 5 Universities attended by about 27,000 students, 35 Training Colleges and 354 Vocational Schools (all types).

Production and Industry.—The country's most important products are agricultural or forest: rice (about 4,500,000 tons a year), rubber (about 130,000 tons a year) and timber (about 1,300,000 cubic metres a year). Other crops of some importance are sugarcane, tapioca, groundnuts, tobacco, maize, soya beans and coconuts.

As regards mineral wealth, tin (production about 10,000 tons a year) is important, and small amounts of wolfram, iron and lead ores are mined, and over 100,000 tons of lignite. Upwards of 200,000 tons a year of salt is produced by sea-water evaporation.

Local industries are relatively under-developed. They include cement, sugar, a little iron and steel, cigarettes, leather, glassware, ceramics, gunny bags, paper, textiles, marble, plywood and shaving board and tapioca. Cottage industries produce silk and cotton textiles in substantial quantity, and these and the local black-engraved (niello) silverware are popular with visitors.

Livestock in 1957 included 4,983,417 head of cattle; 5,938,077 buffaloes; 187,428 horses and mules; 3,738,672 pigs; and 72,000,000 poultry.

Communications.—About 2,250 miles of State-owned railways were open to traffic in 1958. The track is metre gauge. Main lines run from Bangkok to Aranya Pradet, linking up with the Cambodian state railway at this border town (160 miles E.); via Korat to Ubol (about 352 miles E.) and to Nongkhai (415 miles N.E.) the ferry terminal on the River Mekhong opposite Vientiane, capital of Laos; to Chiangmai (411 miles N.); and to Haadyai (600 miles S.), whence lines go down the eastern and western sides of the Malayan Peninsula, via Sungti Golok and Penang respectively, to Singapore.

In 1959 the country had about 6,000 miles of main, all-weather roads, of which about 1,000 miles might be termed first-class. A large road-building programme is under way. Bangkok is an international airport of importance, and services connect it with Europe, America, India, Pakistan, Japan and Australasia, as well as other parts of S.E. Asia. The Thai Airways Company also has internal services between Bangkok and all the principal towns. There are about 14,500 miles of telegraph lines. The harbour at Bangkok can take vessels up to 14,000 tons dead weight.

Budget Estimates	FINANCE

Since 1953 Thailand has received a total of U.S.$106,000,000 in loans from the International Bank for rehabilitation and development of railways, the port of Bangkok, and irrigation, including the latest loan (in 1957) of $66,000,000 for the Yan-Hee hydro-electric project.

The value of United States economic and technical aid to Thailand amounted by mid-1959 to U.S.$204,000,000 (including $27,000,000 in long-term loans), of which $115,000,000 had actually been disbursed up to mid-1958. In addition, the U.S.A. finances a military aid programme which has so far cost several hundred million dollars.

The exchange rate for the Baht is not officially fixed, but has for some time remained in the neighbourhood of Baht 59 = £1 sterling, with little fluctuation. Foreign exchange reserves are at present sufficient and steady, and the currency backing is 60 per cent.

Exports to U.K.....	342	3,714,278

Of the 1958 exports, rice, rubber, tin ore, and teak accounted for 76 per cent. of the value of all Thailand's exports. Other exports consisted mainly of salt, salted fish, live cattle and pigs, maize, tapioca, lac, hides, wolfram, soya beans, castor seed, groundnuts, and timber, other than teak. Main imports are textiles, metal manufactures, machinery, vehicles and transport equipment, chemicals and petroleum products.

CAPITAL, ΨBangkok (with Dhonburi), pop. 1956—1,773,318; in the delta of the Menam Chao Phya. Other centres are Chiangmai, Nakorn Sawan and Korat, but no other town approaches Bangkok in size or importance.

Area and Population.—Tunisia lies between Algeria and Libya and extends southwards to the Sahara Desert, with a total area of 45,000 sq. miles. A census held in connection with the preparation of electoral registers showed (Feb., 1956) a total population of 3,800,000 of whom 3,430,000 were Tunisians.

Government.—A French Protectorate from 1881 to 1956, Tunisia became an independent sovereign State with the signing on March 20, 1956, of an agreement whereby France recognized Tunisia's independence and right to conduct her own foreign policy and to form a Tunisian Army. Tunisia remains in the franc zone and in customs-union with France. Following a first general election held on March 25, 1956, a Constituent Assembly met for the first time on April 8. The United Kingdom formally recognized Tunisia as an independent and sovereign state on May 10, 1956. Negotiations on the interdependence of Tunisia and France have continued. On July 25, 1957, the Constituent Assembly deposed the Bey, abolished the monarchy and elected Mr. Bourguiba first President of the Republic. A few days later the Government was reconstructed on the "presidential" model, the Ministers becoming Secretaries of State. On June 1, 1959, the Constitution was promulgated.

Important changes in the system of local government were decreed on June 16, 1956. The country was divided into 14 regions each ruled by a Governor assisted by a Secretary-General.

Production and Trade.—The valleys of the northern region support large flocks and herds, and contain rich agricultural areas, in which wheat, barley, and oats are grown. The vine and olive are extensively cultivated. The chief exports are cereals, olive oil, phosphates, iron-ore, lead and derivatives, wines, etc., dates, etc.; the chief imports are textiles and other manufactures, iron, steel, machinery and provisions. Eighty per cent. of the trade is with France and Algeria. In 1955 the imports were valued at 63,276,000,000 Fr.

and the exports at 37,309,367,000 Fr. Imports from U.K. in 1958, £2,193,000; Exports to U.K., £4,754,222.

Currency.—A new currency, the Tunisian dinar, was adopted on Nov. 3, 1958. At the same time a new Central Bank of Tunisia became responsible for the issue of notes. The dinar stood at 1,175 frs. (French) on Dec. 30, 1958.

CAPITAL. Ψ Tunis, connected by canal with La Goulette on the coast, had a population (Municipal Council area) of 680,000 at the Census of 1956. The ruins of ancient Carthage lie a few miles from the city. Other towns of importance are Ψ Sfax (65,635), Ψ Sousse (48,172), Kairouan (33,968).

Area and Population.—The Turks belong to the Turanian Race, which comprises the Manchus and Mongols of North China, the Finns, and the Turks of Central Asia. Their numbers probably exceed 50,000,000, with the same language, religion and culture, but the actual Turkish State occupies only a small part of the area inhabited by the Turkish Race, the remainder being in Soviet Russia, China, Afghanistan and Persia. Under the Seljuks (Turkish rulers in Anatolia) the conquest of Asia Minor was completed in the 12th century. The Seljuks were succeeded, early in the 14th century, by the Osmanli dynasty, which remained in power until the War of 1914-18.

During the 15th, 16th and 17th centuries the Ottoman Empire was one of the strongest Powers in the world, extending from the Caspian Sea to the Adriatic and Hungary, and from the Indian Ocean to Morocco and the Sudan. It comprised Asia Minor, part of Russia, the Ukraine, the Crimea, the Balkan States and the whole of Arabia. The Black Sea, the Mediterranean, the Red Sea and the Aegean were dominated by Turkish ships, and the Ottoman dominions included not only the Byzantine Empire, but the greater part of the whole Roman Empire.

Turkey now extends from Adriatic to Transcaucasia and Persia, and from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean, Syria and Iraq. The sixth general census of population was held in October 1955. The results of the last four counts are:—

Year	Population
Oct., 1940.....	17,820,950
Oct., 1945.....	18,790,174
Oct., 1950.....	20,936,524
Oct., 1955.....	24,111,773

Turkey in Europe (9,256 sq. miles, population 2,262,023 in 1955) consists of Eastern Thrace, including the cities of Istanbul (Constantinople) and Edirne (Adrianople), and is separated from Asia by the Bosphorus at Istanbul and by the Dardanelles (Hellespont)—about 40 miles in length with a width varying from 2 to 4 miles—the political neighbours being Greece and Bulgaria on the west.

Turkey in Asia (285,246 sq. miles, population 21,849,755 in 1955), comprises the whole of Asia Minor or Anatolia ("Land of the Rising Sun" or Orient), and extends from the Aegean Sea to the western boundaries of Georgia, Soviet Armenia and Persia, and from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean and the northern boundaries of Syria and Iraq. The former Turkish Sanjak of Alexandretta (latterly known as the Republic of Hatay), was ceded by France on July 23, 1939, having formed part of Mandated Syria since 1922.

Government.—For two centuries before the War of 1914-18, disintegration had reduced the power and extent of the Turkish Empire, and after that War its boundaries were still further restricted, Iraq, Syria and Arabia passing into other hands. Sultan Mehmed VI., the last of the Osmanli rulers, fled from Constantinople to Malta on Nov. 20, 1922, and the Sultanate was abolished by the National Assembly. On Oct. 29, 1923,* the National Assembly declared Turkey a Republic and elected Gazi Mustafa Kemal (later known as Kemal Atatürk) President. The Grand National Assembly (Büyük Millet Meclisi or Kamutay) is a single-chamber legislature of 610 members, elected for four years by universal adult suffrage, and delegates its executive power to ministers acting in its name and responsible to it for their actions. In October, 1957 the Democrat Party was returned to power for the third time, but with a reduced majority. It now holds 412 seats out of 610. Turkey is divided for administrative purposes into 67 vilayet, with sub-divisions into kaza and nahiye. Vilayet have each a governor (wali) and elective council.

Religion and Education.—The majority of the inhabitants are Moslems. There are numerous Christians (of the Latin and Eastern rites) in Istanbul (Constantinople) and a considerable number of Jews. On April 20, 1928, the Grand National Assembly passed a law in virtue of which Islam ceased to be the State religion of the Republic. Education is compulsory, free, and secular. There are elementary, secondary and vocational schools.

In 1955 there were over 17,800 primary schools, with about 1,877,000 pupils. There are two universities at Istanbul (one being a Technical University), two at Ankara (including the recently-founded Middle East Technical University), one at Izmir and one at Erzurum (the Atatürk University). A fifth university is being built in Eastern Turkey. The expenditure allocated to education in the 1958 budget was £T476,554,258.

Language and Literature.—Osmanli or Ottoman Turkish is one of the Turanian languages spoken from Macedonia to Siberia. Until 1926 this language was written in Arabic script, but in that year the Roman alphabet was substituted for use in official correspondence and in 1928 for universal use, with Arabic numerals as used throughout Europe. Mainly as a consequence of this change the percentage of Turks who can read and write is rising steadily. Ancient Turkish literature aped the Arabic manner, but the revolution of 1908 was followed by a popular reaction against the writings of the past (which appealed only to a small class) and led to the introduction of a native literature free from foreign influences and adapted to the understanding of the people. The vehicle first employed was the newspaper, printed in the neo-Latin alphabet, with supplements for prose and dramatic fiction, poetry and literary criticism. The leading Turkish newspapers are centred in Ankara and Istanbul, although most provincial towns have their own daily papers. There are foreign language papers in French, Greek and English and numerous magazines and weeklies on various subjects.

Production and Industry.—Although it is estimated that 26 per cent. of the country is entirely unproductive and only 26 per cent. fully arable, agriculture provides a livelihood for 75 per cent. of the population and the economy is based extensively on the export of agriculture products. Agriculture is still largely primitive, but is being modernized at an accelerated pace. The principal crops are cereals, cotton, tobacco, sultanas and figs, pulses, oilseeds, valonea, hazel-nuts, opium, sugar beet, and many varieties of fruit. Since 1949, when there were only 4 sugar factories in Turkey, the country has become self-supporting in sugar. There are now 15 sugar factories, with a further 3 under construction. With the important exception of wheat, which is grown mostly on the arid Central Anatolian Plateau, most of the crops are grown on the fertile littoral. Tobacco, sultana and fig cultivation is centred at Izmir (Smyrna), where substantial quantities of cotton are also grown. The main cotton area is the Cukurova Plain around Adana. In 1958 it was estimated that there were more than 65,300,000 head of livestock, including camels, horses, donkeys and mules. Animal by-products include wool, hides and skins, and mohair. The forests which lie between the littoral plain and the Anatolian Plateau, contain beech, pine, oak, elm, chestnut, lime, plane, alder, box, poplar and maple. During recent years the Government has attempted, so far not altogether successfully, to combat the depredations of peasant and goat which threaten to destroy the existing forests within the next 25 years.

Turkey's second most important industry is based on her considerable mineral wealth, which is, however, as yet comparatively unexploited. The most important developments are in coal, lignite, iron ore and chrome mining and fair quantities of copper, manganese, lead and sulphur are also produced together with other minerals in only small quantities. Working mainly through the State-owned Eti (mining) and Sumer (industry) Banks, great strides have been made during recent years in industrializing the country. The share of private industry is increasing. Developments include the expansion of the iron and steel works at Karabuk and other factories and plants for the production of textiles, paper, pulp, cement, artificial silk, sugar, leather goods, glassware, heavy chemicals, artificial fertilizers, canned goods, wines and spirits, vegetable oils, soap and refined sulphur. Legislation was passed in 1954 to encourage the investment of foreign capital in Turkey and to permit the exploitation of Turkey's petroleum resources by foreign companies. At the end of 1958, 21 American, British, German and Turkish companies were prospecting for oil in Turkey. Production of oil by the Turkish Petroleum Administration, from the Raman-Garzan field in Eastern Turkey, amounted to 328,540 tons in 1958.

COMMUNICATIONS

Railways.—The complete network became the property of the State Railways Administration in 1948. The total length in operation is about 7,805 km. Construction, started in 1937 and at present in progress, includes the line to the Persian border (Elazığ-Kotur) the Iraq frontier line (Diyarbakır-Cizre), the conversion of the Erzurum-Sarikamis line from narrow gauge to normal, and various branch lines in the Gaziantep and Zonguldak areas. The total length of these additions is to be 1,776 km., of which about 350 km. have been completed at a cost of over £1125,000,000. A 15-year plan for the addition of a further 2,310 km. of railway at a cost of £1800,000,000, which was produced in 1947, has now been shelved—possibly because of the prior claims of the 9-year programme for the construction and improvement of roads and highways. Efforts are however being made to increase rolling stock and locomotives. During 1958 the railways carried 85,422,000 passengers, 15,000,000 tons of freight and 2,600,000 head of livestock.

Roads.—In September, 1948, a 9-year road construction programme was started, involving the construction, reconstruction, improvement and maintenance of a national highway system totalling 24,300 kilometres of all-weather standard roads. Much progress has been made with the help of mechanized road building equipment from American aid sources. At the end of 1957 there were 20,760 kilometres of road open to traffic throughout the year (13,328 km. in 1950), and 22,690 kilometres under regular maintenance. The total number of motor vehicles in 1958 was 86,104 (1950, 29,118).

Posts.—In 1952 there were 46,109 km. of telegraph lines, 2,097 post and telegraph offices. 121,603 telephones were in use in Turkey in 1956.

Shipping.—The strength of the Turkish Merchant Navy at the beginning of 1956 was 1,520 vessels totalling about 752,000 tons, of which just under half is owned by the State Shipping Administration.

Civil Aviation.—The State Airlines operate all internal services and have services to Athens, Beirut and Nicosia, while most of the leading foreign airlines, including British European Airways, operate services to Istanbul and some also to Ankara. The State Airlines fleet is composed of Vickers Viscounts, Dakotas and D.H. Herons. The airports at Istanbul, Ankara and Adana have been improved to P.I.A.C.O. (Class B) standard and a sum of £145,000,000 is being spent on ten other new airfields in Turkey. In addition, nine military airfields, costing £160,000,000, are being constructed by N.A.T.O.

The imports include iron and steel, machinery and spares, petroleum products, cotton textiles, wool and woollen yarns, agricultural machinery, locomotives, motor vehicles and pharmaceuticals: the exports include tobacco, cotton, dried fruit, livestock, chrome oilseeds, opium and valonea.

The principal imports from United Kingdom are iron and steel goods, machinery, tractors, motor lorries and chemicals; the principal exports to United Kingdom are tobacco, mohair, nuts, figs and raisins.

CAPITAL OF TURKEY, ANKARA (Angora), an inland town of Asia Minor, about 200 miles E.S.E. of Istanbul, with a population (1955 census) of 353,170 and now estimated to exceed 500,000. Ankara (or Ancyra) was the capital of the Roman Province of Galatia Prima, and a marble temple (now in ruins), dedicated to Augustus, contains the Monumentum (Marmor) Ancyranum, inscribed with a record of the reign of Augustus Caesar. A new city has been laid out on modern lines, with parks, statues and avenues. ISTANBUL (Constantinople), the former capital, was the Roman city of Byzantium, and was selected by Constantine the Great as the capital of the Roman Empire about A.D. 338, and renamed by him; it became capital of the Eastern Roman Empire in A.D. 364; population (1955) 1,032,341. Istanbul contains the celebrated Mosque of St. Sophia, since 1934 a museum of Byzantine and Turkish art. Constitution.—The United Arab Republic came into being on Feb. 1, 1958, and the union of Egypt and Syria was confirmed by a plebiscite held simultaneously in Egypt and Syria. A provisional constitution, based on 17 principles was announced on Feb. 5, under which legislative authority in the Republic was to be vested in a National Assembly chosen by the President, with the condition that half its members would be selected from the existing Egyptian and Syrian Chambers. Executive power is vested in the President, assisted by Ministers appointed by himself. The President will select heads of Regional Councils. The provisional constitution included statements that the Republic would be a "Presidential democracy" with a common flag, common people and a common army; it provided that all laws in Egypt and Syria would remain valid within the districts prescribed for them at the time of issue, though subject to later modification or annulment; private property would be safeguarded and not subject to confiscation without due compensation; existing public services and administration would remain as they are until re-organized by Presidential decree; the independence of the judiciary would be guaranteed and all international treaties concluded by Egypt and Syria would remain valid. The 17 provisions were expanded on March 5, when a list of 75 articles was proclaimed, including a new provision that the President could dismiss one or more vice-presidents and that the National Assembly would have the right to pass a vote of no confidence in a Minister. Four Vice-Presidents were nominated on March 6, together with the new Cabinet.

CAPITAL OF THE UNITED ARAB REPUBLIC.—Cairo (pop. 2,100,486).

FLAG.—Three horizontal stripes of black, white and red with two green stars in the white stripe.

United Arab States.—On March 8, 1958, a federal agreement between the United Arab Republic and the Kingdom of the Yemen was signed in Cairo. The Yemen joined the United Arab Republic in a federation to be known as the United Arab States and intended to include other Arab countries. Each state would preserve its own system of government; defence and foreign policy would be unified and economic policies co-ordinated; a customs union and a common currency would be established; common councils would be set up for various purposes. The Federal Council, a permanent body, consisting of six representatives of each member state, would have its seat at Hodeida and would also meet on occasion in Cairo or Damascus.

EGYPT

AREA AND POPULATION.—The total area of Egypt is estimated at 1,000,000 square kilometres (386,110 square miles), the inhabited area being only 35,168 square kilometres (13,578 square miles), with a population enumerated in June, 1954, at 22,651,000 (including nomads).

There are three distinct elements in the native population. The largest, or "Egyptian" element, is a Hamito-Semitic race, known in the rural districts as Fellahin (fellāh—ploughman, or tiller of the soil). The Fellahin have been mainly of the Moslem faith since the conquest of the country in the 7th century, but there are about 1,000,000 Coptic and Greek Orthodox Christians in Egypt. A second element is the Bedouin, or nomadic Arabs of the Libyan and Arabian deserts, of whom about one-seventh are real nomads, and the remainder semi-sedentary tent-dwellers on the outskirts of the cultivated end of the Nile Valley and the Fayūm. The third element is the Nubian of the Nile Valley between Aswān and Wadi-Halfa, of mixed Arab and negro blood. The Bedouin and Nubians are Moslems.

The territory of Egypt comprises (1) Egypt Proper, forming the N.E. corner of the African continent, divisible into (a) the valley and delta of the Nile, (b) the Libyan or Western Desert, and (c) the Arabian or Eastern Desert; (2) The Peninsula of Sinai, forming part of the continent of Asia; and (3) a number of Islands in the Gulf of Suez and Red Sea, of which the principal are Jubal, Shadwan, Gafatin and Zeberged (or St. John's Island). This territory lies between 22° and 32° N. lat. and 24° and 37° E. long. The northern boundary is the Mediterranean, and in the south Egypt is coterminous with the Sudan. The western boundary runs from a point on the coast 20 kilometres N.W. of Sollūm to the latitude of Siwa and thence due S. along the 25th meridian to the parallel of 22° N. (the N. boundary of the Sudan) at 'Uweināt Mountain. The E. boundary follows a line drawn from Rafa on the Mediterranean (34° 15' E. long.) to the head of the Gulf of Aqaba, from which point the remainder of the E. boundary is washed by the waters of the Gulf of Aqaba and the Red Sea. The "settled land area" is stated officially at 7,667,000 feddāns (12,431 square miles) and the area of lakes at 641,000 feddāns (1,039 square miles), a total of 8,308,000 feddāns (13,470 square miles).

Physical Features.—The Nile valley varies in width from less than half a mile in the southern granitic region to over 20 miles in the northern limestone region, and the cliffs in some places rise to heights of over a thousand feet above the river. The fertile lands, on which the prosperity of the country depends, occupy the floor of the valley between the river and the bounding cliffs, while to the north of Cairo they spread out into the irregular fan-shaped formation of the Delta which comprises the six provinces of Lower Egypt, with the richest soil in the country. The Nile has a total length of 4,160 miles. In the 960 miles of its course through Egypt it receives not a single tributary stream. The river has a regular yearly rise and fall, attaining its maximum level about the middle of September and its minimum about the end of May. At Cairo the average rise and fall is about 13 feet. Westward from the Nile Valley into Tripoli stretches the Libyan Desert, an arid region, containing some depressions, whose springs irrigate small areas known as Oases, of which the principal, from S.E. to N.W., are known as Kharga, Dakhla, Farafra, Baharia, and Siwa. On the eastern edge of the Libyan Desert, a few miles south-west of Cairo stand the Pyramids of Giza, of which the highest, the Great Pyramid, is 451 feet high. Close to the pyramids is the Great Sphinx, 189 feet long. In the Eastern Desert a great backbone of high and rugged mountains extends north-westwards from Ethiopia to near Suez, and reappears as a detached mass in the Peninsula of Sinai. Flanking this mountain chain on the west, between the axis of the range and the Nile, are plateaux of sandstones and limestones, dissected by wadis (dry water-courses), often of great length and depth, with some wild vegetation and occasional wells and springs. The roads follow the course of the main wadis from well to well, and here and there are to be found small encampments of wandering Arabs.

Religions.—At the Census of 1947 there were 19,037,984 Moslems, 1,273,371 Coptic and Greek Orthodox Christians, 50,200 Roman Catholics, 103,256 other Christians (Protestant and Reformed Churches), and 65,639 Jews. The chief Moslem religious authorities in Egypt are the Sheik al Gami el Azhar and the Mufti al Diyar al Misriyyah.

Government.—From 30 B.C. to A.D. 639 Egypt was a province of the Roman Empire, but in A.D. 640 the Christian inhabitants were subjugated by Moslem invaders, and Egypt became a province of the Eastern Caliphate. In 1517 the country was incorporated in the Ottoman Empire and was governed by pashas sent from Constantinople until the beginning of the 18th century, when for about 100 years the ruler was chosen from among the Mamelukes, or bodyguard. Mohammed Ali, who was proclaimed Pasha in 1805, exterminated the Mamelukes in 1811 and was eventually made hereditary governor of Egypt and the Sudan by a firman from the Sultan of June 1, 1841.

In 1882, a military revolt, headed by an officer of the Egyptian Army (Ahmed Arābi Pasha), assumed alarming proportions and a British expedition was despatched to re-establish the authority of the Khedive. Meanwhile a revolt had broken out in the southern provinces, headed by Sheikh Mohammed Ahmed, of Dongola, who proclaimed himself a Mahdi of Islam, and the British expeditionary force, sent to quell the rebellion of 1882, remained in the country as an army of occupation until 1936 (see below).

During the War of 1914-18 a British Protectorate over Egypt was declared (Dec. 18, 1914) and Khedive Abbas Hilmi was deposed. He was succeeded by Hussein Kamel, with the title of Sultan, who died Oct. 9, 1917, being succeeded by his brother, Ahmed Fuad. The British Protectorate terminated on Feb. 28, 1922, and Sultan Ahmed Fuad was proclaimed King of Egypt. Following closely on the accession of King Farouk, the Anglo-Egyptian Treaty was signed in London (Aug. 26, 1936); the military occupation by British troops was terminated and Ambassadors were duly accredited at the Courts of St. James's and Cairo.

The security of Egypt was threatened after the outbreak of war in 1939 and reinforcements were sent from Britain and the Dominions. Axis troops invaded Egypt in 1940 and fierce fighting ensued, with Allied victories and reverses, until the decisive victory in "The Battle of Egypt" (Oct.-Nov. 1942) drove the enemy out of the country. In July, 1952, following a military coup d'état, King Farouk abdicated in favour of his infant son, who became King Ahmed Fuad II. In June, 1953, however, Gen. Neguib's military council deposed the young king, and declared Egypt a Republic. Gen. Neguib himself assuming the Presidency. In November, 1954, General Neguib was deposed by Lt.-Col. Gamal Abdel Nasser and the military council. On June 23, 1956, Col. Nasser assumed office as President, after an election at which voting was compulsory, and he was the only candidate. Following the establishment of the United Arab Republic (see above), Col. Nasser was elected its first President on Feb. 22, 1958.

Agriculture.—The principal crops grown during Saifi (summer) are cotton, rice, sugar cane, and sorgho (maize). Nili (flood) part of Saifi, has the date of its commencement fixed by the Irrigation Department according to the quantities of water available before the flood, which reaches its highest level in September—it generally begins in July; the principal crops are maize and rice, Chiuwi (winter) begins in November and ends in June; the principal crops are cereals, bersim (a variety of clover) and—mainly in Upper Egypt—beans, lentils, onions and helba.

Railways.—The principal lines radiate from Cairo to Alexandria (and on to Rosetta), Damietta and Ismailia (continuing northwards to Port Said and southward to Suez). From Cairo the line runs southwards for a distance of 554 miles to Shellal, the First Cataract. At this point a steamer connection runs to Wadi Halfa, connecting the Egyptian State with the Sudan Government Railways. Westwards from Alexandria (and close to the coast) runs a line to the frontier at Sollüm, thus joining Tripoli to Egypt. The gauge is standard (4 ft. 8½ in.). There are two other State-owned lines in Egypt, namely, the Auxiliary Railways of Upper Egypt, consisting of 282 miles of standard gauge, and the Western Oases Railways, a length of 141 miles (75 centimetre gauge) connecting the oasis of Kharga with the Nile Valley. In addition to the Government lines, there are 883 miles of light railways exploited by public companies.

Roads and Caravan Routes.—A sea coast motor road exists from Alexandria to Mersa Matruh, with an extension along the coast to Sollüm and thence to connect with the coast road in Libya. The principal caravan routes lead to the Oases of the Libyan Desert (though Kharga can now be reached by train), whence there is a route, known as the Darb el 'Arbain, leading to Dar Für and the south of the Sudan. There are many well-known routes across the Arabian Desert to the Red Sea, that from Qena to Qoseir being probably the most frequently used.

Shipping.—Ψ Apart from the three great seaports of Alexandria, Port Said and Suez, Egypt has but few harbours and anchorages adapted for large craft; the principal are those of Sollüm and Matruh on the Mediterranean, Tor, Abu Zenima, Zeitia, Jemsa and Hurgada in the Gulf of Suez, and Safaga and Qoseir on the Red Sea.

Currency.—£E (Egyptian pound of 100 piastres) = £1 os. 6½d. sterling. Rate of Exchange—(Buying) Piastres 97.40 = £1; (Selling) Piastres 97.60 = £1. (See also p. 84.)

	1955
Total Imports	£E182,266,000
Domestic Exports	336,995,000
	1957	1958
Imports from U.K.	£2,295,050	£12,806,527
Exports to U.K.	733,470	2,016,878

The principal imports are textiles, metals, and manufactures thereof, coal and coke, chemicals, machinery, vehicles, foodstuffs, timber and wood and paper. The exports are principally raw cotton, rice, mineral products and onions.

CAIRO, the capital (population 1947, 2,100,486) stands on the E. bank of the Nile, about 14 miles from the head of the Delta. Its oldest part is the fortress of Babylon in old Cairo, with its Roman bastions and Coptic churches. The earliest Arab building is the Mosque of 'Amr, dating from A.D. 643, and the most conspicuous is the Citadel, built by Saladin towards the end of the 12th century.

Ψ ALEXANDRIA (POP. 1947, 928,237), founded 332 B.C. by Alexander the Great, was for over 1,000 years the capital of Egypt and a centre of Hellenic culture which vied with Athens herself. Its great pharos (lighthouse), 480 feet high, with a lantern burning resinous wood, was one of the "Seven Wonders of the World." Other towns are: Tanta (139,965), Ψ Port Said (178,432), Mansura (102,709), Asyût (90,378), Falyûm (74,314), Zagazig (82,912), Mahalla el Kubra (115,509), Damanhur (84,983), Minya (69,667), Ψ Suez (108,250), Beni Suef (57,464), Ψ Damietta (68,520), Giza (53,620).

FLAG: Green, with white crescent (convex side to flagstaff), and three 5-pointed white stars (arranged in an equilateral triangle) between the horns.

CAIRO is 2,540 miles from London: transit via Trieste, 5 days; via Marseilles, 6 days.

SYRIA

Area and Population.—The Republic of Syria is in the Levant, covering a portion of the former Ottoman Empire, with an estimated area of 70,800 sq. miles and a population (1954) of 3,655,904. Arabic speaking and mainly Moslems. Syria includes the districts of Damascus, Aleppo, Homs, Hama, Lattakieh, Deir-ez-zor, Hassetché, Soueida (Jebel Druze) and Deraa. It is bounded on the north by Turkey, on the east by Iraq, on the south by Jordan and Israel, and on the west by the Lebanon and thence northwards by the Mediterranean to the Turkish frontier. The Orontes flows northwards from the Lebanon range across the northern boundary to Antioch (Turkey). The Euphrates crosses the northern boundary near Jerablus and flows through north-eastern Syria to the boundary of Iraq.

Archaeology, etc.—Syria is rich in historical remains. Damascus (Dimishq ash-Sham) is the most ancient city in the world, having an existence as a city for over 4,000 years. It is situated on the river Abana (now known as Barada), in an oasis at the eastern foot of the Anti-Lebanon, and at the edge of the wide sandy desert which stretches to the Euphrates. The city contains the Omayyad Mosque, the Tomb of Saladin, and the "Street Called Straight" (Acts ix, 12), while to the North-East is the Roman outpost of Dmeir and further east is Palmyra.

On the Mediterranean coast at Amrit are ruins of the Phœnician town of Marath, where the tell has been found and is being excavated and also ruins of Crusaders' fortresses at Markab, Sahyoun, and Krak des Chevaliers. At Tartous (also on the coast) the cathedral of Our Lady of Syria, built by the Knight Templars in the XII-XIII century is being restored as a museum.

Hittite cities, dating from 2,000 to 1,500 B.C., have recently been explored on the west bank of the Euphrates at Terablus and Kadesh and also on the Orontes at Atchara, near Antioch.

Government.—Syria, which had been under French mandate since the 1914-18 war, became an independent Republic during the 1939-45 war. The first independently elected Parliament met on August 27 1943, but foreign troops were in part occupation until April, 1946. Syria remained an independent Republic until February, 1958, when it became part of the United Arab Republic (see above).

Production and Industry.—Agriculture is the principal source of production; wheat and barley are the main cereal crops, but the cotton crop is the highest in value. Tobacco is grown in the maritime plain in Sahel, the Sahyoun and the Djebieh district of Lattakia; skins and hides, leather goods, wool and silk, textiles, cement, vegetable oil and copper and brass utensils are locally produced. Mineral wealth is small and oil prospecting has not proved successful, but some revenue is derived from the Kirkuk-Banias oil pipeline and the pipeline from the oilfields of Saudi-Arabia to Sidon in Lebanon (Tapline).

Language and Literature.—Arabic is the principal language (see Arabia), but a few villages still speak Aramaic, the language spoken by Christ and the Apostles. There are 25 daily newspapers and 30 periodicals in Arabic published in Damascus and 17 daily newspapers and 25 periodicals in the provinces.

Education.—Education in Syria is under State control and, although many of the schools are privately owned, they all follow a common system and syllabus. Elementary education is free at State Schools, and is compulsory from the age of seven. Secondary education is not compulsory and is free only at the State Schools. Because of the shortage of places, entry to these State Schools is competitive. The Syrian University, founded in 1924, has faculties of law, medicine, engineering, science arts and a Higher Teachers' Training College. Approximately 10 per cent. of all students receive scholarships, and at the present time Palestinian refugees are admitted free. The rest pay fees.

Communications.—A narrow-gauge railway runs from Beirut in the Lebanon to Damascus, connecting at Rayak (Lebanon) with the standard-gauge line which runs from Tripoli (in the Lebanon) through Homs, Hama and Aleppo to the Turkish frontier, from Nusaybin to the Iraq frontier at Tel Kotchek. From Damascus the Hejaz railway runs southwards to Jordan. All the principal towns in the country are connected by roads of varying quality. The trans-desert route from Damascus to Baghdad is covered by the Nairn Bus Service in fourteen hours. A small internal air service operates between Damascus and Aleppo, and between Aleppo and Qamichliyé, and Aleppo, Lattakia and Damascus.

Currency.—The monetary unit is the Syrian paper pound (£Syr.). In February 1955, the Syrian gold pound was returned to circulation at an official rate of £Syr. 26.75. The official rates of exchange are £Syr. 6.23=£1 sterling, buying, and £Syr. 6.19=£1 sterling, selling. The free market rate is used for all ordinary commercial transactions. In May, 1956, it was approximately £Syr. 9.8=£1 sterling. (See also p. 84.)

TRADE

Principal Imports.—Gold, textiles, petroleum products, vehicles, agricultural equipment, machinery of all kinds and electrical material, base metals and wares thereof, chemicals and pharmaceuticals, wood and its manufactures, live animals and animal products, vegetable products, rubber products.

Principal Exports.—Textile materials and manufactures (including raw cotton and wool), cereals and vegetable products, live animals and animal products, raw hides and skins, prepared foods, gold.

The value of Syria's foreign trade at the free rate of exchange, was:—

	1955
Imports.....	£ Syr. 676,887,000
Exports.....	430,528,000
	1957 1958
Imports from U.K.....	£4,895,871 £7,911,106
Exports to U.K.....	1,788,085 1,415,812

CHIEF TOWNS.—Damascus (population 372,708) is the capital of Syria, other important towns being Aleppo (population 380,919), Homs (261,904) and Hama (155,671), and the principal port of the Syrian Republic is ΨLattakia (105,363). The principal town of Jebel Druze is Soueida (Black), built in mid-19th century by refugees from Lebanon from stones of the ruined Nabatean city of Soada and of blocks of local black basalt.

SYRIAN FLAG: Green over white, over black horizontal bands, with three red stars on central white band.

Secretary and Consul, Señor Don Carlos A. Ghiringhelli.

Area and Population.—The smallest Republic in South America, on the east coast of the Río de la Plata, situate in lat. 30°–35° S. and long. 53° 25'–57° 42' W., with an area of 72,180 square miles, and an estimated population of 3,000,000, almost entirely white and predominantly of Spanish and Italian descent. Most Uruguayans are Roman Catholics. There is complete freedom of religion and no church is established by the State.

Physical Features.—The country consists mainly (and particularly in the south and west) of undulating grassy plains. The principal chains of hills are the Cuchilla del Haedo, which cross the Brazilian boundary and extend southwards to the Cuchilla Grande of the south and east. In no case do the peaks exceed 2,000 feet. The principal river is the Río Negro (with its tributary the Yi), flowing from north-east to south-west into the Río Uruguay. The boundary river Uruguay is navigable from its estuary to Salto, about 200 miles north, and the Negro is also navigable for a considerable distance. Smaller rivers are the Cuareim, Yaguaron, Santa Lucia, Queguay, and the Cebollati. On the south-east coast are several lagoons, and the north-east boundary crosses (the Brazilian) Lake Merin. The climate is reasonably healthy, with great uniformity of temperature, the summer heat being tempered by the breezes of the Atlantic. The winter is, on the whole, mild, but cold spells, characterized by icy winds from the South Polar regions, are experienced in June, July and August. Rainfall is regular throughout the year, but there are occasional droughts.

Government.—Uruguay—or the Banda Oriental, as this territory lying on the eastern bank of the Uruguay River was then called—resisted all attempted invasions of the Portuguese and Spaniards until the beginning of the 17th century, and 100 years later the Portuguese settlements were captured by the Spaniards. From 1726–1814 the country formed part of Spanish South America and underwent many vicissitudes during the Wars of Independence. In 1814 the armies of the Argentine Confederation captured the capital and annexed the province, and it was afterwards annexed by Portugal and became a province of Brazil. In 1825, the country threw off the Brazilian yoke. This action led to war between Argentina and Brazil, which was settled by the mediation of the United Kingdom, Uruguay being declared an independent state in 1828. In 1830 a Republic was inaugurated.

A new Constitution was approved and brought into force on March 1, 1952, whereby the executive power is discharged by a National Council of State composed of nine members, elected every four years and assisted by nine ministers. The members of the National Council of State are eligible for re-election after four years have elapsed since the date on which their mandate ceased. The Legislature consists of a Chamber of 99 deputies and of a Senate of 30 members, elected for four years by all adult male and female citizens who can read and write. Elections for the National Council of State and the legislature took place in November, 1958. They were won by the Partido Nacional after 93 years in opposition and the new government took office on March 1, 1959.

The Republic is divided into 19 Departments each with a chief of police and a Departmental Council. The most important cities of the interior are Salto and Paysandu, both situated on the River Uruguay, which forms the main line of division from Argentina.

Production and Industry.—Wheat, barley, maize, linseed, sunflower seed and rice are cultivated. The wealth of the country is obtained from its pasturage, which supports large herds of cattle and sheep, the wool of which is of excellent quality. The 1956 livestock census showed figures of 8,154,109 cattle, 22,954,230 sheep, 667,251 horses, 258,980 hogs, 5,568,451 poultry and 511,547 milch cows. In addition to the meat packing industry, textiles and wine and beer are of importance. The development of local industry continues and during and since the Second World War, in addition to the greatly augmented textile industry, marked expansion in local production is notable in respect of tyres, sheet-glass, three-ply wood, cement, leather-curing, beet-sugar, edible oils and the refining of petroleum and petroleum products. There are no mineral deposits of importance.

Communications.—There are about 5,000 miles of national highways, and about 7,508 miles of telegraph, with 48,375 miles of telephones.

In 1955 there were about 1,828 miles of standard gauge railway in use in Uruguay. A national Corporation was formed to administer the railway systems purchased by the Government from four British companies in 1948.

Civil aviation is developing rapidly. An internal airline, PLUNA, which is now owned by the State, runs a daily passenger and limited freight service to the principal capitals of the interior, and has recently extended its services to Southern Brazil, Paraguay, Bolivia and Argentina. International passenger and freight services are maintained by American, South American and European airlines. The airport of Carrasco lies 12 miles outside Montevideo.

Education and Social Services.—Uruguay is one of the most advanced of the South American states, with old-age pensions, maternity and child welfare centres, accident insurance, etc. Primary education is compulsory and free, with about 250,000 pupils in 1,800 state schools and technical and trade schools, and evening courses for adult education. In 1957 there were 50,650 pupils in secondary schools including 9,700 in the 11 State liceos of the capital. The University at Montevideo (founded in 1849) had, in 1950, 8,540 students enrolled in its ten faculties.

Language and Literature.—Spanish is the language of the Republic. Modern literature has provided some authors with international reputations and the literature of Spain is accessible in all public libraries. Over one-third of the nation lives in the capital and all the main daily newspapers are published there.

FINANCE

The Budget Estimate for 1958 was Pesos 731,000,000.

Internal Debt (April, 1959).....1,473,219,538
External Debt (April, 1959).....87,696,162

The monetary unit is the peso, which by law is nominally 0.885 grammes fine gold, or the equivalent of U.S. $1.519. The circulating medium is, however, the paper peso, at present linked with the U.S. dollar and the £ sterling at multiple rates giving the peso an average value of around 3s. There is a free financial market for dealings in dollars and other currencies. The rate for the £ in Dec. 1958 was about pesos 26.59 (buying) and for the U.S. dollar pesos 9.50 (buying).

AREA AND POPULATION

The U.S.S.R. is now composed of 15 Union-Republics (see below). Before the outbreak of the war of 1939-45 the U.S.S.R. consisted of 11 Republics—the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic (R.S.F.S.R.) and the Ukrainian, Belorussian, Armenian, Azerbaïdjan, Georgian, Turkmenian, Uzbek, Tadjik, Kazakh and Kirghiz Soviet Socialist Republics. After the collapse of Poland in September, 1939, the Soviet Government by agreement with Germany seized five-eighths of Poland's territory, the so-called Western Ukraine and Western Belorussia, subsequently incorporated into the Ukrainian and Belorussian Republics respectively.

In March, 1940, some territories ceded by Finland under the 1940 Treaty were joined to the Karelian Autonomous Soviet Socialist Republic to form a Karelo-Finnish S.S.R. which became the 14th constituent Republic of the U.S.S.R., while others, including the town of Viipuri (Vyborg), were added to the R.S.F.S.R. Similarly, in August of the same year, the major part of Bessarabia ceded by Roumania in June was joined to the Moldavian A.S.S.R. to form a Moldavian S.S.R., as the 13th Soviet Republic, while a smaller part of Bessarabia, including the Danube estuary port of Izmail, and Northern Bukovina, also ceded by Roumania, became part of the Ukraine. The new Soviet-Roumanian frontier was confirmed by the 1947 Peace Treaty with Roumania.

In August, 1940, the three independent Baltic States, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania, were forcibly incorporated into the Soviet-Union to form the 14th, 15th and 16th Republics respectively. In June, 1945, Ruthenia was ceded by Czechoslovakia and became part of the Ukrainian S.S.R. under the name of Transcarpathia. After the defeat of Germany, a part of East Prussia with its capital Königsberg (renamed Kaliningrad in July, 1946) became part of the R.S.F.S.R., while the port and district of Memel (Klaipeda) was incorporated into the Lithuanian S.S.R. By the 1947 Peace Treaty with Finland, the district of Petsamo (Pechenga) was added to the territory of the R.S.F.S.R. In the Far East, the southern half of Sakhalin and the whole of the Kurile Islands were incorporated into the last-named Republic in 1945, after the defeat of Japan. In October, 1944, Tannu-Tuva, until the war of 1939-45 a nominally independent state lying to the N.W. of Outer Mongolia, became the autonomous province of Tuva within the R.S.F.S.R.

In July, 1956, the Karelo-Finnish Republic reverted to the status of an Autonomous (Karelian) Republic within the R.S.F.S.R.

Area and population (according to the 1959 census) of the constituent Republics of the U.S.S.R. (with their capitals):—

Republic	Sq. miles	Population
I. R.S.F.S.R. (Moscow).....	6,593,391	117,494,000
II. Ukraine (Kiev)....	232,046	41,893,000
III. Belorussia (Minsk). .	80,154	8,060,000
IV. Uzbekistan (Tashkent).....	158,069	8,113,000
V. Kazakhstan (Alma-Ata).....	1,064,092	9,301,000
VI. Georgia (Tbilisi)...	26,911	4,049,000
VII. Azerbaidjan (Baku)	33,436	3,700,000
VIII. Lithuania (Vilnius).	26,173	2,713,000
IX. Moldavia (Kishinev).....	13,012	2,880,000
X. Latvia (Riga).....	24,695	2,094,000
XI. Kirghizia (Frunze).	76,642	2,063,000

XIV. Turkmenistan (Ashkhabad)....	188,417	1,520,000
XV. Estonia (Tallinn)...	17,413	1,196,000
Total.....	8,599,776	208,826,000

The net increase of population since the 1939 census amounts to only 18,100,000. Assuming a theoretical average annual rise of 3,000,000 (at present the annual rise is 3,500,000), the net increase between 1939 and 1959 should have amounted to about 60,000,000. The deficit of 42,000,000 is the measure of direct and indirect losses suffered by the Soviet people as a result of the war and the deportation policies of the Government. The age-groups of young people born between 1942 and 1946 are abnormally thin.

Geographically, the growth of the population has been very uneven. There has been a steady shift eastwards. Thus, while the total population has increased since 1939 by 9.5 per cent., that of the Urals has risen by 32 per cent.; of Western Siberia, by 24 per cent.; of Eastern Siberia, by 34 per cent.; of the Far East, by 70 per cent.; of Central Asia and Kazakhstan, by 38 per cent. Two Republics on the Western fringes of the Union, *Belorussia and *Lithuania, have actually suffered a net loss of population (844,000 and 167,000 resp.).

Another demographic feature is the growing urbanization. While in 1939 the proportion of urban population was 32 per cent. of the total,* in 1959 it has reached 48 per cent., owing to migration into towns, growth of new towns, incorporation of villages into conurbations and a higher birth-rate in urban areas. There are now 25 towns with over 500,000 (11 in 1939).

The proportion of women to men is 55 to 45 per cent. There is a high incidence of marriages (12 per mille), a high birth-rate (25 per mille) and a low mortality-rate (7.5 per mille).

The composition of the population by nationality has not been made public by August, 1959.

CONSTITUTION

Under the 1936 ("Stalin") Constitution, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is "a socialist state of workers and peasants" (§ 1) in which "all power belongs to the working people as represented by the Soviets [Councils] of Working People's Deputies" (§ 3), while its economy is based on "the socialist ownership of the instruments and means of production" (§ 4). "The land, its mineral wealth, waters, forests, mills, factories, mines, rail, water and air transport, banks, communications, large state-organized agricultural enterprises, as well as municipal enterprises and the bulk of dwelling-houses in the cities and industrial localities, are state property" (§ 6), while "the joint enterprises of collective farms and co-operative organizations . . . constitute the common, socialist property of the collective farms and co-operative organizations" (§ 7). "The law [also] permits the small private economy of individual peasants and handicraftsmen based on their own labour and precluding the exploitation of the labour of others" (§ 9). "The personal property right of citizens in their incomes and savings from work, in their dwelling-houses and subsidiary home enterprises, in household articles . . . as well as the right of citizens to inherit personal property, is protected by law" (§ 10). The whole economic life, however, is subordinated to the state economic plan (§ 11).

The U.S.S.R. is a federal state, "formed on the basis of a voluntary union of equal Soviet Socialist Republics" (§ 13); every Republic has "the right to secede from the U.S.S.R." (§ 17).

"The highest organ of state power in the U.S.S.R. is the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R." (§ 30) which exercises exclusively the legislative power (§ 32). It consists of two Chambers, the Soviet of the Union (elected on the basis of one deputy for every 300,000 of the population) and the Soviet of Nationalities (elected at the ratio of 25 deputies from each Union Republic, 11 from each Autonomous Republic, 5 from each Autonomous Province and 1 from each National Territory) (§§ 33-35). The Supreme Soviet which, as a rule, meets 4 to 5 times a year for about a week, delegates most of its power to its Presidium which acts as a kind of collective President of the U.S.S.R. between the sessions.

"The highest executive and administrative organ of state power is the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R." (§ 64). It is appointed by the Supreme

* Within present borders.

Soviet (§ 70) and is accountable to it, or, in the intervals between the sessions, to its Presidium (§ 65).

The Supreme Court of the U.S.S.R. and the Special Courts of the U.S.S.R., are elected by the Supreme Soviet for a term of five years (§ 104). Similarly, the Procurator-General, who exercises "supreme supervisory power to ensure the strict observance of law" (§ 113), is appointed by the Supreme Soviet for a term of seven years.

Citizens of the U.S.S.R., have the right to work, to rest and leisure, to maintenance in old age and sickness and disability relief and to education (§§ 118-121). "Women are accorded equal rights with men" (§ 122). Citizens are accorded equal rights irrespective of their nationality or race (§ 123). The citizens are also guaranteed freedom of speech, of the press, of assembly and of street processions and demonstrations, "in conformity with the interests of the working people and in order to strengthen the socialist system" (§ 125).

Section 126 of the Constitution is remarkable for containing the only reference to the real master of the country, the Communist Party. It says that the citizens of the U.S.S.R. "are guaranteed the right to unite in public organizations, trade-unions, co-operative societies, youth organizations, sport and defence organizations, cultural, technical and scientific societies," and that "the most active and politically conscious citizens in the ranks of the working class and other sections of the working people unite in the Communist Party of the Soviet-Union, which is the vanguard of the working people in their struggle to strengthen and develop the socialist system and is the leading core of all organizations of the working people, both public and state."

Local Government.—The State power in regions, provinces, autonomous provinces, territories, districts, towns and rural localities is vested in the Soviets of Working People's Deputies (§94), elected by the working people of the respective administrative units for a term of two years (§95). The executive and administrative organ of a Soviet is its Executive Committee elected by it (§99). The Union Republics and the Autonomous Republics have Supreme Soviets and Councils of Ministers of their own (§§ 57-63 and 79-88), although their jurisdiction is severely circumscribed in favour of the central Government. Since February, 1944, the Union Republics have had the right to enter into direct relations with foreign states and to conclude agreements and exchange diplomatic and consular representatives with them (§ 18A). So far, however, the only important activity of this kind has been the individual membership of the Ukraine and of Belorussia in the United Nations Organization. Similarly, the 1944 law allowing each Union Republic to possess its own Republican military formations (§ 18B) seems to have remained a paper provision.

The Union Republics possess Ministries of their own for internal affairs, certain branches of heavy and light industry, agriculture, public health, trade, finance and the like. The work of these Ministries is co-ordinated by respective federal Ministries and/or the Gosplan. The Union Republics possess exclusive jurisdiction over such matters as motor transport, housing, social security, municipal affairs, local industry, education and, since 1956, inland water transport and justice. The general trend lately has been toward progressive administrative decentralization or, rather, "de-concentration," particularly in industrial matters.

Religion.—Section 124 of the Constitution lays down that "in order to ensure to citizens freedom of conscience, the church in the U.S.S.R. is separated from the state, and the school from the church," and that "freedom of religious worship and freedom of anti-religious propaganda is recognized for all citizens." Churches have remained open in virtue of contracts concluded between the congregations and the local authorities. The clergy live on voluntary donations from their parishioners. A new modus vivendi between the Government and the religious communities was created during the War of 1939-1945. Two administrative bodies, the Council for the Affairs of the Russian Orthodox Church and the Council for the Affairs of Religious Cults, were set up in October, 1943, to provide liaison between the Council of Ministers and the religious bodies. In September, 1943, Stalin agreed to the election of the Patriarch of Moscow and All Russia, a post which had been vacant since the death of Patriarch Tikhon in 1925. Patriarch Sergius, elected by the Council of the Russian Church in 1943, died in May, 1944, and was succeeded in February, 1945, by the present holder of the See, Patriarch Alexius. A number of seminaries for training of priests, many churches, mosques and synagogues and several big monasteries have been reopened. Several religious periodicals are now published in the U.S.S.R., but religious propaganda is still banned.

The proselytising successes of the religious communities, notably of various sectarian bodies, have become of great concern to the authorities; there has been a great increase of anti-religious articles in the press in 1958-59.

Education.—Under the Constitution, citizens of the U.S.S.R. have the right to education. Since 1956 the entire educational course, including higher education at universities, technical colleges, etc., has been free. In view of an acute shortage of young man-power caused by the abrupt fall of the birth-rate in the years 1942-1946, the government has been discouraging secondary school graduates from going on immediately to the University. Boys and girls of school-leaving age are ordered by law to put in two years of practical work in industry and agriculture, and 80 per cent. of all vacancies in the universities are reserved for young people who have accomplished this spell of practical work.

The state controls all educational institutions, theatres, cinemas, museums, libraries and picture galleries, as well as the press and the radio. The main centre of research and learning is the Academy of Sciences of the U.S.S.R., which is in effect a vast and efficient government-controlled pool of scientists.

Chronological System.—On February 14, 1918, the Soviet Government adopted the Gregorian (Western) Calendar, and by a decree of June 16, 1930, the Soviet Government advanced all the clocks in the Union by one hour, thus adopting permanent Summer Time. The country is divided into several time zones (Moscow time is 2 hours ahead of G.M.T.).

LANGUAGE, LITERATURE AND ARTS

Language and Literature.—Russian is a branch of the Slavonic family of languages which is divided into the following groups: Eastern, including Russian, Ukrainian and White Russian; Western, including Polish, Czech, Slovak and Sorbish (or Lusatian Wendish); and Southern, including Serbo-Croat, Slovene, Macedonian and Bulgarian. The Western group and part of the Southern group are written in the Latin alphabet, the others in the Cyrillic, said to have been instituted by SS. Cyril and Methodius in the ninth century, and largely based on the Greek alphabet. Before the Westernization of Russia under Peter the Great (1682-1725), Russian literature consisted mainly of folk ballads (byliny), epic songs, chronicles and works of moral theology. The eighteenth and particularly the nineteenth centuries saw a brilliant development of Russian poetry and fiction. Romantic poetry reached its zenith with Alexander Pushkin (1799-1837) and Mikhail Lermontov (1814-1841). The 20th century produced great poets like Alexander Blok (1880-1921), the Nobel Prize laureate of 1958 Boris Pasternak (b. 1890) and Vladimir Mayakovsky (1893-1930). Realistic fiction is associated with the names of Nikolai Gogol (1809-1852), Ivan Turgenev (1818-1883), Fedor Dostoyevsky (1821-1881) and Leo Tolstoy (1828-1910), and later with Anton Tchekhov (1860-1904), Maxim Gorky (1868-1936) and Ivan Bunin (1870-1954).

Great names in music include Glinka (1804-1857), Mussorgsky (1839-1881), Rimsky-Korsakov (1844-1908), Rubinstein (1829-1894), Tchaikovsky (1840-1893), Rakhmaninov (1873-1949), Scriabin (1872-1915), Prokofiev (1891-1953), Stravinsky (b. 1882) and Shostakovich (b. 1906).

FINANCE

On March 1, 1950, the Soviet Government revalued the Rouble (of 100 Kopecks), with the result that nominally $\text{£}1$ now equals $\text{R.}11.20$. This revaluation has not affected the Soviet Union's trade with countries outside her sphere of influence, which continues to be calculated on the basis of dollars. A special, slightly more favourable rate for foreign tourists, has been introduced in 1957 ($\text{£}1 = \text{R.}27.6$).

DEFENCE

No official returns concerning the services have been made for many years. According to Western estimates, the Soviet forces (including the MVD and KGB troops) amounted in 1959 to about 3,500,000 men. The successive reductions of their numerical strength since 1955 amount, according to the same estimates, to about 1,250,000. The ground forces consisted in 1958 of ca. 140 divisions (including 70 armoured), 40 artillery divisions (including some tactical missile units), an unknown number of cavalry divisions and independent brigades and 130 cadre divisions. The Navy is believed to possess 20 cruisers, 20 light cruisers (of the Sverdlov type), 150 destroyers, 550 submarines, 500 torpedo boats and 1,000 smaller vessels. The Air Force consists of 400 air regiments and possesses 19,000 aircraft, including 10,000 in the tactical air force, 3,500 in the air defence, 3,500 in the naval air force, 1,500 long range aircraft and 500 transport aircraft. There is an unknown number of strategic missile units (equipped with long- and intermediate-range missiles) and of A.A. units which were made a separate arm in 1955.

Length of service is fixed at two years for the Army and the MVD troops, three years for the KGB border units and the Air Force and four years for the Navy and Coastal Defence Units. The general tendency is to turn the Soviet Armed forces into a professional body.

Minister of Defence, Marshal R. Ya. Malinovsky.
Senior Vice-Minister, Marshal I. S. Konev.
Chief of General Staff, Marshal V. D. Sokolovsky.

On May 14, 1955, a Treaty of Friendship, Co-operation and Mutual Assistance was signed in Warsaw between the Soviet Union and its European satellites (Albania, Bulgaria, Eastern Germany, Hungary, Poland, Roumania and Czechoslovakia) to serve as a counter-poise to NATO. A unified military command was set up in Moscow, and the Soviet Vice-Minister of Defence Marshal I. S.

Konev, appointed Commander-in-Chief of the United Armed Forces.

INDUSTRY AND AGRICULTURE

One of the most remarkable aspects of Soviet economy has been the transformation of what was primarily an agricultural country into the second-strongest industrial country in the world in the course of the five successive Five Year Plans and the current Seven Year Plan. The 1958 output amounted to 39,600,000 tons of pig iron, 54,900,000 tons of steel, 42,900,000 tons of rolled metal, 496,000,000 tons of coal, 113,000,000 tons of crude oil, 33,300,000 tons of cement, 233,000,000,000 kw/h of electric power.

The area under crops increased from 292,121,000 acres in 1913 to 478,600,000 in 1957. The yield of the major crops has been steadily rising owing to more rational and scientific methods of farming. Land under crops east of the Volga and the Caspian Sea has greatly increased, in Kazakhstan by nearly five times, since 1913. Stock breeding has been less of a success. The live stock in 1958 included 66,800,000 cattle (the same as in 1928); including 31,400,000 cows (33,200,000 in 1928), 120,000,000 sheep and 44,300,000 pigs.

Two major reforms in the course of 1958 have given greater scope to the collective farms (kolkhozy)—the abolition of the State-owned Machine-and-Tractor Stations and the sale of their equipment to the kolkhozy; and the reorganization of the system of compulsory deliveries of produce by the farms to the State.

Forests cover nearly 40 per cent. of the whole area of the Union and form a considerable source of wealth.

Railways.—Length of railways in use:

Year	Miles	Year	Miles
1913.....	44,551	1950.....	72,637
1928.....	47,772	1955.....	74,998
1940.....	65,926	1957.....	75,265

European Russia is relatively well served by railways, Leningrad and Moscow being the two main focal points of rail routes. The centre and south have a good system of north-south and east-west lines, but the eastern part (the Volga lands) traversed as it is by trunk lines between Europe and Asia which enter Siberia via Sverdlovsk, Chelyabinsk, Magnitogorsk and Ufa, lacks north-south routes. In Asia, there are still large areas of the U.S.S.R., notably in the Far North and Siberia, with few or no railways. Railways built since 1928 include the Turkestan-Siberian line (Turksib) which has made possible a large-scale industrial exploitation of Kazakhstan, a number of lines within the system of the Trans-Siberian Railway (Magnitogorsk-Kartaly-Troitsk, Sverdlovsk-Kurgan, Novosibirsk-Proyektnaya, etc.), which are of great importance for the industrial development in the east, the Petropavlovsk-Karaganda-Balkhash line which has made possible the development of the Karaganda coal basin and of the Balkhash copper mines, and the Moscow-Donbass trunk line. Lines envisaged under the new Seven Year Plan include the Stalinsk-Magnitogorsk trunk line. In the northern part of European Russia, the North Pechora Railway has been completed, while in the Far East a second Trans-Siberian line is under construction; it will follow a more northerly alignment than the existing Trans-Siberian and will terminate in the Pacific port of Sovetskaya Gavan.

Sea Ports and Inland Waterways.—The most important ports (Odessa, Nikolayev, Batum, Taganrog, Rostov, Kerch, Sebastopol and Novorossiisk) lie around the Black Sea and the Sea of Azov. The northern ports (Leningrad, Murmansk and Archangel) are, with the exception of Murmansk, ice-bound during winter. Several new ports have been built along the Arctic Sea route (between Murmansk and Vladivostok) and are now in regular use every summer. The great Far Eastern port of Vladivostok, the Pacific naval base of the U.S.S.R., is kept open by icebreakers all the year round. Inland waterways, both natural and artificial, are of great importance in the country, although all of them are icebound in winter (from 2½ months in the south to 6 months in the north). The great rivers of European Russia flow outwards from the centre, linking all parts of the plain with the chief ports, an immense system of navigable waterways which carries about 139,000,000 tons of freight per year. They are supplemented by a system of canals which provide a through traffic between the White, Baltic, Black and Caspian Seas. The most notable of them, built largely by forced labour, are the White Sea-Baltic Stalin Canal, and the Moscow-Volga Canal. The 63-miles long Volga-Don Canal, linking the Baltic and the White Seas in the North to the Caspian, the Black Sea and the Sea of Azov in the South, was completed in May, 1952.

Posts and Telegraphs.—In 1955 the post offices handled about 3,778,000,000 letters and post-cards and 203,000,000 telegrams.

1st Secretaries. K. R. Oakeshott (Head of Chancery); P. C. H. Holmer (Commercial); E. E. Orchard, O.B.E. (Head of Russian Secretariat); Dr. J. J. Furlong (Medical Officer); A. J. V. George (H.M. Consul); C. M. James (Cultural Attaché).

2nd Secretaries. A. B. Urwick; F. R. Love; R. F. D. Hutchings; R. A. Longmire; R. H. Fowler (Ministry of Works representative).

3rd Secretaries. J. B. Ure; G. Hay; C. G. F. James, M.B.E.; S. W. Martin; D. C. Thomas; W. H. M. Matthews; G. S. Clucas; W. E. Downing.

Naval Attaché. Captain H. R. B. Newton, D.S.C., R.N.

Assistant Naval Attaché. Lt.-Cdr. C. H. Seaward, R.N.; Lt.-Cdr. D. N. F. Davenport.

Military Attaché. Brig. I. R. Burrows, O.B.E.

Assistant Military Attaché. Major W. D. M. Webb, R.A.

Air Attaché. Air Commodore P. J. Sanders, D.F.C.

Assistant Air Attaché. S/Ldr. P. V. Dale; S/Ldr. O. G. Taylor; S/Ldr. L. J. Cooke.

There are no British Consulates in the U.S.S.R., apart from the Consular Section attached to the Embassy.

I.—R.S.F.S.R.

(The Russian Soviet Federal Socialist Republic)

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet. N. G. Ignatov.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers. D. S. Polyansky.

Minister of Foreign Affairs. M. D. Yakovlev.

The R.S.F.S.R. has no Communist Party Central Committee of its own; there is, however, a Bureau of the Central Committee of the CPSU for the R.S.F.S.R., with N. S. Khrushchev as its Chairman.

The R.S.F.S.R., the largest and the most important of the Republics, occupies the major half of the European part of the U.S.S.R. and the major northern half of its Asiatic part and makes up 77 per cent. of the total territory of the U.S.S.R. with 56 per cent. of the total population. It consists of 15 Autonomous Republics (the Bashkir, Buryat, Checheno-Ingush, Chuvash, Daghستان, Kabardin-Balkar, Kalmyk,* Karelin, Komi, Mari, Mordovian, North-Osetian, Tartar, Udmurt and Yakut A.S.S.R.'s); 6 regions (Altai, Khabarovsk, Krasnodar, Krasnoyarsk, Maritime and Stavropol) containing in their turn 5 autonomous provinces and 4 national territories; 49 provinces (Amur, Archangel, Astrakhan, Belgorod, Bryansk, Chelyabinsk, Chita, Gorky, Irkutsk, Ivanovo, Kalinin, Kaliningrad, Kaluga, Kamchatka, Kemerovo, Kirov, Kostroma, Kuibyshev, Kurgan, Kursk, Leningrad, Lipetsk, Magadan, Moscow, Murmansk, Novgorod, Novosibirsk, Omsk, Orel, Orenburg, Penza, Perm, Pskov, Rostov, Ryazan, Saratov, Sakhalin, Smolensk, Stalingrad, Sverdlovsk, Tambov, Tomsk, Tula, Tyumen, Ulyanovsk, Vladimir, Vologda, Voronezh and Yaroslavl), which in their turn include 6 national territories; and 1 autonomous province (Tuva).

Physical Features.—The R.S.F.S.R. may be conveniently divided into three areas, a low-lying flat Western part stretching eastwards up to the Yenisei and divided in two by the Ural ridge; an eastern part, between the Yenisei and the Pacific, consisting of a number of tablelands and ridges, and a southern mountainous part. Climatically, the R.S.F.S.R. lies in all zones, except the tropics, and may be divided into the following belts (from north to south): Arctic, Tundra, Forest, Mixed Forest-Steppe, Steppe, Sub-Tropics.

The Republic has a very long coast-line, including the longest Arctic coast-line in the world (about 17,000 miles). The most important rivers in the European Part of the R.S.F.S.R. are the Volga with its tributaries Kama and Oka, the Northern Dvina and the Pechora, the short but wide Neva, the Don and the Kuban, and in the Asiatic part, the Ob with the Irtysh, the Yenisei, the Lena and the Amur, and, further north, Khatanga, Olenek, Yana, Indigirka, Kolyma and Anadyr. Lakes are abundant, particularly in the north-west. The huge Baikal Lake in Eastern Siberia is the deepest lake in the world. There are also two large artificial water reservoirs within the Greater Volga canal system, the Moscow and Rybinsk "Seas."

Minerals.—The Republic occupies one of the first places in the world for mineral wealth. Coal is mined in the Kuznetsk area, in the Urals, south of Moscow, in the Donets basin (its Eastern part lies in the R.S.F.S.R.) and in the Pechora area in the North. Oil is produced in the Northern Caucasus and in the area between the Volga and the Ural (the so-called "Second Baku"). The Ural mountains contain a unique assortment of minerals—high-quality iron ore, manganese, copper, aluminium, gold, platinum, precious stones, salt, asbestos, pyrites, coal, oil, etc. Iron ore is mined, in addition to the Urals, near Kursk, Tula, Lipetsk, Khoper, in several areas in Siberia

* During the Second World War, the Kalmyks, a Mongolian people, were scattered to remote areas in a deportation programme. Their territory was restored as an autonomous province in 1957, and on July 30, 1958, the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. restored a Kalmyk A.S.S.R. and in the Kola Peninsula. Non-ferrous metals are found in the Altai, in Eastern Siberia, in the Northern Caucasus, in the Kuznetsk Basin, in the Far East and in the Far North. Nine-tenths of all U.S.S.R. forests are located in the R.S.F.S.R.

Production and Industry.—The vastness of the territory of the Republic and the great variety in climatic conditions cause great differences in the structure of agriculture from north to south and from west to east. In the Far North stag breeding, hunting and fishing are predominant. Further south, timber industry is combined with grain growing. In the southern half of the forest zone and in the adjacent forest-steppe zone, the acreage under grain crops is far larger and the structure of agriculture more complex. In the eastern part of this zone, between the Volga and the Urals, cericulture is predominant (particularly summer wheat), with cattle breeding next. Beyond the Urals, we find another important grain-growing and stock-breeding area in the southern part of the Western-Siberian plain. The southern steppe zone is the main wheat granary of the U.S.S.R., containing also large acreages under barley, maize and sunflower. In the extreme South (Krasnodar region, Stavropol region) cotton is now cultivated. Vine, tobacco and other Southern crops are grown on the Black Sea shore of the Caucasus.

Industrially, the R.S.F.S.R. occupies the first place among the Soviet Republics. Major changes in the location of industry have occurred since the revolution and again since the war with two new industrial areas being developed in the Urals and in the Kuznetsk basin, although Moscow and Leningrad are still the two largest industrial centres in the country. Most of the oil produced in the U.S.S.R. now comes from two areas in the R.S.F.S.R.—the Bashkir and Tartar Autonomous Republics. All industries are represented in the R.S.F.S.R., including iron and steel and engineering. Industrial centres include Magnitogorsk, Chelyabinsk, Stalinsk, Tula, Komsomolsk, Perm, Ufa, Irkutsk, Kuibyshev, Krasnoyarsk, Nizhny-Tagil, Novosibirsk, Omsk, Stalingrad, Gorky, Saratov, Grozny, Rostov and Taganrog.

CAPITAL, MOSCOW. Population 5,032,000 (an increase of 120 per cent. since 1939). Moscow, founded about A.D. 1147 by Yuri Dolgoruki, became first the centre of the rising Moscow principality and, later, in the 15th century, the capital of the whole of Russia (Muscovy). In 1325, it became the seat of the Metropolitan of Russia. In 1703 Peter the Great transferred the capital to the newly built St. Petersburg, but on March 14, 1918, Moscow was again designated as the capital. Ψ Leningrad (before the First World War "St. Petersburg" and from 1914-1924 "Petrograd") has a population of 3,300,000.

Other cities with populations exceeding 500,000 (1959) are:—

Gorky (Nizhny-Novgorod).....	942,000
Novosibirsk (Novonikolayevsk).....	887,000
Kuibyshev (Samara).....	806,000
Sverdlovsk (Yekaterinburg).....	777,000
Chelyabinsk.....	688,000
Kazan.....	643,000
Perm.....	628,000
Ψ Rostov-on-Don.....	597,000
Stalingrad (Tsaritsyn).....	591,000
Saratov.....	581,000
Omsk.....	579,000
Ufa.....	546,000

About three-quarters of the population are Russians.

Ψ Seaport.

II.—THE UKRAINE

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, N. V. Podgorny.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, D. S. Korotchenko.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, N. T. Kalchenko.

Minister of Foreign Affairs, L. F. Palamarchuk.

This Republic, second largest in population, lying in the south-western part of the European half of the U.S.S.R., was formed in December, 1917. It consists of 25 provinces—Cherkasy, Chernigov, Chernovtsy, Crimea, Dnepropetrovsk, Kharkov, Kherson, Khmel'nitsky, Kiev, Kirovograd, Lugansk, Lvov, Nikolayev, Odessa, Poltava, Rovno, Stalino, Stanislav, Sumy, Ternopol, Transcarpathia, Vinnytsa, Volhynia, Zaporozhye and Zhitomir.

Physical Features.—The larger part of the Ukraine forms a plain with small elevations. The Carpathian mountains lie in the south-western part of the Republic. The climate is moderate, with relatively mild winters (particularly in the south-west) and hot summers. The main rivers are the Dnieper with its tributaries, the Southern Bug and the Northern Donets (a tributary of the Don).

Production and Industry.—The main centre of Soviet coal mining and iron and steel industry is situated in the southern part of the Ukraine. Engineering and chemical industry have been greatly developed under the Soviet régime. In 1955, the Ukraine provided 37 per cent. of the total Soviet steel, 39 per cent. of metal goods and 32 per cent. of coal. The central forest-steppe region (mainly on the right bank of the Dnieper) is the greatest sugar-producing area in the U.S.S.R. The Ukraine also leads in grain-growing and stock-raising.

There are large deposits of coal and salt in the Donets Basin, of iron ore in Krivoy Rog and near Kerch in the Crimea, of manganese in Nikopol, and of quicksilver in Nikitovka.

CAPITAL (since 1934), Kiev, the oldest city in Russia, founded in the 9th century A.D., was the capital of the Russian State from 865 to 1240. Population (1959) 1,102,000. Other cities with population over 500,000 are:—

Kharkov.....	930,000
Stalino (Yuzovka, i.e. Hughes-ovka).....	701,000
Ψ Odessa.....	667,000
Dnepropetrovsk (Yekaterinoslav).....	658,000

III.—BELORUSSIA

(White Russia)

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, K. T. Mazurov.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, V. I. Kozlov.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, T. Ya. Kiselev.

Minister of Foreign Affairs, K. V. Kiselev.

The Belorussian S.S.R., lying in the western part of the European half of the U.S.S.R., was formed early in 1919. It now consists of seven provinces (Brest, Gomel, Grodno, Minsk, Mogilev, Molodechno and Vitebsk). It is largely a plain with many lakes, swamps and marshy land. Before the revolution of 1917 the area was one of the most backward parts of European Russia. Since then, agriculture has been greatly developed, thanks to draining of swamps. Most of the Republic's industry is also of recent growth. Woodworking is of great importance, but engineering has also been greatly extended with several major plants built in Gomel and Minsk.

The main rivers are the upper reaches of the Dnieper, of the Niemen and of the Western Dvina.

CAPITAL, Minsk. Population 509,000.

In 1939, Belorussians made up four-fifths of the population, with Russians and Jews coming next, but territorial and demographic changes since then must have greatly altered this proportion.

IV.—UZBEKISTAN

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, Sh. R. Rashidov.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, Mrs. Ya. R. Nasriddinova.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, A. A. Alimov.

The Uzbek S.S.R. was formed in 1924 and consists of the Kara-Kalpak A.S.S.R. and of 9 provinces (Andizhan, Bokhara, Ferghana, Kashkardarya, Khorezm, Namangan, Samarkand, Surkhandarya and Tashkent). It lies between the high Tianshan Mountains and the Pamir highlands in the east and south-east and sandy lowlands in the west and north-west. The major part of the territory is a plain with huge waterless deserts and several large oases, which form the main centres of population and economic life. The largest is the Ferghana valley, watered by the Syr-Darya. Other oases include Tashkent, Samarkand, Bokhara and Khorezm. The climate is continental and dry. Minerals include oil (in the Ferghana valley and in Khaidag), coal (Angren) and sulphur (Shorsu).

There is a major agricultural machinery plant at Tashkent and a chemical combine at Chirchik. Uzbekistan is the main cotton-growing area of the U.S.S.R., producing more than 60 per cent. of all Soviet cotton. Irrigation has always been of decisive importance in this area, and the Soviet Government has done much in this field, including the construction of the Great Ferghana Canal (230 miles).

CAPITAL, Tashkent. Population 911,000. Samarkand (195,000) contains the Gur-Emir (Tamerlane's Mausoleum), completed A.D. 1400 by Ulug-bek, Tamerlane's astronomer-grandson, and a 15th-century observatory, recently restored.

V.—KAZAKHSTAN

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, N. I. Belyayev.

Chairman of the Presidium of Supreme Soviet, Zh. A. Tashenev.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, D. A. Kunayev.

The Kazakh S.S.R., the second-largest Union Republic, stretching from the lower reaches of the Volga and the Caspian in the west to the Altai and Tien-shan in the east, and bordering on China, was formed in 1920 as an autonomous republic (under the name of the Kirghiz A.S.S.R.) within the R.S.F.S.R., and was constituted a Union Republic in 1936. It consists of 15 provinces (Akmolinsk, Aktyubinsk, Alma-Ata, Djambul, East-Kazakhstan, Guryev, Karaganda, Kokchetav, Kustanay, Kzyl-Orda, North-Kazakhstan, Pavlodar, Semipalatinsk, South-Kazakhstan and West-Kazakhstan).

Kazakhstan is a country of arid steppes and semi-deserts, flat in the west, hilly in the east and mountainous in the south-east (Southern Altai and Tien-shan). The climate is continental and very dry. The main rivers are the (Upper) Irtysh, the Ural, the Syr-Darya and the Ili. Kazakhstan contains rich deposits of non-ferrous metals: copper in Kounrad, Djezkazgan and Boshchekul, other metals in the Altai, in the Kara-Tau Mountains, and elsewhere. It also contains an important coal-producing area (Karaganda) ranking third in the U.S.S.R. and an oil-bearing area (near Emba). Major centres of metal industry exist now in the Altai Mountains, in Chimkent, North of the Balkhash Lake and in Central Kazakhstan. Stockraising is highly developed, particularly in the central and south-western parts of the Republic. Grain is grown in the North and north-east and cotton in the south and south-east. In 1954 an ambitious programme of development of "virgin" lands in the steppes was launched by the Government to increase grain production. During 1954 and 1955 some 45,000,000 acres have been ploughed up.

CAPITAL, Alma-Ata (formerly Verny). Population 455,000.

VI.—GEORGIA

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, V. P. Mzhavanadze.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, G. S. Dzoteniidze.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, G. D. Djavakhishvili.

The Georgian S.S.R., occupying the north-western part of Transcaucasia, lies on the shore of the Black Sea and borders in the south-east on Turkey. It was formed in 1921; in 1922 it joined the Transcaucasian Federation which, in its turn, adhered to the U.S.S.R. in the same year. After the liquidation of the Transcaucasian S.F.S.R. in 1936 Georgia became a Union Republic. It contains two Autonomous Republics (Abkhazia and Adjara) and the South-Osetian Autonomous Province. Georgia is a country of mountains, with the Greater Caucasus in the north and the Smaller Caucasus in the south. A relatively low-lying land between these two ridges is divided into two parts by the Sura Ridge: Western Georgia with a mild and damp climate and Eastern Georgia with a more continental and dry climate. The Black Sea shore and the Rion lowlands are subtropical in their climatic character. The most important mineral deposits are manganese (Chiatury), coal (Tkibuli and Tkvarcheli) and oil (Kakhetia). Georgia is leading as regards production of manganese in the U.S.S.R. There are also many oil refineries. Viniculture and tobacco-growing are the two main agricultural industries. The Black Sea coast harbours many famous holiday resorts. Georgians make up about three-fifths of the population, the remainder being composed of Armenians, Russians, Azerbaidjani and Osetians.

CAPITAL, Tbilisi (Tiflis). Population 694,000.

VII. AZERBAIDJAN

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, V. Yu. Akhundov.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, I. K. Abdullayev.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, M. E. Iskenдеров.

The Azerbaidjan S.S.R. occupies the eastern part of Transcaucasia, on the shores of the Caspian Sea, and borders on Persia. It was formed in 1920. Between 1922-1936 it formed part of the Transcaucasian Federation. In 1936 it became a Union Republic. It contains the Nakhichevan Autonomous Republic and the Nagorno-Karabakh Autonomous Province.

The north-eastern part of the Republic is taken up by the south-eastern end of the main Caucasus ridge, its south-western part by the smaller Caucasus hills, and its south-eastern corner by the spurs of the Talysh Ridge. Its central part is a depression irrigated by the Kura and by the middle reaches of its tributary Aragva. Sheltered by the mountains from the humid west winds blowing from the Black Sea, Azerbaidjan has a continental climate. The land requires artificial irrigation. The Republic is very rich in minerals, particularly in oil. The Baku oilfields form the second-largest oil-producing area in the U.S.S.R. A large power station on the Kura (Mingechaur) was completed in 1954. Azerbaidjan is also important as a cotton growing area. The Azerbaidjani (Turks) make up three-fifths of the population of the Republic, Armenians, about 12 per cent., and Russians, about 10 per cent.

CAPITAL, Ψ Baku. Population 968,000.

VIII.—LITHUANIA

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, A. J. Snieckus.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, J. I. Paleckis.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, M. J. Šumauškas.

Lithuania, formerly a Province of the Russian Empire, was declared an independent Republic at Vilna in 1918 and was incorporated into the U.S.S.R. in August, 1940. It was occupied by German forces from June, 1941, until the autumn of 1944. The Republic forms a plain with a large number of lakes and swamps. The forests occupy 29 per cent. of the whole area. The main river is the Niemen with its tributaries.

The chief industries are agriculture and forestry, the chief products being rye, oats, wheat, barley, flax, sugar-beet and potatoes. Before its incorporation into the Soviet Union, Lithuania exported a large quantity of meat and dairy produce.

In 1923, the Lithuanians made up 84.2 per cent. of the population, Jews, 7.6, Poles, 3.2, and Russians, 2.5 of the population. The majority of Jews were exterminated by the Germans, and large numbers of Lithuanians and Poles deported by the Soviets.

CAPITAL, Vilnius (Vilna, restored to Lithuania by U.S.S.R. after invasion and collapse of Poland in 1939, and recaptured by Soviet forces in July, 1944). Population 235,000.

IX.—MOLDAVIA

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, Z. T. Serdyuk.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, I. S. Koditsa.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, A. F. Diorditsa.

Moldavia, occupying the south-western corner of the U.S.S.R., borders in the west on Roumania with the Pruth forming the frontier. In 1918, Roumania seized the Russian Province of Bessarabia. In 1924 a Moldavian Autonomous Republic was formed within the Ukraine, and in 1940 the U.S.S.R. forced Roumania to give back Bessarabia, the major part of which was merged with the Moldavian A.S.S.R. to form a Moldavian Union Republic. Moldavia was occupied by the Germans and Roumanians between 1941-1944.

The northern part of the Republic consists of flat steppe lands, now all under plough. Some forests skirt the Dniester. Further south, around Kishinev, there are woody hills, and further south again, low-lying steppe lands. The climate is moderate. The main river is the Dniester, navigable along the whole course.

The main industry is agriculture (viculture, fruit-growing and market-gardening). Industry is insignificant in both parts of Moldavia, but the Republic has the densest population in the U.S.S.R. A radical agrarian reform has been carried out under the Soviet régime. Moldavians make up 65 per cent. of the population, with Ukrainians, Russians and Jews next. In the south there are colonies of Bulgarians.

CAPITAL, Kishinev (Chisinau). Population 214,000.

X.—LATVIA

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, J. E. Kalnberzins.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, K. M. Ozolins.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, V. T. Lācis.

The Latvian S.S.R., lying on the shores of the Baltic and of the Gulf of Riga, was formerly a Baltic Province of the Russian Empire. It was proclaimed an independent state in 1918 and was forcibly incorporated into the U.S.S.R. in August 1940. Between 1941 and 1944 the Republic was occupied by the German forces.

The surface of the country is generally flat, interspersed by occasional chains of hills. The climate is moderately continental. The main rivers are the lower reaches of the Western Dvina and its tributaries. Forests occupy 20 per cent. of the total territory.

In 1940, Latvians made up three-quarters of the population, with Russians and Jews coming next. Most of the Jews were exterminated by the Germans, and many Latvians deported by the Soviets.

Latvian industry was always highly developed, with shipbuilding, engineering, chemical industry, textile industry, wood-working and dairying being the chief occupations. Both Riga and Liepāja (Libava, Liebau) are important sea-ports.

As in other newly-acquired Republics an agrarian reform was carried out in Latvia in 1910-41 and again after 1944.

CAPITAL, Ψ Riga. Population 605,000.

XI.—KIRGHIZIA

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, I. R. Razzakov.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, T. Kulatov.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, K. D. Dikambayev.

The Kirghiz S.S.R. occupies the north-eastern, part of Soviet Central Asia and borders in the south-east on China. In 1924, a Kara-Kirghiz Autonomous Province was formed within the R.S.F.S.R. In 1926 it became a Kirghiz Autonomous Republic, and in 1936, a Union Republic. It contains two provinces (Osh and Tien-Shan). The Kirghiz Republic is a mountainous country, the major part being covered by the ridges of the Central Tien-Shan, while mountains of the Pamiro-Altaï system occupy its southern part. There are a number of spacious mountain valleys, the Alai, Susamyr, the Issyk-kul lake and others. The majority of the population is concentrated in plains, lying at the foot of mountains—Chu, Talass, part of the Ferghana Valley where agriculture prospers. Industry is insignificant, but some mining is done. A number of railways have been built under the Five Year Plans. About two-thirds of the population are Kirghiz, followed by Russians and Ukrainians in the north and Uzbeks in Eastern Ferghana.

CAPITAL, Frunze (formerly Pishpek). Population 217,000.

XII.—TADJIKISTAN

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, T. Uldzhabayev.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, M. Rakhmatov.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, N. Dodkhudayev.

The Tadjik S.S.R., lies in the extreme south-east of Soviet Central Asia and borders in the south on Afghanistan and in the east on China. It was originally formed in 1924 as an Autonomous Republic within the Uzbek S.S.R. and became a Union Republic in 1929. It includes the Gorno-Badakhshan Autonomous Province and the Leninabad Province.

The country is mountainous: in the east lie the Pamir highlands with the highest point in the U.S.S.R., the Stalin Peak (24,500 feet), in the centre the high ridges of the Pamir-Altai system. Plains are formed by wide stretches of the Syr-Darya valley in the north and of the Amu-Darya in the south.

Like the other Central-Asiatic Republics, Tadjikistan is a cotton-growing country. Its climatic conditions favour the cultivation of Egyptian cotton. Irrigation is of great importance. About 60 per cent. of the population are Tadjiks (linguistically and culturally akin to the Persians), about 24 per cent., Uzbeks, the rest, Russians and Kirghiz.

CAPITAL, Stalinabad (formerly Dyushambe). Population 224,000.

XIII.—ARMENIA

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, S. A. Tovmasyan.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Council, Sh. M. Arushanyan.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, A. Ye. Kochinyan.

The Armenian S.S.R. occupies the south-western part of Transcaucasia; it was formed in 1920. In 1922 it joined the Transcaucasian Federation, and on its liquidation in 1936 became a Union Republic. In the south it borders on Turkey. It is a mountainous country consisting of several vast table lands surrounded by ridges. The population and the economic life are concentrated in the low-lying part of Armenia, the Aras valley and the Erevan hollow; the climate is continental, dry and cold, but the Aras valley has a long, hot and dry summer. Irrigation is essential for agriculture. At the junction of the former Turkish, Persian and Russian boundaries is Mount Ararat (17,160 ft.), the traditional resting place of "Noah's Ark." Industrial and fruit crops are grown in the low-lying districts, grain in the hills. Armenia is traditionally noted for her wine. There are large copper ore and molybdenum deposits and other minerals. The Armenian Church centred in Etchmiadzin is the oldest established Christian Church, Christianity having been recognized as the State religion in A.D. 300.

More than four-fifths of the population are Armenians.

CAPITAL, Erevan. Population 509,000.

XIV.—TURKMENISTAN

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, D. D. Karayev.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, N. Bayramov.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, B. O. Ovezov.

Turkmenia occupies the extreme south of Soviet Central Asia, between the Caspian and the Amu-Darya and borders in the south on Iran and Afghanistan. It was formed in 1924 and contains three Provinces (Chardjou, Mary and Tashauz). The country is a low-lying plain, fringed by hills in the south. Ninety per cent. of the plain is taken up by the arid Kara-Kum desert. Of all Central-Asiatic Republics, Turkmenia is the lowest and driest. The principal industries are agriculture and stock-raising, cotton, wool, astrakhan furs, carpets and horses being the principal products. Minerals include oil and sulphur. Most of the land under plough is artificially irrigated. Silk industry is of an old standing. There are also some fisheries in the Caspian.

Turkmens, nomadic in the past, make up 70 per cent. of the population, with Russians coming second, and Uzbeks, third.

CAPITAL, Ashkhabad (formerly Askhabad, Poltoratsk). Population 170,000.

XV.—ESTONIA

First Secretary of the Party Central Committee, I. G. Kabin.

Chairman of the Presidium of the Supreme Council, I. G. Eichfeld.

Chairman of the Council of Ministers, A. A. Mürisepp.

Estonia, formerly a Baltic province of the Russian Empire, was proclaimed an independent Republic in 1918. In 1940, it was forcibly incorporated into the U.S.S.R. It lies on the shores of the Baltic and of the Finnish Gulf in the north and of the Gulf of Riga in the south-west. Some 800 islands, among them Dagö and Ösel, form part of Estonian territory. Between 1941-44, Estonia was occupied by the German forces.

The country forms a low-lying plain with many lakes, among them the Chud (or Pskov) Lake, on the border with the R.S.F.S.R. Forests take up about one-fifth of the territory. Agriculture and dairy-farming are the chief industries, rye, oats, barley, flax and potatoes being the chief crops, and butter, bacon and eggs the chief products of dairy farming. There are important manufactures, including textiles, engineering, shipbuilding, wood-working, etc.

The population consists of Estonians and Russians.

CAPITAL, ΨTallinn (formerly Reval). Population 280,000.

VENEZUELA

(La Republica de Venezuela)

President, Señor Romulo Betancourt, assumed office Feb. 13, 1959.

EMBASSY IN LONDON

3, Hans Crescent, S.W.1
[Knightsbridge: 4206]

Ambassador in London, Dr. Ignacio Iribarren (1959).

Area and Population.—The most northerly Republic of South America, situated approximately between 1° 40' S. lat. and 12° 26' N. lat. and 59° 52' 73' 15' W. long. It consists of one Federal District, 20 states and 2 territories. The best authorities calculate the actual present area to be approximately 352,051 square miles. The population on Dec. 31, 1956 was 6,038,860.

Venezuela lies on the north of the South American continent, and is bounded on the north by the Caribbean Sea, west by the Republic of Colombia, east by British Guiana, and south by Brazil. Included in the area of the Republic are over 70 islands off the coast, with a total area of about 14,650 square miles, the largest being Margarita, which is politically associated with Tortuga, Cubagua and Coche to form the State of Nueva Esparta. Margarita has an area of about 400 square miles. In 1942 Great Britain ceded to Venezuela the small island of Palos (270 acres) about 3 miles from the mainland.

Physical Features.—The Eastern Andes from the south-west cross the border and reach to the Caribbean Coast, where they are prolonged by the Maritime Andes of Venezuela to the Gulf of Paria on the north-east. The main range is known as the Sierra Nevada de Merida, and contains the highest peaks in the country in Picacho de la Sierra (15,420 feet) and Salado (13,878 feet), the maritime ranges containing the Silla de Caracas (8,532 feet). Near the Brazilian border the Sierras Parima and Pacaraima, and on the eastern border the Sierras de Rincote and de Usupamo, enclose the republic with parallel northward spurs, between which are valleys of the Orinoco tributaries. The Sierra Parima contains Yaparana (7,175 feet) and Duida (8,120 feet), and Para Calma contains Maraguaca (8,228 feet) and Roraima (9,000 feet), the latter being on the Venezuela-Guiana boundary. The slopes of the mountains and foothills are covered with dense forests, but the basin of the Orinoco is mainly llanos, or level stretches of open prairie, with occasional woods.

The principal river of Venezuela is the Orinoco, with innumerable affluents, the main river exceeding 1,500 miles in length from its rise in the southern highlands of the republic to its outflow in the deltaic region of the north-east.

A Franco-Venezuelan Expedition, led by Major Frank Risquez, claims to have discovered the source of the Orinoco, on Nov. 27, 1951, at 63° 15' W. long., 2° 18' N. lat., and about 1,100 metres above sea-level.

The Orinoco is navigable for large steamers from its mouth for 700 miles, and by smaller vessels as far as the Maipures Cataract, some 200 miles farther up-stream. Dredging operations completed at the beginning of 1954 opened the Orinoco to ocean-going ships, of up to 24 ft. draft, as far as Puerto Ordaz (about 150 miles up-stream). Among the many tributaries of the main stream are the Ventuari, Caura and Caroni from the south, and the Apure (with its tributary the Portuguesa), Arauca, Meta, and Guaviare from the west, the Meta and Guaviare being principally Colombian rivers. The upper waters of the Orinoco are united with those of the Rio Negro (a Brazilian tributary of the Amazon) by a natural river or canal, known as the Casiquiare. The coastal regions of Venezuela are mostly indented and contain many lagoons and lakes, of which Maracaibo, with an area exceeding 7,000 square miles, is the largest lake in South America. Other lakes are Zulia (200 square miles), south-west of Maracaibo, and Valencia (226 square miles), about 1,400 feet above sea-level in the Maritime Andes. The llanos also contain lakes and swamps caused by the river floods, but they are dry in the summer seasons.

The climate is tropical and, except where modified by altitude or tempered by sea breezes, is unhealthy, particularly in the coastal regions and in the neighbourhood of lowland streams and lagoons. The hot, wet season lasts from April to October the dry, cooler season from November to March.

Government.—Venezuela was visited by Columbus in 1498, and in 1499 by Alonso de Ojeda and Amerigo Vespucci, the former naming the Gulf of Maracaibo Venezuela, or "Little Venice" (on account of the Indian pile-built settlements on the coast and shores of the lake), and the name was afterwards extended to the whole of the Orinoco basin. In 1550 the territory was formed into the captaincy-general of Caracas, and the country remained under Spanish rule until the revolt under Simon Bolivar, a native of Caracas, who defeated the Spanish forces in the battles of Los Taguanes (1813) and Carabobo (1821), and thus secured the independence of the country. Bolivar was an untiring hero in the cause of independence, and through his efforts (and those of his adjutant Sucre) Venezuela, Ecuador and Colombia achieved their freedom from Spain, while Peru was enabled to establish its independence in consequence of his victories. He died in 1830, at the age of 47. Venezuela formed part of the Federal Republic of Colombia from 1822-30, since which time it has been independent.

On Nov. 30, 1952, polling took place to elect a new Constituent Assembly, which published a new Constitution on Nov. 30, 1952, and chose a Senate and Chamber of Deputies. The validity of these elections was subsequently queried, but Col. Marcos Pérez Jiménez declared himself elected as the Provisional President. On April 19, 1953, with the passing of the new Constitution, he was declared Constitutional President for a term of five years. Before the expiry of this term, however, on January 23, 1958, his military dictatorship was overthrown by a popular and military uprising, and a Government Junta, presided over by Rear-Admiral Wolfgang Larrazábal Ugueto, assumed the temporary government of the country with the announced intention of eventually holding genuinely free elections and steering the country back to constitutional government and democracy. Larrazábal resigned on Nov. 14, 1958, and accepted nomination as presidential candidate in the forthcoming presidential elections for the Democratic Republican Union (URD) Party and for the Communist Party. His place was filled by Dr. Edgar Sanabria who handed over the Government to Señor Betancourt and his party who were successful in the elections of Dec. 7, 1958.

Production and Industry.—The produce of Venezuelan forest and fields includes the following: (a) Tropical forest region: orchids, wild rubber, timber, mangrove bark, balata gum and tonka beans. (b) Agricultural areas: cocoa beans, coffee, cotton, rice, maize, sugar, sesame, ground-nuts, potatoes, tomatoes, other vegetables, sisal, tobacco. There is an extensive beef and dairy farming industry, and although the country does not produce all the grain and other food products it requires, it has now practically achieved self-sufficiency in meat and sugar. Food and drink imports were valued at the equivalent of £61,631,000 in 1958. An autonomous Government department, the Corporación Venezolana de Fomento, and other Government agencies are endeavouring, by loans, investment and other means, to foster agricultural and industrial development. A strong nationalist movement began in 1958 to speed up the rate of industrialization; to this end many tariffs were raised and legislation introduced to compel Governments to give preference to national manufacturers.

The principal industry is that of Petroleum.

The production of the oilfields is shown below (in barrels of 42 gallons):—

Year	Barrels	Year	Barrels
1943.....	177,600,000	1951.....	622,187,000

Before the war of 1939-45 over 80 per cent. of the crude oil was exported to Netherlands' West Indies refineries. In 1942 small refineries were established in Venezuela, capable of handling about 200,000 barrels daily. The large Shell plant at Punta Cardon went into production in February, 1949, and the Creole refinery at Amuay a year later. Other refineries are being operated at Caripito, San Lorenzo, Puerto La Cruz, Tucupit6 and El Chaire, and 28 per cent. of the total output of crude oil was refined in Venezuela in 1958. Hitherto the Venezuelan Government has been receiving over 50 per cent. of the profits of local oil companies. As a result of income tax increases decreed in December, 1958, this percentage was raised to over 60 per cent. Rich iron ore deposits in South Venezuela are being developed and production reached 15,485,000 tons in 1958. A steel tube mill is in the process of being erected near Ciudad Bolivar, which is designed to use local iron ore, and power from the newly-opened Caroni River hydro-electric plant.

Other industries include gold, diamonds and asbestos; cotton, wool and rayon weaving; manufacture of paper, cement, beer, tyres, cigarettes, soap, animal feeding concentrates, non-alcoholic drinks, simple steel products, shoes, tins, jewellery, rope, metal and wooden furniture, sacks, paint and motor-vehicle assembly, preparation of pharmaceutical goods, lard, powdered milk, vegetable oil, flour, biscuits and other foods; fishing and fish-canning; pearl fishing. New industries planned include petrochemicals, plate glass, and the manufacture of paper from bagasse.

Language and Literature.—Spanish is the language of the country. Some Venezuelan literature is of international repute. There are 23 daily newspapers in Venezuela, of which 8 are published in Caracas, 75 weeklies and 23 fortnightlies. There are also 233 other periodicals, mostly monthlies, but including also some appearing once, twice or three times a week.

Education is free and primary education compulsory from the age of 7 years. There were (1956-57), 6,791 primary schools, with 694,193 pupils and 297 secondary schools, with 52,420 pupils. There are Universities at Caracas, Mérida and Maracaibo.

all but a very few of the railway lines, whose total length is only some 760 miles. A substantial railway reorganization plan has been drawn up which will involve the abandonment of four systems with differing gauges and the construction of new lines of standard gauge. Work has been completed on one of these lines (Puerto Cabello-Barquisimeto). Several British, U.S. and European airlines provide Venezuela with a wide range of services. There are three Venezuelan airlines (two of them state-owned) which between them have a comprehensive network of internal lines and also connect Caracas with New York, Miami, Bermuda, Havana, Lima, Bogotá, the West Indies, Lisbon, Madrid and Rome. The Venezuelan state-owned merchant fleet controls a total tonnage of about 250,000. Foreign vessels are not permitted to engage in the coast trade. The telegraph, radio-telegraph and radio-telephone services are state-owned. There are one government-controlled and 62 commercial broadcasting stations. The latter draw their income from commercial broadcasting. There are 3 television stations in operation in Caracas, and 2 in Maracaibo.

Since the Geneva Conference of July 1954, Vietnam has been divided into two zones.

The Southern Zone has an area of 66,000 sq. miles. Its population was estimated in 1956 at 12,500,000. The capital is Saigon (1958 population of Saigon-Cholon: 1,799,175). Other principal towns are Hue (1956 population: 100,000) and Tourane (1956 population: 57,400). Saigon and Tourane are the main ports. Rice and rubber are the chief products. Total trade in 1958 was: Imports £81,250,000; Exports £21,000,000. Trade with the United Kingdom in 1958 was valued at: Imports from U.K., £1,667,753; Exports to U.K., £472,562.

On October 23, 1955, a referendum showed a large majority in favour of the deposition of the former Chief of State, Bao Dai, and the election of Ngo Dinh Diem to his place. The latter was accordingly proclaimed Chief of State on October 26, and his first act was to declare Vietnam a Republic of which he became the President. An elected constituent assembly, after two months' deliberation, set up a democratic constitution which was promulgated on October 26, 1956. This constituent assembly, on the date of the promulgation of the constitution, became the first Legislative Assembly of the Republic of Vietnam. The Government of the Republic of Vietnam in Saigon is recognized by the United Kingdom, the United States, France and other members of the United Nations as the legal government of Vietnam.

The Northern Zone has an area of approximately 63,000 sq. miles. Its population was estimated in 1957 at about 13,500,000. The capital is Hanoi (1957 population: 445,000) and the chief port is Haiphong (est. population: 180,000). Coal and cement are the chief products, apart from rice of which half is now said to be an exportable surplus. Production of apatite (phosphate) is increasing. The title by which the Northern authorities style themselves is the Government of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam. The President of this Republic is Ho Chi Minh. The effective power is the Lao Dong (or Workers') Party which manipulates the Fatherland Front, successor to the Viet Minh. The Party is avowedly Communist and the authorities in the Northern Zone are recognized by the U.S.S.R., China, and most of the satellite states as the government of Vietnam.

There is a British Consulate General at Hanoi.

Area and Population.—Yugoslavia is a Federation comprising the People's Republics of Serbia, Croatia, Slovenia, Montenegro, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Macedonia. Serbia includes the autonomous province of the Vojvodina and the autonomous region of Kosovo and Metohija (Kosmet). In July, 1946, Pelagosa and adjacent islands with all territory east of the line known as the French Line in Istria (including Pola and Fiume) were ceded by Italy to Yugoslavia. By an agreement concluded in London on Oct. 5, 1954, between Yugoslavia, Italy, the United Kingdom and the United States, Zone B of the Trieste Territory was transferred to the civil administration of Yugoslavia, under whose military administration it had been since 1945. Zone B, an area of 200 square miles with a population of 73,500, included the towns of Kopar (Capodistria), Piran (Pirano) and Novi Grad (Cittanuova). The area has now been divided between the Republics of Slovenia and Croatia. The area of Yugoslavia in 1953 was estimated at 255,804 square kilometres (98,725 square miles) and the population in 1959 at 18,448,000. As a result of the war there was a decrease of nearly 2,000,000 in the population of Yugoslavia, and this loss has only recently been made up.

Montenegro (Crna-Gora) was united to Serbia by a decision of the Montenegrin Parliament in November, 1918, when King Nicholas was deposed.

Government.—Stretching from Central Europe to the Balkans, different parts have been subjected to different historical, religious, cultural and geographical influences. Serbia came early under the Orthodox Church and then passed 500 fallow years of subjection to the Turkish Empire. In Bosnia, an outpost of the Turkish Empire, large numbers of the population were forcibly converted to Islam. Croatia and Slovenia, on the other hand, came under the Roman Catholic Church, and in later years were subjected to the civilizing influence of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Such factors have, despite community or race, hampered the process of fusion into a united nation. In Jan. 1929, King Alexander abrogated the Constitution and instituted an absolute monarchy for two years, when it was superseded by a modified constitution. On King Alexander's assassination in 1934, his brother, Prince Paul governed as Regent, with two others, on behalf of the young King Peter. Faced with the threat of German invasion, the Government came to an accommodation with Hitler on March 25, 1941, but was overthrown two days later by a popular rising, which placed King Peter at the head of the state. The country was invaded by the German and Bulgarian armies on April 6, 1941, and the King and Government went into exile. The invaders parcelled up the country, placing Serbia under a puppet government, Dalmatia under Italian administration and Croatia under the so-called independent régime of Pavellé (Ustashi). Two main resistance movements developed, the Chetniks under Mihajilović, and the Partisans under Marshal Josip Broz commonly known as Marshal Tito. The latter emerged from the turmoil of the war years as the most potent force in the country and the modified constitution was superseded by an agreement signed on November 1, 1944, by the Yugoslav Prime Minister (Dr. Ivan Subasić) and Marshal Tito as leader of the National Liberation Committee, recognizing a provisional parliament. On March 7, 1945, the agreement was confirmed by the Royal Yugoslav government in London, and a provisional government was set up in Belgrade.

On Nov. 29, 1945, the Constituent Assembly of Yugoslavia, at a joint session of the Skupština and the House of Nationalities, proclaimed Yugoslavia a Republic. In January, 1953, a new Constitution became effective, under which two houses (the Federal Council and Council of Producers) were established. Elections to these houses were held in November, 1953 and March, 1958.

Defence.—The Army, Navy and Air Force on a peace footing consist of 370,000 officers and men, the war strength being about 1,250,000.

Religion and Education.—The Orthodox, Roman Catholic, Protestant, Islamic and Judaic faiths are recognized by the State. According to the 1948 Census, 49.53 per cent. of the population is Orthodox, 36.7 per cent. Catholic, 1.14 per cent. Protestant and other Christian denominations, 12.52 per cent. Moslem and 0.04 per cent. Jews. The Church is separated from the State. All religious instruction in schools has been forbidden since January 1952. Priests are allowed to teach in churches. Eight years elementary education is compulsory and all education is free. In 1958 there were 14,257 elementary schools with 71,803 teachers and 3,316,000 pupils and 1,384 secondary schools with 13,899 teachers and 291,000 pupils, of which 78 were training colleges for teachers with 22,000 students. There are five universities: Belgrade, Zagreb, Ljubljana, Sarajevo and Skoplje, including 98 faculties and schools with 83,000 students and (1957) 11 art academies with 1,320 students.

Language and Literature.—The languages of the country are Serbo-Croat, Slovenian and Macedonian, all South Slav tongues. Serbo-Croat predominates and is the language of the Federal Government. In Serbia, Macedonia and Montenegro the Cyrillic script is used and in the rest of the country the Latin; Hungarian, Roumanian, Albanian and Italian are also used in certain districts. The desire for the political union of the South Slavs led to a cultural unity and a revival of Slav literature. There are 3 Serbian daily newspapers in Belgrade, 2 Slovene dailies in Ljubljana (Laibach), 3 Croat dailies in Zagreb, and daily papers at Skoplje, Sarajevo, Priština, Novi Sad, Rijeka, Split and Maribor.

Production and Industry.—The majority of the population (about 60 per cent.) is engaged in agriculture, although in recent years industry has expanded rapidly and industrial production has more than doubled since 1947. Since 1955 substantial new investment has been diverted from basic industry to consumer goods. In agriculture the main emphasis is on increased investment in mechanization and fertilizers. The main crops are wheat and maize, of which the average yield in the period 1949–58 was 2,180,000 and 3,500,000 tons respectively. The forest areas produced some 7,535,000 cubic metres of timber in 1958. According to Yugoslav official estimates, the livestock population at the beginning of 1959 was approximately as follows: horses, 1,274,000; cattle, 5,038,000; sheep, 11,247,000; pigs, 5,656,000; poultry, 27,721,000. Minerals are a great source of wealth, particularly in the central regions. Estimated production in 1958 included the following ('000 tons): Hard coal, 1,208; brown coal, 8,378; lignite, 9,402; copper, 64; lead, 84; iron ore, 1,997; pig iron, 748; steel, 1,119; aluminium, 21.7; zinc, 31 and mercury, 0.4. Antimony, pyrites and manganese ores are also produced.

Communications.—In 1958 there were approximately 7,375 miles of standard and narrow gauge railway. There are also 20,714 miles of telephone lines and 21,560 miles of telegraph lines. Yugoslavia has a long seaboard on the Adriatic coast. The principal Yugoslav ports are Rijeka, Šibenik, Split, Zadar, Dubrovnik and Kotor (Carraro) and new ports are under construction at Ploče and Bar. The Danube forms a great commercial highway and the tributary rivers Sava and Tisa provide other shipping routes. There are many international air services operated by the Yugoslav airline and by foreign airlines.

The Passport Offices are also open for cases of special emergency only, between 4.30 p.m. and 6 p.m. (Saturdays 9.30–4) and in London on Sundays and Public Holidays between 10 a.m. and noon.

To facilitate the issue of passports applicants are recommended to make personal application to any one of the above mentioned offices. If it is not possible to make personal application at one of the Passport Offices or Ministry of Labour Local Offices, completed forms of applications should be sent to one of the three Passport Offices, with photographs, supporting documents and the fee of £1 10s. Remittances sent with postal applications should be in the form of a Cheque or Postal Order which should be crossed and made payable to the Passport Office. Notes or postage stamps should not be sent in payment.

Foreign Office Passports are granted:—

- (i) To citizens of the United Kingdom and Colonies.
- (ii) To British subjects without citizenship.
- (iii) To British Protected Persons.

Passports are available for five years in the first instance, unless otherwise stated. They may be renewed for a further period of 5 years for a fee of £1. Where, however, a passport has already been renewed for a shorter period, it may be extended for the remainder of the 5 year period on payment of a fee of 4s. 6d. for each year of renewal. They are not available beyond ten years from the original date of issue. Thereafter, or if at any time the Passport contains no further space for visas, a new Passport must be obtained.

A Passport including particulars of the holder's wife is not available for the wife's use when she is travelling alone. A wife's particulars may only be added at the time of issue of a passport.

Children who have reached the age of sixteen years require separate Passports. When they apply for a Passport the written consent of father or other legal guardian is necessary.

The application must be recommended in Section 9 by a Member of Parliament, Justice of the Peace, Minister of Religion, Medical or Legal Practitioner, Bank Officer, established Civil Servant, Public Official, Police Officer or any person of similar standing personally acquainted with the applicant. The applicant's birth certificate and other evidence in support of the statements made in the application must be produced.

In the case of children under the age of 16 requiring a separate passport, an application should be made by the child's father or other legal guardian on form (B) obtainable from a Passport Office or any local office of the Ministry of Labour and National Service.

If the applicant for a Passport be a British subject by naturalization or registration, the Certificate of Naturalization or registration must be produced with the application.

British Passports are generally available for travel to all countries. The possession of a Passport does not, however, exempt the holder from compliance with any Immigration Regulations in force in British or foreign countries, or from the necessity of obtaining a visa where required.

A Passport cannot be issued or renewed by the Foreign Office on behalf of a person already abroad; such person should apply, in a foreign country, to the nearest British Mission or Consulate, or, within the British Commonwealth outside the United Kingdom of Great Britain and N. Ireland, to the nearest local Passport issuing authority.

Persons resident in Northern Ireland should apply in person to the Foreign Office Passport Agency, 1 May Street, Belfast, or by post to the Branch Passport Office, Liverpool; citizens of the United Kingdom and Colonies resident in the Irish Republic should make application to the Visa Section, British Embassy, 30 Merrion Square, Dublin.

RENEWAL OF PASSPORTS

Applications for the renewal of Foreign Office passports must be made on Form D, obtainable at any of the Passport offices (see above) or at any local office of the Ministry of Labour and National Service.

PHOTOGRAPHS

Duplicate unmounted photographs of applicant (and his wife, if to be included in the Passport) must be sent. These photographs should be printed on thin paper and must not be glazed on the reverse side. They should measure not more than 2½ in. by 3 in. or less than 2 in. by 2½ in., and should be taken full face without a hat.

NATIONAL INSURANCE AND ASSISTANCE

For Combined Contributions, see p. 971.

The three State compulsory insurance schemes in force up to July 5, 1948, financed by contributions from insured workpeople, their employers and the Exchequer, provided the following cash benefits:

Unemployment Insurance.....	Unemployment benefit.
National Health Insurance.....	Sickness and disablement benefits; maternity benefit.
Contributory Pensions	Old age and widows' (over 60) pensions; widows' (under 60) pensions; orphans' pensions.

The National Health Insurance scheme also gave medical benefit, and the Health and Pensions schemes made provision for certain classes of voluntary contributors. Other national schemes gave assistance out of State funds, subject to a means test, in three forms—unemployment assistance, non-contributory old age and blind persons' pensions, and supplementary pensions to old age pensioners and to widow pensioners under 60 in receipt of allowances for dependent children. Under the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1925 to 1945, compensation for industrial accidents and prescribed industrial diseases was payable by employers without contribution by workpeople or the Exchequer. The Public Assistance Authorities remained responsible for the administration of poor relief on a local basis.

These services, except for non-contributory old age pensions, were replaced after the Second World War by schemes of National Insurance and Industrial Injuries Insurance National Assistance and Family Allowances. The two insurance schemes and the family allowances scheme are administered by the Ministry of Pensions and National Insurance, and the national assistance scheme and non-contributory old age pensions by the National Assistance Board.

The Ministry of National Insurance was instituted in November, 1944, under the Ministry of National Insurance Act, 1944. On August 31, 1953, the Ministry of Pensions and the Ministry of National Insurance were merged in a single Ministry of Pensions and National Insurance. Local offices of the Ministry (Pensions and National Insurance Offices) have been established throughout the country.

NATIONAL INSURANCE

The National Insurance Scheme operates under the National Insurance Act, 1946, as amended by the National Insurance Acts of 1949, 1951, 1953, 1954, 1955, 1956, 1957 and 1959, the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957, the Family Allowances and National Insurance Acts, 1952, 1956 and 1959, and the National Health Service Contributions Acts, 1957 and 1958, and Regulations made under these Acts.

The National Insurance Act, 1959, extends the existing flat-rate scheme by providing, for employed persons, a system of contributions graduated according to earnings, with related graduated additions to retirement pensions. Employees with equivalent occupational pension rights may be contracted out of this graduated part of the scheme. These changes are planned to begin in April, 1961. Provision is also made for higher Exchequer supplements, and for four quinquennial increases in contribution rates beginning in 1965.

INSURED PERSONS AND CONTRIBUTIONS

Subject to certain statutory exceptions, every person living in Great Britain who is over school leaving age and under pension age becomes insured under the Acts.

There are three classes of insured persons namely:

- (a) Class 1. Employed persons, i.e. persons who work for an employer under a contract of service or are paid apprentices.
- (b) Class 2. Self-employed persons, i.e. persons gainfully occupied but not working under the control of an employer.
- (c) Class 3. Non-employed persons, i.e. persons who are not gainfully occupied.

Regulations made under the Acts give married women and widows, upon certain conditions, the choice whether to pay contributions or not.

The estimated number of persons in respect of whom contributions were payable in 1958 was as follows: employed, 22 million; self-employed, 1.5 million; non-employed, 0.5 million.

National Insurance contributions are payable by insured persons, by employers of employed persons, and out of moneys provided by Parliament. The normal weekly rates of contribution for the three classes of insured persons and for employers of employed persons are shown on p. 971.

Men aged 70 and over and women aged 65 and over in classes (1) and (2) pay no National Insurance contribution. Men aged 65 to 70 and women aged 60 to 65 in these classes, with certain exceptions, are liable to pay contributions if they have not retired from regular employment. Normally no contributions are payable by men over 65 or women over 60 in class (3).

Regulations state the cases in which insured persons may be exempted from paying National Insurance contributions, and the conditions upon which contributions are credited to persons who are exempted.

Contributions are paid by means of stamps on a single insurance card; the stamp also covers the National Health Service contribution and, in the case of employed persons, the Industrial Injuries contribution.

The Exchequer contribution comprises (a) a supplementary payment (currently ranging from 7d. to 3s. 3d.) in respect of each contribution paid by an insured person or employer, and (b) additional sums paid into the National Insurance Fund, viz., for the period of five years beginning with April 1, 1955, sums not exceeding a total of £325 million. No payment was made under (b) in the year ended March 31, 1958.

BENEFITS

The Acts give the following benefits:

- Unemployment benefit.
- Sickness benefit.
- Maternity benefits, including maternity grant, home confinement grant and maternity allowance.
- Widow's benefits, including widow's allowance, widowed mother's allowance and widow's pension.
- Child's special allowance
- Guardian's allowance.
- Retirement pension.
- Death grant.

The benefits available to the various classes of insured persons are as follows:

Employed persons...	All benefits.
Self-employed persons.	All benefits except unemployment benefit.
Non-employed persons	All benefits except unemployment and sickness benefits and maternity allowance.

There is one system of adjudication on all claims for benefit under the Acts; with certain exceptions, questions as to the right to benefit are decided by independent statutory authorities, consisting of insurance officers, local tribunals and the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioners.

UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFIT

The standard weekly rates of benefits from Feb. 6, 1958, are as follows:

	s.	d.
Man, single woman or widow over 18...	50	0
Married woman over 18: ordinary rate	34	0
If maintaining an invalid husband, or not living with and unable to obtain any financial assistance from her husband...	50	0
Person under 18 (other than a married woman): ordinary rate.....	28	6
If entitled to an increase of benefit in respect of a child or adult dependant.	50	0
Married women under 18: ordinary rate.	28	6
If entitled to an increase of benefit in respect of a child or adult dependant...	34	0
If supporting an invalid husband, or if entitled to an increase of benefit in respect of a child or adult dependant other than her husband and not residing with and unable to obtain any financial assistance from her husband.....	50	0
Increase of benefit for only child or elder or eldest child (where payable).....	15	0
Increase of benefit for each additional child (where payable).....	7	0
Increase of benefit for adult dependant (where payable).....	30	0

Normal Contribution Conditions.—The claimant must have paid 26 Class 1 contributions since July 5, 1948, and, to be entitled to benefit at the standard rate during a benefit year, must have paid or had credited 50 Class 1 contributions during the preceding contribution year.

Waiting Period.—Benefit is not payable for the first three days of a spell of unemployment or sickness unless the claimant has twelve days or more of unemployment or sickness within a period of 13 weeks beginning with the first of these days. Odd days of unemployment or sickness count for benefit only where any two or more of them fall within a period of six consecutive days, excluding Sundays, and such spells of two or more days are treated as "linked up" if not separated by more than 13 weeks.

Duration of Benefit.—A claimant can draw in respect of any period of interruption of employment 180 days of unemployment benefit, together with additional days of benefit, assessed on his record of contributions and benefit.

Qualification for Benefit.—A person who has exhausted his standard benefit, including any additional days, requalifies therefor when he has paid 13 Class 1 contributions.

Disqualifications.—As in the former scheme, there are disqualifications for receiving benefit, e.g. for a period not exceeding six weeks if a person has lost his employment through his misconduct, or has voluntarily left his employment without just cause, or has, without good cause, refused an offer of suitable employment.

Numbers Unemployed.—During the year 1958 the average number of persons registered as unemployed in Great Britain was 457,400. In mid-Dec. 1957, nearly 201,000 persons were receiving unemployment benefit.

SICKNESS BENEFIT

Standard Rates of Benefit.—Same as for unemployment benefit.

Normal Contribution Conditions.—Same as for unemployment benefit, except that Class 2 as well as Class 1 contributions are counted.

Waiting Period.—Same as for unemployment benefit. Days of sickness are "linked up" with days of unemployment falling within the same period of 13 weeks.

Duration of Benefit.—A person who has paid 156 Class 1 or Class 2 contributions receives sickness benefit of unlimited duration. If he has paid less than 156 such contributions, benefit is limited to 312 days (one year); but he will requalify for benefit when he has paid contributions for 13 weeks.

Disqualifications.—Regulations provide for disqualifying a person for receiving sickness benefit for a period not exceeding six weeks if he has become incapable of work through his own misconduct, or if he fails without good cause to attend for or submit himself to prescribed medical or other examination or treatment, or if he acts in a way which would retard his recovery.

Number of Claims.—During 1957, 9,609,000 new claims for sickness benefit were received. The number of claimants incapacitated owing to sickness varied during the year from under 774,000 in July and August to 1,494,000 in October.

MATERNITY BENEFITS

The National Insurance Act, 1953, made changes in the structure of maternity benefits provided by the principal Act. Increases in the benefits under the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957, took effect as from Feb. 3, 1958.

Maternity Grant.—A cash grant of £12 10s. is payable on the mother's own insurance or on her husband's. Extra grants are payable, in certain circumstances, if more than one child is born. The normal contribution conditions for this grant are (i) that the mother or her husband has paid not less than 26 contributions of any class since his or her entry into insurance, and (ii) that not less than 26 contributions of any class have been paid by or credited to that person during the previous contribution year, or the mother has satisfied the contribution conditions for a maternity allowance at the standard rate or at a reduced rate.

Home Confinement Grant.—An additional grant of £5 is payable to women who are confined at home or elsewhere at their own expense.

Maternity Allowance.—A woman who is gainfully occupied receives in addition a maternity allowance of 50s. a week normally for 18 weeks beginning eleven weeks before the expected week of confinement, provided that she abstains from work. The rate of allowance is increased where the woman has dependants. The normal contribution conditions for this benefit are (i) that the claimant has paid or had credited 50 Class 1 or 2 contributions during the 52 weeks ending 13 weeks before the expected week of confinement; and (ii) that in the same 52 weeks at least 26 Class 1 or 2 contributions have been paid.

During the year ended March 31, 1958, maternity grants were paid for about 815,000 births; in addition, the home confinement grant was paid in about 320,000 cases, and about 185,000 women received weekly maternity allowances.

WIDOW'S BENEFITS

This benefit in any of its three forms is payable to the widow of any class of insured person. The normal contribution conditions to be satisfied by the husband are (a) that he had paid not less than 156 contributions of any class since his last entry into insurance (104 if he was married before July 5, 1948, and insured from before September 30, 1946), and (b) that the yearly average of the contributions paid by or credited to him since his insurance started was not less than 50. Increases in this benefit under the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957 became payable as from Jan. 28, 1958.

Widow's Allowance.—A woman who at her husband's death is under 60, or, if the husband had not qualified for a retirement pension, is over 60, receives (during the first 13 weeks of widowhood) a cash allowance usually of 70s. a week, with an increase of 20s. for the first or only child and 12s. for each other child.

Widowed Mother's Allowance.—When the 13 weeks of widow's allowance have elapsed, a widow who is left with one or more dependent children receives a cash allowance usually of 70s. a week so as long she has a child of qualifying age, and in addition 12s. a week for each child other than the first. A widowed mother's personal allowance, usually 50s. a week, is payable to widows who have living with them a child under 18 who has left school and is not an apprentice.

Widow's Pension.—A widow who is under pensionable age or, being over pensionable age, has not retired from regular employment, receives a widow's pension usually of 50s. a week (i) when widow's allowance ends, if she was over 50 at the time of her husband's death and had been married for not less than three years; or, (ii) when her widowed mother's allowance comes to an end, if she is then over 50 (40 if widowed before February 4, 1957) and not less than three years have elapsed since marriage.

Widow's benefit of any form ceases upon remarriage. A 50s. widow's pension is reduced by sixpence for each shilling of any net earnings in excess of 60s. and a further sixpence for each shilling of net earnings in excess of 80s. A widowed mother's allowance is reduced by sixpence for each shilling of any net earnings in excess of 80s. and a further sixpence for each shilling of net earnings in excess of 100s.; but it must not be reduced in any week by more than 50s.

If a woman, who was married before July 5, 1948, to a man insured under the old scheme immediately before that date does not qualify for widow's benefit under the new scheme, she may qualify for a widow's basic pension, usually of 10s. a week.

At the end of March, 1958, about 465,000 widows were receiving widowed mother's allowance, widow's pension or widow's 10s. pension, and about 21,000 widow's allowances were current.

CHILD'S SPECIAL ALLOWANCE

The National Insurance Act, 1957, as amended by the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957, provides for a special allowance for a woman whose marriage has been dissolved or annulled and who has not remarried, to be payable on the ex-husband's death if the woman has in her family a child to whose maintenance the ex-husband had before his death been contributing at least 5s. a week in cash or its equivalent. The amount of the allowance is equal to the amount of the ex-husband's contribution, subject to a maximum of 20s. a week for the first or only child plus 12s. for each other child in addition to Family Allowances. The contribution conditions for the allowance are substantially the same as for widow's benefit. The increase in this allowance under the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957, took effect as from Jan. 27, 1958.

GUARDIAN'S ALLOWANCE

Where the parents of a child are dead, and one at least of them was an insured person, any person who has the child in his family receives a guardian's allowance of 25s. 6d. a week while the child is of school age. The increase in this benefit under the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957, took effect as from Jan. 27, 1958. At the end of 1957 about 5,700 allowances were being paid.

RETIREMENT PENSIONS

A retirement pension is payable for life to an insured person who (a) is over pension age (65 for a man and 60 for a woman), (b) has retired from regular employment, and (c) has paid the prescribed number of contributions. Men aged 70 and over and women aged 65 and over are not required to satisfy condition (b).

The basic rate of pension as from Jan. 27, 1958 (under the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957) is 50s. a week, plus 30s. for a dependent wife, plus 15s. for the first or only child and 7s. for each other child.

Where the insured person postpones retirement beyond minimum pension age, the weekly rate of pension is increased, when he or she finally retires or reaches the age of 70 (65 for women), in respect of contributions paid as an employed or self-employed person during the five years after reaching minimum pension age. After Aug. 3, 1959, the increment to pension is 1s. for every 12 contributions. A retirement pensioner between the ages of 65 and 70 (60 and 65 for women) can choose to be treated as not retired and thus earn pension increments by temporarily foregoing his pension and paying contributions during employment or self-employment.

A man aged 65 to 70 (or a woman aged 60 to 65) who has qualified for pension will have it reduced by sixpence for each shilling of net earnings in excess of 60s. and a further sixpence for each shilling of net earnings in excess of 80s.

The Normal Contribution Conditions are (a) that 156 contributions of any class have been paid (104 if insurance began before September 30, 1946), and (b) that the yearly average of contributions paid or credited is not less than 50.

Special Provisions as to Women.—Subject to certain conditions, a married woman on reaching 60 or a woman on marriage after that age receives by virtue of her husband's insurance a retirement pension of 30s. a week. A widow over the age of 60 when her husband dies will usually qualify for a retirement pension of 50s. a week from her husband's insurance instead of a widow's pension. A retirement pension payable to a woman by virtue of her husband's insurance is increased by 6d. for every 12 contributions paid by the husband after Aug. 3, 1959, as an employed or self-employed person while he is over 65 and under 70 and she is over 60, but if he should die before her, any 6d. increase he earns for her will then be paid at the 1s. rate. The pension of a woman under 65 is reduced by sixpence for each shilling of her net earnings in excess of 60s. and a further sixpence for each shilling of her net earnings in excess of 80s.

Unemployment and sickness benefit is payable to men between 65 and 70 and women between 60 and 65 who have not retired from regular employment at the same rate as the retirement pension they would have been entitled to had they retired from regular employment.

At the end of March, 1958, retirement pensions, or contributory old age pensions under the old Acts, were being paid to approximately 4,790,000 persons. On July 5, 1958, about 300,000 "late-age entrants" (persons who were within ten years of pension age at July 5, 1948, and who had not previously been insured), and their wives became entitled to retirement pensions.

DEATH GRANT

A death grant is payable on the death of an insured person or of his wife, child or widow or, if the insured person is a woman, of her husband, child or widower. The normal grant (since Feb. 3, 1958) is for an adult £25, a child aged 6-17 £18 15s., a child aged 3-5 £12 10s., a child under 3 £7 10s. For the deaths of people who on July 5, 1948, were between 55 and 65 (men) or between 50 and 60 (women) the grant is £12 10s.

The normal contribution conditions for death grant are that (a) not less than 26 contributions of any class have been paid by or credited to the deceased or the person by virtue of whose insurance the grant is claimed since July 5, 1948, and (b) either not less than 45 contributions of any class have been paid by or credited to him in the previous contribution year, or the yearly average of the contributions paid or credited since July 5, 1948 (or 16th birthday if later) is not less than 45. No grant is payable for deaths of persons already over pension age on July 5, 1948, or of children born before July 5, 1948, if they die under the age of 10. In the year ended March 31, 1957, about 230,000 grants were paid.

The grant is paid to the deceased person's executors or administrators, if any; otherwise it is paid to the person who meets the funeral expenses or to the next of kin.

FINANCE

Under the Act of 1946 two funds are set up, viz. the National Insurance Fund, and the National Insurance (Reserve) Fund. The income from contributions, Exchequer grants and interest from both funds are paid into the National Insurance Fund, and payments are made out of the Fund to meet the cost of benefits and administration. Under the National Health Service Contributions Act, 1957, payments hitherto made from the Fund towards the cost of the National Health Service, which were equivalent to 10d. out of each total weekly National Insurance contribution for men, 8d. for women, and 6d. for boys and girls, were discontinued; consequential reductions were made in the rates of National Insurance contributions, and provision was made for separate National Health Service contributions, yielding twice the amount of the payments previously made from the National Insurance Fund to the National Health Service, to be collected in conjunction with the National Insurance contributions. Increases in the rates of National Health Service contributions under the National Health Service Contributions Act, 1958, took effect as from July 7, 1958. (See p. 971.)

Approximate receipts and payments of the National Insurance Fund for the year ended March 31, 1958, were as follows:—

The changes in the rates of contributions and benefits and of Exchequer supplement introduced by the National Health Service Contributions Act, 1957, and the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957, were in effect during part of 1957-58. The surplus of receipts over payments during the year was £2.4 million. Compared with 1956-57, the surplus fell by £31.3 million, receipts increasing by £8.4 million and payments by £39.7 million. The increase in payments was mainly due to a rise of £60.7 million in benefit payments (of which retirement pensions accounted for £34.2 million, and sickness benefit for £14.7 million), partly offset by the fall of £22.7 million in the contribution from the Fund to the National Health Service resulting from the introduction of separate National Health Service contributions.

The balance in the Reserve Fund at March 31, 1958, was £1,167.6 million, as compared with £1,167.5 million at March 31, 1957.

The Government Actuary estimated in January, 1959, that whereas under the present scheme the excess of expenditure over income of the Fund would rise to £138 million in 1961-62, £310 million in 1971-72, and £424 million in 1981-82, the financial provisions of the National Insurance Bill, 1959, would, on the Government's assumptions about future trends in unemployment, earnings, etc. produce small annual deficits up to the mid-70's and increasing annual surpluses thereafter.

INDUSTRIAL INJURIES INSURANCE

The National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Act, 1946, substituted for the Workmen's Compensation Acts, 1925 to 1945, a system of insurance against personal injury caused by accident arising out of and in the course of a person's employment and against prescribed diseases and injuries due to the nature of a person's employment. The scheme, which insures against personal injury caused and prescribed diseases and injuries developed on or after July 5, 1948, operates under the Act of 1946, as amended by the National Insurance (Industrial Injuries) Acts, 1948 and 1953, the National Insurance Acts, 1951, 1954 and 1957, the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957, and the Family Allowances and National Insurance Acts, 1952, 1956 and 1959, and Regulations made by the Minister under those Acts. Increases in the rates of contributions and benefits took effect, under the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957, on Jan. 27, 1958 in the case of death benefit, and on Feb. 3, 1958 in the case of other benefits and of contributions.

The Workmen's Compensation Acts, including the Workmen's Compensation (Temporary Increases) Act, 1943, (which is now made permanent) continue to apply, subject to certain amendments, to cases arising before the new scheme started.

The Workmen's Compensation (Supplementation) Scheme, 1951, which came into operation on July 11, 1951, provides for the payment out of the Industrial Injuries Fund of allowances supplementing workmen's compensation where the accident or disease happened before 1924.

The Pneumoconiosis and Byssinosis Benefit Scheme, 1952, provides for payment of benefits out of the Industrial Injuries Fund for those totally disabled by pneumoconiosis or byssinosis, and for dependants of those who died from one of those diseases, after December 31, 1949, if they are not covered by either the Workmen's Compensation Acts or the Industrial Injuries Acts. This Scheme was extended by the Amendment Scheme, 1954, to cases of partial disablement as a result of either disease, and was further amended by the Amendment Schemes, 1957 and 1958.

The Industrial Diseases (Miscellaneous) Benefit Scheme, 1954, provides for payment of benefit out of the Industrial Injuries Fund to or in respect of certain persons who are disabled or die or have died after December 31, 1949, as a result of certain malignant and other diseases due to occupational exposure to carcinogens, in cases where neither workmen's compensation nor benefit under the Industrial Injuries Act is payable.

As from August 28, 1956, under the Workmen's Compensation and Benefit (Supplementation) Act, 1956, a supplementary benefit of 17s. 6d. a week became payable out of the Industrial Injuries Fund to the classes of totally disabled persons mentioned in the Act who are receiving workmen's compensation.

INSURED PERSONS

The persons covered by the Industrial Injuries scheme correspond closely to the class of "employed persons" under the National Insurance Act, 1946 (excluding members of the Forces), and numbered in 1957 over 21½ million, of whom about one-third were women.

CONTRIBUTIONS

Contributions are payable by insured persons and their employers, unless exempted, and the Exchequer contributes an amount equal to one-fifth of the combined contributions of insured persons and employers.

The normal weekly rates of contributions payable by insured persons and employers respectively are 8d. and 9d. for men over 18, 5d. and 6d. for women over 18, 4d. and 5d. for boys under 18, and 3d. and 3d. for girls under 18. Normally contributions are paid by means of stamps on a single insurance card, the same stamp also covering National Insurance and National Health Service contributions.

There are no contribution conditions for the payment of benefits. Persons employed in insurable employment are covered from the time of starting work, but if employed while of school age pay no contributions.

BENEFITS

Injury Benefit is payable for not more than the first 26 weeks of incapacity; no payment is made for the first three days unless there are a further nine days of incapacity within the injury benefit period. Benefit is payable to persons over 18 and to juveniles with dependant's allowances, at the weekly rate of 85s. (days being paid for at one-sixth of the weekly rate), plus 30s. for one adult dependant, plus 15s. for the first or only child and 7s. for each other child. Juveniles not entitled to a child or adult dependant's allowance receive benefit at half the adult rate if under 17 and at three-quarters the adult rate if 17 and under 18.

Disablement Benefit is payable if at or after the end of the injury benefit period the insured person suffers from loss of physical or mental faculty such that the resulting disablement is assessed at not less than one per cent. (In cases of pneumoconiosis and byssinosis disablement benefit is paid from the start without a period of injury benefit.) The amount of disablement benefit varies according to the degree of disablement (in the form of a percentage) assessed by a medical board or medical appeal tribunal by reference to the claimant's disabilities (incurred as a result of the loss of faculty) as compared with a normal person of the same age and sex. In cases of disablement of less than 20 per cent., benefit normally takes the form of a gratuity paid according to a prescribed scale, but not exceeding £280. Where the degree of disablement is 20 per cent. or more, the benefit is a weekly pension payable either for a limited period or for life according to the following scale:

Degree of disablement	Weekly Rate
	s.	d.
100 per cent	85	0
90 " "	76	6
80 " "	68	0
70 " "	59	6
60 " "	51	0
50 " "	42	6
40 " "	34	0
30 " "	25	6

These are basic rates applicable to adults and to juveniles entitled to an increase for a child or adult dependant; other juveniles receive one-half the adult rate if under 17, and three-quarters of the adult rate if 17 and under 18.

Basic rates of pension are not related to the pensioner's loss of earning power, and are payable whether he is in work or not. Upon prescribed conditions, however, pension is supplemented for unemployability and in cases of special hardship. There is provision also for increases of pension during approved hospital treatment or if the pensioner requires constant attendance. An increase of 30s. for an adult dependant and of 15s. for the first or only child and 7s. for each other child is also payable where the pensioner is either entitled to an unemployability supplement or receiving approved hospital treatment. Subject to certain exceptions, a pensioner who is not in receipt of unemployability supplement can draw other national insurance benefits in full in addition to disablement pension.

Death Benefit, in the form of a pension, a gratuity or a weekly allowance for a limited period, available for widows and other dependants in fatal cases, depends in amount upon their relationship to the deceased and their circumstances at the time of death and not upon the deceased's earnings. A widow who was living with her husband at the time of his death receives a pension of 70s. a week for the first 13 weeks and thereafter of 56s. or 20s. a week according to circumstances, plus 20s. for the first or only child and 12s. for each other child.

Regulations impose certain obligations on claimants and beneficiaries and on employers, including, in the case of the former, that of submitting to medical examination and treatment and attending courses of vocational training or rehabilitation approved by the Ministry of Labour and National Service.

Industrial Diseases, etc.—The Act of 1946 extends insurance to prescribed industrial diseases and prescribed personal injuries not caused by accident, which are due to the nature of an insured person's employment and developed on or after July 5, 1948.

Determination of Questions and Claims.—Provision is made for the determination of certain questions (e.g., as to insurability and liability to contribute) by the Minister, and of "disablement questions" by a medical board (or a single doctor) or medical appeal tribunal or, on appeal on a point of law, by the Industrial Injuries Commissioner, subject to leave. Claims for benefit and certain questions arising in connection with a claim for or award of benefit (e.g., whether the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment) are determined by an insurance officer appointed by the Minister, or a local appeal tribunal consisting of a chairman appointed by the Minister and equal numbers of members representing employers and insured persons, or, on appeal, by the Commissioner.

About three-quarters of a million new awards of injury benefit are made each year. The number of awards of disablement benefit and of special hardship allowance has increased year by year. The number of disablement pensions in payment rose during the year ended October 31, 1957, from 143,500 to 148,300; of those in payment at the end of the period 40,900 were in respect of pneumoconiosis. During the same year the number of special hardship allowances in payment increased from 80,800 to 85,500. The annual number of awards of death benefit slightly exceeds 2,000; at the end of 1957, about 16,000 pensions and nearly 13,000 allowances were in payment.

As the Industrial Injuries scheme in general applies to cases arising after July 4, 1948, expenditure on benefits will not reach maturity for many years.

NATIONAL ASSISTANCE

The National Assistance Act, 1948, was designed, from July 5, 1948, to substitute for certain existing services provided by the State or by local authorities a unified State service of financial assistance according to need. The service is administered by the National Assistance Board, the ultimate responsibility to Parliament resting with the Minister of Pensions and National Insurance.

Application for assistance may be made by any person aged 16 or over who is in need, including a person who needs assistance in supplementation of a pension or insurance benefit. The National Assistance Acts, 1948 and 1959, and the National Assistance (Determination of Need) Regulations, 1948, as amended, lay down how the need of an applicant shall be determined, and for this purpose how his requirements and resources shall be computed.

The scale rates for requirements other than rent, prescribed by the amending Regulations which came into operation on September 7, 1959, are as follows:

	Ordinary	Special (a)
	s. d.	s. d.
Husband and wife.....	85 0	107 6 (b)

Aged 11-15.....	23 0	23 0
Aged 5-10.....	19 0	19 0
Aged under 5.....	16 0	16 0

(a) For blind and certain tuberculous persons.

(b) 12s. 6d. when both husband and wife are in the special classes.

The amount to be added for rent, if the applicant, or his wife or her husband, is a householder, or if the applicant is living alone, will be the net rent payable, or such a part thereof as is reasonable in the circumstances. If an applicant over the age of 18 is a member of a household but is not himself the householder, the amount to be added for rent will be a reasonable share of the rent payable by the householder, subject to a minimum addition of 2s. 6d. a week and a maximum of 15s. a week.

The rules for the computation of resources contain provisions for the treatment of capital and earnings and certain statutory disregards.

The amount to be paid by way of assistance is settled by the local officer of the Board; an applicant who is dissatisfied with the amount granted has a right of appeal to the local Appeal Tribunal, whose decision is final.

On July 5, 1948, national assistance had to be given to some 800,000 persons who had previously been receiving unemployment assistance (31,000), supplementary pensions (512,000), outdoor relief (200,000), blind domiciliary assistance (40,000), or tuberculosis treatment allowances (20,000). The number of weekly assistance allowances in payment rose from 1,011,000 at the end of 1948 to 1,810,000 in February, 1955. By the end of September, 1955, the number had fallen to 1,595,000, due mainly to the increase in benefit rates under the National Insurance Act, 1954. Subsequently, the number again rose, and at the end of 1957 had reached 1,712,000. Some reduction followed the increase in insurance benefit rates in January and February, 1958, and at the end of 1958 the number was 1,649,000, when the needs of nearly 2.4 million persons were being provided for wholly or in part. At the end of 1958 about 151,000 recipients were registered at the Employment Exchange; most of the rest were old, sick or otherwise incapable of work. More than two-thirds of the allowances were paid in supplementation of insurance benefits. During 1957 the Board also made about 922,000 single payments and 152,000 exceptional needs grants. In addition, assistance amounting to £1,797,000 was given to meet charges raised under the National Health Service for prescriptions, spectacles, dentures and dental treatment, and surgical appliances.

The total net expenditure of the Board during 1958 was about £139,120,000, as compared with £134,448,000 in 1957 and £60,760,000 in 1948. Included in the figure for 1958 were payments of national assistance £116,600,000, and payments of non-contributory old age pensions £13,800,000.

NON-CONTRIBUTORY OLD AGE PENSIONS

The maximum non-contributory old age pension payable under the Old Age Pensions Act, 1936, to persons aged 70 and over, and under the Blind Persons Act, 1938, to blind persons aged 40 and over, was increased in October, 1946, from 10s. a week to 26s. a week for single persons of either sex and married men, and 16s. a week for married women. Pension was payable at the maximum rate where the yearly means, calculated in accordance with the provisions of the Act, did not exceed £26 5s. od. Where the yearly means were between £26 5s. od. and £89 5s. od., pension was payable at rates varying from 24s. (16s. for married women) to 2s. Where the yearly means exceeded £89 5s. od., no pension was payable. As from Jan. 27, 1958, when, under the National Insurance (No. 2) Act, 1957, the issue of weekly tobacco tokens to pensioners ceased, non-contributory pensions were increased by an amount equal to the current value of the tokens, i.e., 2s. 4d.

The National Assistance Act, 1948, which charged the National Assistance Board with the administration of non-contributory old age pensions, assimilated the pensions procedure to the national assistance procedure, and the Board has power to supplement old age pensions by national assistance in case of need.

COMBINED WEEKLY CONTRIBUTIONS

Contributions to National Insurance, the National Health Service and, in the case of employed persons, Industrial Injuries Insurance are paid by means of stamps on a single insurance card.

The number of pensions in payment fell from 453,000 at the end of 1948 to 233,000 at the end of 1957, and declined further to 205,000 by the end of 1958. At the latter date, pensions were supplemented by national assistance in 129,000 cases. The award of new non-contributory pensions will eventually be brought to an end by the provisions of section 74 of the National Insurance Act, 1946, under which sighted persons will not qualify unless they reach the age of 70 by October 1, 1967.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

The Family Allowances Act, 1945, which was brought into operation from August 6, 1946, provided for a payment by the Minister of National Insurance out of moneys provided by Parliament of an allowance of 5s. a week for each child in a family other than the elder or eldest. From September 2, 1952, under the Family Allowances and National Insurance Act, 1952, the allowance was increased to 8s. From October 2, 1956, under the Family Allowances and National Insurance Act, 1956, the allowance for the third and each younger child was increased to 10s. The allowance is payable (through the Post Office) while a child is of school age or, if handicapped, under 16, and up to the age of eighteen years if he or she is undergoing full-time instruction in a school or is an apprentice. Claim forms for allowances can be obtained at any post office or local Pensions and National Insurance Office. Claims are decided by the National Insurance adjudication authorities.

At the end of January 1958, about 5,311,000 allowances were in payment for about 3½ million families. It is estimated that in 1957 over £122 million was paid in allowances (excluding administrative expenses), as compared with £63 million in 1951 and £111 million in 1956.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE

The National Health Service was inaugurated on July 5, 1948, by the Minister of Health under the National Health Service Act, 1946, "to promote the establishment in England and Wales of a comprehensive Health Service designed to secure improvement in the mental and physical health of the people of England and Wales and the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of illness." There are separate Acts for Scotland and Northern Ireland, where the Health Services are run on very similar lines.

The National Health Service is available to everybody in the country and is a charge on the National Income. Everyone is entitled to use any complete part or all of the services and no Insurance qualification is necessary. The cost of the Service is met by the National Exchequer, by contributions collected by the Ministry of Pensions and National Insurance together with National Insurance contributions (see p. 971) and by charges for the Service. About half the expenses of the local health services fall on local rates.

Under the 1946 Act, the only charges falling on the patient for any of the services were in certain cases for the renewal or repair of glasses or for the replacement of dentures; for domestic help, extra food at home, blankets, etc.; and for accommodation and treatment in private wards in hospitals. It was open to anyone, if they wished, in certain cases to pay the extra cost of more expensive glasses, more expensive dental treatment than is clinically necessary, and artificial limbs. In May, 1951, and May, 1952, charges were introduced for certain items in the National Health Service.

The National Health Service (Amendment) Act, 1949, had empowered the Minister inter alia to introduce a charge for prescriptions; a charge of 1s. for each prescription form was introduced on June 1, 1952, and this was increased to a charge of 2s. for each item on a prescription form on December 1, 1956. The National Health Service Act, 1951, authorized the making of charges to meet part of the cost of dentures and spectacles supplied through the Service. These charges came into force on May 21, 1951. The National Health Service Act, 1952, authorized the making of charges for medicines and certain appliances supplied to hospital out-patients, for dental treatment (excluding examination) provided under the General Dental Services and for day-nurseries run by local health authorities. These charges were effective from June 1, 1952. Patients who are unable without hardship to meet charges under these Acts may apply to the National Assistance Board and there are also some exemptions from charges made to out-patients and for dental treatment.

THE HEALTH SERVICES

Family Doctor Service

The Family Doctor Service is organized by 138 Executive Councils which also organize the Dental, Pharmaceutical and Supplementary Eye Services for their areas. There is an Executive Council for each County and County Borough area, but in some cases one Council covers two areas. Members, who serve voluntarily, are appointed by local doctors, dentists and pharmacists (12), the Local Health Authority (8) and the Minister of Health (5). All doctors may take part in the Family Doctor Scheme and about 20,000 out of some 21,000 general practitioners do so. They may at the same time have private fee-paying patients. Health Service doctors are paid on a capitation basis, i.e. an annual fee in respect of each patient accepted.

Everyone aged 16 or over can choose his doctor (parents or guardians choose for children under 16) and the doctor is also free to accept a person or not as he chooses. A person may change his doctor if he wishes, either at once if he has changed his address or obtained permission of the doctor on whose list he is, or by informing the local Executive Council (in which case a delay of about 14 days is usual). When people are away from home they can still use the Family Doctor Service if they ask to be treated as "temporary residents," and in an emergency, if a person's own doctor is not available, any doctor in the service will give treatment and advice.

Patients are treated either in the doctor's surgery or when necessary, at home. Doctors may prescribe for their patients all drugs and medicines which are medically necessary for their treatment and also a certain number of surgical appliances (the more elaborate being provided through the hospitals).

Drugs, Medicines and Appliances.—The number of chemists (including drug stores and appliance suppliers) in England and Wales, within the National Health Service at December 31, 1958, was 25,849. 203,384,933 prescriptions were dispensed in 1958. Since December 1, 1956, there has been a charge of 2s. in respect of each item on a prescription form made out by the family doctor and presented for dispensing. The only exception is where the doctor prescribes elastic hosiery, in which case the patient pays 5s. or 10s. on each article. In those country areas where the doctor does his own dispensing, the 2s. is paid to the doctor.

Dental Service

Dentists, like doctors, may take part in the Service and may also have private patients. About 10,300 of the dentists available for general practice have joined the National Health Service. They are responsible to the Executive Councils in whose areas they provide services.

Patients are free to go to any dentist taking part in the Service and willing to accept them, and do not require to register with any particular dentist. Dentists receive payment for items of treatment for individual patients, instead of the capitation fee received by doctors. There is no need for the patient to obtain a recommendation before seeking dental treatment. The dentist is able to carry out at once all normal conservative treatment (e.g. fillings), emergency treatment and ordinary denture repairs; he seeks prior approval from the Dental Estimates Board before undertaking treatment when it involves the removal of teeth necessitating replacement by denture; provision of dentures; extensive and prolonged treatment of the gums; gold fillings; inlays; crowns; special appliances and oral surgery.

A dentist may, with the approval of the Dental Estimates Board, charge his patient a prescribed sum for gold fillings or metal dentures where these are not clinically necessary, if the patient wishes to have them. Where a denture supplied under the Service has to be replaced because of loss or damage the whole or part of the cost may be charged to the patient if he has been careless. In May, 1951, charges were introduced for dentures whereby the patient has to pay £2 to £2 10s. for the supply of one denture or up to £4 5s. for a set. In June, 1952, a charge of £1, or the full cost of any treatment if less than £1, was introduced. No charge is made for the clinical examination of a patient's mouth. Charges for dental treatment (other than the usual charges for dentures) are not made in the case of anyone under 21 years of age or expectant mothers or mothers who have had a child during the preceding twelve months.

Supplementary Ophthalmic Service

Supplementary Ophthalmic Services which are run by the Executive Councils, form part of the Eye Services available under the National Health Service, and provide for the testing of sight and supply of glasses only. Any ophthalmic medical practitioner or ophthalmic optician who has joined the Service may be consulted. The first time a person uses the Service he must obtain a recommendation from his doctor that his sight needs testing. After this he can use the Service direct without first obtaining a note from his doctor.

Until 1951 there were no charges under the Supplementary Ophthalmic Service except, in certain cases, for the renewal or repair of glasses or where the patient chose a more expensive spectacle frame than one of the standard frames available free, or asked to be supplied with special lenses where only flat lenses were necessary. In May, 1951, charges to patients of 10s. for each lens, plus the actual cost of the frames, were introduced. Children's glasses in the standard type of children's frame remain free of charge.

Hospitals and Specialists

On July 5, 1948, ownership of 2,688 out of 3,040 voluntary and municipal hospitals in England and Wales was vested in the Minister of Health. The remaining hospitals were disclaimed; many were run by religious orders. The hospital service, of which the specialist and consultant facilities are a part, includes general and special hospitals; maternity accommodation; tuberculosis sanatoria; infectious diseases units; provision for chronic sick; mental hospitals and mental deficiency institutions; accommodation for convalescent hospital treatment and medical rehabilitation, and all forms of specialized treatments—for example, plastic surgery, cancer, orthopaedic and ear, nose and throat treatment, together with the provision of most surgical and medical appliances.

In the main, this part of the Service is organized by 15 Regional Hospital Boards (see p. 387); in each hospital region there is a University having a teaching hospital or medical school. Hospitals are administered on behalf of the Boards by 388 Hospital Management Committees. The only hospitals in the Service outside the Regional Boards' immediate responsibility are the teaching hospitals which provide facilities for undergraduate and post-graduate medical or dental education and which are administered by Boards of Governors. There are 26 Boards of Governors in London and 20 in the rest of the country.

Specialists and consultants who take part in the Service (and nearly all of them are doing so) hold hospital appointments. They can take up whole-time or part-time service and those who have part-time appointments can still accept fee-paying patients outside the Service.

Certain hospitals have accommodation in small wards or single rooms which, if not required for patients who need privacy for medical reasons, may be made available to patients who desire it as an amenity. Amenity bed charges are fixed under Regulations and are at present 6s. or 12s. per day. In such a case the patient pays nothing for the cost of treatment or the normal cost of maintenance. In some hospitals a number of pay-beds has been placed at the disposal of part-time specialists taking part in the Service for use by private patients who agree to pay full hospital maintenance costs, and (usually) private fees to the specialist as well. The fees that may be charged by specialists to patients occupying private pay-beds are normally restricted to 75 guineas to cover everything. For exceptionally long or complicated treatment this limit may be raised to 125 guineas and special arrangements may be made in a limited proportion of pay-beds for patient and doctor to agree to fees outside these limits.

Arrangements to obtain the service or advice of a hospital specialist are made by the patient's family doctor as in the past. A specialist usually sees a patient at the hospital or clinic at which he works, but arrangements will be made for the specialist to visit the patient at home if he is unable, for medical reasons, to be taken to hospital. No charges are made to National Health Service in-patients (except for amenity beds as above), but since December 1, 1956, a charge of 1s. has been made to out-patients for each item on a prescription form for drugs and medicines (unless administered at hospital). Exemptions from this charge are made in the case of patients receiving National Assistance or their dependants; war pensioners receiving medicines for their accepted disability; and patients attending V.D. clinics who receive medicines as part of their treatment. Also since June, 1952, hospital out-patients have to pay fixed charges for elastic hosiery, surgical abdominal supports, surgical footwear (and healing and soling repairs), dentures, glasses and wigs. Exceptions are made in the case of a child under 16 years of age or at full-time attendance at school, to National Assistance recipients and their dependants and to war pensioners in respect of their accepted war disabilities.

In June, 1959, there were 83 hospitals providing distribution centres where hearing aids can be obtained after recommendation by a specialist.

Local Health Authority Services

The Local Health Services, mainly concerned with the care of patients in their own homes, are the responsibility of the major local authorities—County Councils and County Borough Councils. There are 146 Local Health Authorities in England and Wales.

Local Health Services provide such services as midwifery; ante-natal, post-natal and infant welfare clinics, and dental services where practicable for expectant and nursing mothers and young children; health visiting; home nursing; ambulances; provision of domestic help on health grounds; special care and after-care of the sick; local mental health services; and also vaccination and immunization. It will also fall to the Local Health Authorities to develop Health Centres.

All these services are free of charge except for domestic help and, in certain cases, provision of residential accommodation, meals, nursing requisites, bedding, etc., for which a charge may be made according to means. Since June, 1952, Local Health Authorities have also had power to make charges for the use of day nurseries. The Local Health Authorities may only charge what is reasonable, having regard to the means of the users.

Legal Notes

ADOPTION OF CHILDREN

In England and Wales the adoption of children is regulated mainly by the Adoption of Children Acts, 1926 to 1949, and the Adoption Act, 1958. An order of court is necessary to legalize the adoption. Adoption puts the child adopted practically on the same footing as a child born to the adopter in lawful wedlock, in all matters of custody, education and maintenance; further, it is provided by the Act of 1958 that an adopted child shall be treated as the child of the adopter (and not the child of its natural parents) for the purpose of the devolution of property on an intestacy occurring, or under any disposition made, after the date of the adoption order. Applications are made to the High Court (Chancery), County Court, or Magistrates Court. Orders will not usually be made for a man to be sole adopter of a girl, and the applicant must be either:—

- (a) Twenty-five years of age or over; or
- (b) Twenty-one years of age or over and a relative (as defined in the Act of 1958) of the infant; or
- (c) the mother or father of the infant.

Two spouses may jointly adopt an infant, but unless one of them is the mother or father of the infant, condition (a) or (b) above must be satisfied in respect of one of the applicants and the other spouse must have attained the age of twenty-one.

The consent of the child's parents or guardian is required before an adoption order will be made, but in certain circumstances (e.g., where the parent or guardian has ill-treated or neglected the child) the Court may dispense with this consent. Since the 1949 Act, marriage between the adopter and the adoptee is prohibited, but marriages of that kind, solemnized before the passing of the Act, are not thereby invalidated.

The 1958 Act places restrictions on societies which make arrangements for the adoption of children.

Scotland.—The Adoption of Children (Scotland) Acts, 1930 to 1949, and the Adoption Act, 1958, cover the law relating to the adoption of children in Scotland, where an Adopted Children Register is maintained. Applications are made to the Court of Session, or the Sheriff Court within whose jurisdiction either the applicant or the child resides at the date of application. The Adoption Act, 1958, which is a consolidating Act, also applies, with modifications, to Scotland. Owing to divergence of the laws of England and Scotland there is not, however, complete uniformity in this branch of the law in both countries. Thus, in regard to property rights, an adopted child in Scotland remains a member of the family of his actual parents, and an adoption order does not deprive him of any legal rights competent to him in the estate of his parents, nor are any rights conferred on him as the child of the adopter.

All adoptions in Great Britain are registered in the Registers of Adopted Children kept by the Registrars General in London and Edinburgh respectively. Certificates from these registers, including short certificates which contain no reference to adoptions, can be obtained on conditions similar to those relating to birth certificates. (See below.)

BIRTHS (REGISTRATION)

When a birth takes place, personal information of it must be given to the Registrar of Births and Deaths for the sub-district in which the birth occurred, and the register signed in his presence, by one of the following persons:—

1. The father or mother of the child. If they fail;
2. the occupier of the house in which the birth happened;
3. a person present at the birth; or,
4. the person having charge of the child.

The duty of attending to the registration therefore rests firstly on the parents. The mother is responsible for the registration of the birth of an illegitimate child. The registration is required to be made within 42 days (Scotland 21 days) of the birth. Failure to do this, without reasonable cause, involves liability to a penalty of forty shillings (in Scotland the penalty is £1). The registration of a birth will be free when it takes place within 42 days (in Scotland 21 days). In England or Wales, the informant, instead of attending before the registrar of the sub-district where the birth occurred, may make a declaration of the particulars required to be registered in the presence of any registrar. The fee payable for this is 3s. 6d. There are special provisions relating to late registration. Under the Public Health Act, 1936, and the Public Health (London) Act, 1936, notice of every birth must be given by the father, or person in attendance on the mother, to the district medical officer of health by post within 36 hours of the birth. This is in addition to the registration already mentioned.

A "Stillbirth" must be registered and a certificate signed by the doctor or midwife who was in attendance at the birth or has examined the body of the child must be produced to the registrar.

The re-registration of the birth of a person legitimated by the subsequent marriage of the parents is provided for in the Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1953. In Scotland re-registration of a child legitimated per subsequens matrimonium or whose birth entry is affected by a Decree of Court respecting status or paternity is provided for by the Registration of Births, etc. (Scotland), Amendment Act, 1934.

Birth at Sea: The master of a British ship must record any birth on board and send particulars to the Registrar General of Shipping.

Birth Abroad: Consular Officers are authorized to register births of British subjects occurring abroad. Certificates are procurable in due course at Registrar General's office, London.

The registration of births occurring out of the United Kingdom among members of the armed forces, or occurring on board H.M. ships and aircraft, is provided for by the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Special Provisions) Act, 1957.

CERTIFICATES

OF BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, OR DEATHS

England and Wales.—Certificates of Births, Deaths, or Marriages can be obtained at the General Register Office, Somerset House, on payment of fees amounting to 5s. 3d., viz., 2s. 6d. for search, and 3s. 9d. for the certificate. (When application is made by post the charges are 7s. 6d.) They can also be obtained from the Superintendent Registrar having the legal custody of the register containing the entry of which a certificate is required. Certificates of marriages can also be obtained from the incumbent of the church in which the marriage took place (the customary fee being 3s. 9d.); or from the Nonconformist minister (or other "authorized person") where the marriage takes place in a registered building (See post under Marriage).

Certificates at reduced rates can be obtained for the purposes of certain Acts of Parliament, and under Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1953, a modified form of birth certificate, showing the names, sex and date of birth and certain other particulars, but not the parentage, may be obtained from the Registrar General, or the appropriate Superintendent Registrar or Registrar, on payment of a fee of 9d. (inclusive of search) and on furnishing certain particulars.

English Registers.—Records of births, deaths and marriages registered in England and Wales since 1837 are kept at the General Register Office, Somerset House. The Society of Genealogists, 37 Harrington Gardens, S.W.7, possesses many records of Baptisms, Marriages and Deaths prior to 1837, including copies, in whole or in part, of about 4,000 Parish Registers.

Scottish Registers of Births, Deaths and Marriages.—Certificates of births, deaths or marriages registered from 1855 when compulsory registration commenced in Scotland can be obtained at the General Registry Office, New Register House, Edinburgh, or from the appropriate local Registrar, on payment of the fee of 3s., viz.:—1s. for search and 2s. for the certificate. Certificates are issued at reduced rates for specified purposes as in England & Wales and similar provision exists for abbreviated birth certificates (see 6d.).

There are also available at the General Registry Office old parish registers of date prior to 1855, which were formerly kept under the administration of the Established Church of Scotland. An extract of an entry in these registers may be obtained at the fee of 3s. A fee of 20s. is payable for a general search of all the Scottish registers.

BRITISH NATIONALITY AND CITIZENSHIP OF THE UNITED KINGDOM AND COLONIES

General.—The law as to British Nationality is now to be found mainly in the British Nationality Act, 1948, which came into force on Jan. 1, 1949. The Act introduces a new term, "citizenship." Every person who under the Act is a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies, or any citizen (by virtue of legislation in that country) of Canada, Australia, New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, India, Pakistan, the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland or Ceylon (hereafter referred to as "the Dominions") has by virtue of that citizenship the status of a British subject, and may be known either as a British Subject or as a Commonwealth citizen. Under s. 2 of the Newfoundland (Consequential Provisions) Act, 1950, potential citizens of Newfoundland under the British Nationality Act, 1948, are deemed to have been potential citizens of Canada.

Nationality before Jan. 1, 1949, was determined mainly by the British Nationality and Status of Allen Acts, 1914-1943, though these Acts did not affect the status of any person born before Jan. 1, 1915.

Retention of nationality by persons born in or who are citizens of Eire (now by virtue of the Ireland Act, 1949, styled the Republic of Ireland).

By the Ireland Act, 1949, a person who was born before Dec. 6, 1922, in what is now the Republic of Ireland (Eire) and was a British subject immediately before Jan. 1, 1949, is not deemed to have ceased to be a British subject unless either (i) he was domiciled in the Irish Free State on Dec. 6, 1922, or (ii) was on or after April 10, 1935, and before Jan. 1, 1949, permanently resident there, or (iii) had before Jan. 1, 1949, been registered as a citizen of Eire under the laws of that country.

In addition by the British Nationality Act, 1943, any citizen of Eire who immediately before Jan. 1, 1949, was also a British subject can retain that status by submitting at any time a claim to the Home Secretary on any of the following grounds: (a) he has been in the service of the United Kingdom government; (b) he holds a British passport issued in the United Kingdom or in any colony, protectorate, United Kingdom mandated or trust territory; (c) he has associations by way of descent, residence or otherwise with any such place; or on complying with similar legislation in any of the "Dominions."

Citizenship of the United Kingdom and Colonies.

In the majority of cases, a person who is a British subject becomes also a "citizen," either of one of the "Dominions" by virtue of legislation in that country, or of the United Kingdom and Colonies under the 1948 Act. In the latter case, citizenship is acquired by:—

1. Birth on or after Jan. 1, 1949, in the United Kingdom and Colonies (which term does not include the "Dominions"), except

- (a) children born to non-citizen fathers enjoying diplomatic immunity from suit or legal process;
- (b) children born to fathers who are enemy aliens in enemy occupied territory.

2. Descent, if the father was a citizen by birth. If the father was a citizen by descent only, the child acquires citizenship by descent if either:—

- (a) the child is or his father was born in a protectorate, protected state, mandated territory or trust territory, or in a foreign country where Her Majesty then had jurisdiction over British subjects; or
- (b) the birth (occurring elsewhere than (a)) is registered at a United Kingdom consulate within one year; or
- (c) the father is at the time of birth in the service of the Crown under Her Majesty's United Kingdom government; or
- (d) the child is born in one of the "Dominions" in which a citizenship law has then taken effect and does not become a citizen thereof by birth.

3. Registration by the Home Secretary upon application by:—

- (a) a citizen of one of the "Dominions" or of the Republic of Ireland who can show either that he is ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom and has been so resident for a period of twelve months, or is in Crown service under the United Kingdom government, or, in certain circumstances, if he is serving under an international organization of which the United Kingdom Government is a member, or is in the employment of a body established in the United Kingdom;
- (b) a woman married to a United Kingdom, etc. citizen. If she is a British protected person or an alien she must take an oath of allegiance. (A woman who marries on or after Jan. 1, 1949, does not by virtue of that marriage acquire citizenship.)

A minor child of a citizen can be registered upon application being made by his parent or guardian.

4. Naturalization.—In order to be eligible for a certificate of naturalization an alien must:—

- (a) during the eight years preceding his application have resided for not less than five years (of which not less than one year immediately preceding the application must have been spent in the United Kingdom) in the United Kingdom or in any colony, protectorate, United Kingdom mandated or trust territory, or have been for five years in the service of the Crown; and

- (b) be of good character and have a sufficient knowledge of the English language; and
- (c) intend to reside in the United Kingdom or any colony, etc., or to enter or continue in the service of the Crown or in the service of certain organizations.

A British protected person who satisfies (b) and (c) above can apply for naturalization if he can show either that he has resided in the United Kingdom for the twelve months (or such shorter period as the Home Secretary may allow) immediately preceding his application, or that he is in the service of the Crown under Her Majesty's United Kingdom Government.

Instructions for the guidance of persons desiring to apply for a Certificate of Naturalization are supplied with the form of application which may be obtained from H.M. Stationery Office.

5. Incorporation of Territory when citizenship is granted to such persons as are specified by Order in Council.

6. Transitional Provisions, which confer citizenship on a person who was a British subject immediately before Jan. 1, 1949, if either:—

- (i) (a) he would, if born after that date, have qualified for citizenship by birth; or
- (b) he is a person naturalized in the United Kingdom and Colonies; or
- (c) he became a British subject by reason of annexation of territory which on Jan. 1, 1949, was included in the United Kingdom and Colonies; or
- (ii) at the time of his birth his father was a British subject and possessed any of the above qualifications; or
- (iii) he was born within territory comprised on Jan. 1, 1949, in a protectorate, protected state or United Kingdom trust territory; or
- (iv) he was not on that date a citizen or potential citizen of one of the "Dominions"; or
- (v) being a woman, had before Jan. 1, 1949, been married to a man who becomes, or would but for his death have become, a citizen.

A British subject who is merely a potential citizen of one of the "Dominions" continues as a British subject without citizenship until he becomes a citizen of such "Dominion" or of the Republic of Ireland, or an alien. If none of these has happened at the date when a citizenship law is passed in the country of which he is potentially a citizen, he becomes a citizen by descent of the United Kingdom and Colonies.

A woman who lost British nationality by reason of marriage to an alien regained it on Jan. 1, 1949.

By the Adoption Act, 1958, an adopted child becomes a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies as from the date of the adoption order if the adopter or, in the case of a joint adoption, the male adopter, is a citizen of the United Kingdom and Colonies.

Citizenship of the United Kingdom and Colonies can be lost:—

- (i) by declaration in the prescribed manner by a person who is also a citizen of a "Dominion" or of the Republic of Ireland or a national of a foreign country.

The Home Secretary can withhold registration of the declaration in time of war;

- (ii) where the Home Secretary is satisfied that citizenship by registration or naturalization was obtained by fraud, false representation, etc.;
- (iii) by the Home Secretary depriving a naturalized person of citizenship if such person has:—

- (a) shown himself by act or speech to be disloyal or disaffected towards Her Majesty; or
- (b) in time of war, traded with the enemy; or
- (c) within five years after becoming naturalized, been sentenced in any country to a term of twelve months imprisonment; or
- (d) continuously resided in foreign countries for seven years, and during that period has neither at any time been in the service of the Crown or of certain international organizations, nor registered annually at a United Kingdom consulate his intention to retain citizenship; and the Home Secretary is satisfied that it is not conducive to the public good that such person should retain his citizenship;

- (iv) where a naturalized person is deprived of citizenship of a "Dominion" or of the Republic of Ireland, the Home Secretary can also deprive him of citizenship of the United Kingdom and Colonies.
- (v) Under sect. 2 of the British Nationality Act, 1958, which contains special provisions with regard to citizens of Ghana.

STATUS OF ALIENS.—Property may be held by an alien in the same manner as by a natural-born British subject, but he may not hold public office, exercise the franchise or own a British ship or aircraft. The Republic of Ireland Act, 1949, declares that the Republic, though not part of H.M.'s Dominions, is not a foreign country, and any reference in an Act of Parliament to foreigners, aliens, foreign countries, etc., shall be construed accordingly.

CROWN—PROCEEDINGS AGAINST

Before 1947 proceedings against the Crown were generally possible only by a procedure known as a petition of right, which placed the litigant at a considerable disadvantage and which was not normally available at all in cases of tort (i.e., civil wrongs other than breach of contract). Thus, no proceedings would normally lie against the Government if a subject were injured by the negligent driving of a Government vehicle (although the driver could be sued) or if a Government employee were injured by the defective condition of the Crown premises on which he worked. Now, however, by the Crown Proceedings Act, 1947, which came into operation on Jan. 1, 1948, the Crown, in its public capacity, is largely placed in the same position as a subject, although some procedural disadvantages remain. Among exceptions to the Act are the following: (a) No action lies in tort against the Crown or the individual Crown servant for anything done or omitted to be done in relation to any postal packet or telephone communication, except for loss of a registered in and postal packet (in which case the action must be brought within one year of posting), not being a telegram. (b) The Crown and any member of the armed forces are immune from liability in tort in respect of death of, or personal injury to, another member of the armed forces on duty, provided that the death or injury is attributable to service for purposes of pension.

Scotland.—The Act extends to Scotland and has the effect of bringing the practice of the two countries as closely together as the different legal systems will permit. While formerly actions against the Crown, when permissible, were confined to the Court of Session, proceedings may now be brought in the Sheriff Court. The Lord Advocate is the proper defender in proceedings against the Crown.

The Act lays down that arrestment of money in the hands of the Crown or of a Government Department is competent in any case where arrestment in the hands of a subject would have been competent, but an exception is made in respect of Post Office Savings Bank deposits. On the other hand, the former rule that the wages and salaries of the servants of the Crown are not arrestable remains unaltered.

DEATHS, BURIAL AND CREMATION

DEATHS

(For Certificates, see under BIRTHS)

In England and Wales.—When a death takes place, personal information of it must be given to the local Registrar of Births and Deaths, and the register signed in his presence, by one of the following persons:—1. A relative of the deceased present at the death, or in attendance during the last illness. If they fail, 2. Some other relative of the deceased. In default of any relatives, 3. A person present at the death; or, the occupier of the house in which the death happened. If all the above-named fail, 4. An inmate of the house, or, the person causing the disposal of the body. Relatives present or in attendance are first required to attend to the registration. The registration must be made within five days of the death, or within the same time written notice of the death sent to the Registrar. If the deceased was attended during his last illness by a registered medical practitioner, a certificate of cause of death must be sent by the doctor to the registrar. The doctor must give to the informant of the death a written notice of the signing of the certificate, which must be delivered to the registrar. It is essential that a certificate for disposal should be obtained from the registrar before the funeral and delivered to the clergyman or other person in charge of the churchyard or cemetery. No fee is chargeable for this certificate. If the death is not registered within five days (or fourteen days if written notice of the occurrence of the death is sent to him) the Registrar may require any one of the above-mentioned persons to attend to register at a stated time and place. Failure to comply involves a penalty of forty shillings. The registration of a death is free of charge when it takes place within the above-mentioned periods. After twelve months no death can be registered without the Registrar General's consent and on payment of fees amounting to fifteen shillings.

A body must not be disposed of until (1) either the Registrar has given a certificate to the effect that he has registered or received notice of the death, or (2) until the Coroner has made a disposal order (Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1926, s. 1).

A person disposing of a body must within ninety-six hours deliver to the Registrar a notification as to the date, place, and means of the disposal of the body (ib. s. 3).

"Still-born" child. (See under Births (Registration), p. 974.)

Death at Sea.—The master of a British ship must record any death on board and send particulars to the Registrar General of Shipping.

Death Abroad.—Consular Officers are authorized to register deaths of British subjects occurring abroad. Certificates are procurable at the Registrar General's Office, London. If the deceased was of Scottish domicile, particulars are sent to the Registrar General for Scotland.

With regard to the registration of deaths of members of the armed forces, and deaths occurring on H.M. ships and aircraft, see the Registration of Births, etc. Act, 1957.

In Scotland, the rules of registration are similar, but (1) the death must be registered within 8 days, failure to do so involving a penalty of £1; (2) the medical man concerned must give a certificate of death to the Registrar in terms of the Registration of Births, &c. (Scotland) Act, 1854, within 7 days; (3) the informant of a death receives from the Registrar a certificate that the death has been registered. This is given to the undertaker, who delivers it to the keeper of the cemetery. Failure to comply is under penalty in all cases.

BURIAL

The duty of burial is incumbent on the deceased person's Executors (if any appointed); it is also a recognized obligation of the husband of a woman, and the parent of a child, also of a householder where the body lies. Funeral expenses of a reasonable amount will be repayable out of deceased's estate in priority to any other claims. Directions as to place and mode of burial are frequently contained in the deceased's will or in some memorandum placed with private papers, or may have been communicated verbally to a relative. Consequently steps should immediately be taken to ascertain the deceased's wishes from the above sources. If the wishes are considered objectionable, they are not necessarily enforceable; legal advice should be taken. A person may legally leave directions for the anatomical examination of his body. As to the place of burial—unless closed by Order in Council—the parish churchyard is the normal burying place for parishioners, or any person dying in the Parish, but nowadays this will apply only in villages and the smaller towns. In populous districts cemeteries and crematoria have been established either by the local council, or a private company, and burials will take place there in accordance with the regulations. For an exclusive right to a burial space in the churchyard a faculty is required from the Ecclesiastical Court. Poor persons may be buried at the public expense by the local authority. As to the necessity for obtaining a registrar's certificate or authority from the Coroner for disposal, see above.

CREMATION

Under the Cremation Acts, 1902 and 1952, regulations are made by the Home Secretary dealing fully with the cremation of a body, disposal of ashes, etc., and containing numerous essential safeguards.

If Cremation is desired it is advisable for instructions to be left in writing to that effect. Cremation may not take place if deceased has prohibited that form of disposal.

To arrange for Cremation the Executor or near relative should instruct the undertaker to that effect and obtain from him the Statutory Forms required as given in the Cremation Regulations issued in 1930 (Statutory Rules and Orders, 1930, No. 1026).

DIVORCE, ETC.

Preliminary.—Matrimonial Suits may be conveniently divided into three classes, viz. (1) those in which a declaration that there has never been a marriage is sought; (2) those in which the duties arising from marriage are sought to be upheld; and (3) those in which, the marriage being admitted, it is sought to end the marriage or the duties arising from it.

(1) Nullity of Marriage.—Marriage is void ab initio if the parties were in the prohibited degrees of affinity, if it was bigamous, if there was no sufficient consent on the part of one or both of the parties, if one of the parties was insane, or if one of the parties was under the age of consent, i.e., 16.—Marriage Act, 1949. Where the formalities of the marriage were defective, the marriage is generally void if both parties knew of the defect (e.g., where marriage took place otherwise than in an authorized building). But absence of the consent of parents or guardians (or of the Court or other authority, in lieu thereof) in the case of minors does not invalidate the marriage. Inability to consummate a marriage may also be a ground for a nullity decree; but in this case, the marriage is only voidable and remains valid until the decree is made.

Under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, which does not apply to Scotland, a marriage is also voidable (i.e., a decree of nullity may be obtained) on the following grounds—(a) respondent's wilful refusal to consummate the marriage; (b) that either party at the time of marriage was mentally defective or subject to recurrent fits of insanity or epilepsy; (c) that at the time of marriage the respondent was suffering from communicable venereal disease; (d) that at the time of the marriage the respondent was pregnant by another man. In cases, (b), (c) and (d), the petitioner must have been ignorant of the grounds at the date of the marriage and must not have agreed to intercourse taking place since discovering the grounds, and proceedings must be instituted within a year of the marriage.

By the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, and, as to Scotland, by the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, it is provided that a decree of nullity in respect of a voidable marriage shall not operate so as to bastardize any child, who would have been the legitimate child of the parties to the marriage if the marriage had been dissolved instead of annulled.

A spouse's insistence upon the use of contraceptives will not constitute wilful refusal to consummate within (a) above, even though there has been no normal intercourse, but it may in certain circumstances enable a petition for Divorce to be brought on the grounds of cruelty (as to which see below). Further it has been allowed as a defence to a charge of desertion against the aggrieved party.

In one High Court case the judge held that a husband's insistence on the practice of coitus interruptus amounted to wilful refusal to consummate the marriage, where there had been no other intercourse. In other High Court cases the judges have disagreed with this view, but held that, in the circumstances of the particular cases, a divorce could be granted on the ground of legal cruelty.

(2) Restitution of Conjugal Rights.—This is a form of relief generally sought by a spouse who has been deserted. Disobedience to a decree of restitution of conjugal rights is a ground for obtaining judicial separation.

(3) Judicial Separation and Divorce.—The third class of suit includes a suit for judicial separation (which does not dissolve a marriage) and a suit for divorce (which, if successful, dissolves the marriage altogether and leaves the parties at liberty to marry again). Either spouse may petition for judicial separation on the same grounds as those for divorce and also on the ground specified in (2) above.

Divorce.—Complete divorce is now obtainable by either husband or wife upon any one of the following grounds: adultery of respondent since marriage; desertion by respondent for 3 years immediately before petition; cruelty to petitioner; incurable insanity (under certain conditions); and by the wife, also on commission by the husband of certain criminal sexual offences. Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 1.

The foregoing is subject to a clause prohibiting any petition for divorce before the lapse of three years from the date of marriage, except in the case of exceptional hardship (upon petitioner) or of exceptional depravity of respondent.

Cruelty, in a legal sense, is conduct of such a character as to have caused injury or a reasonable apprehension of injury to life, limb, or health (bodily or mental). A course of conduct calculated to break the spirit of the sufferer, continued until health breaks down or is likely to break down under the strain, constitutes legal cruelty.

Desertion may be defined as a voluntary withdrawal from cohabitation by one spouse without just cause and against the wishes of the other. Where one spouse is guilty of conduct of a serious nature which forces the other to leave, the party at fault is said to be guilty of constructive desertion.

If, upon disputes arising, the parties agree to live apart, then in general neither can be said to have deserted the other.

When the decree will be refused.—A decree must be refused, even if the suit is undefended, if the allegations in the petition for divorce are not proved. (There is no such thing in the Divorce Court as judgment against the respondent by default.) Other absolute bars to relief are (i) connivance at the adultery of the respondent; (ii) collusion, as where the initiation of the suit is procured by agreement or bargain (but this does not prevent a fresh suit being brought free from collusion); (iii) condonation of the respondent's adultery or cruelty, i.e., complete forgiveness which restores the status quo (although the offence may be revived by later misconduct). There are also certain discretionary bars, as e.g., where the petitioner has been guilty of adultery; of unreasonable delay; of cruelty; or of wilful neglect or misconduct conducing to the adultery, insanity, or desertion alleged. (1950 Act, s. 4.)

Intervention by Queen's Proctor.—At any time during the progress of a suit, and before the decree nisi is made absolute, the Queen's Proctor may intervene.

Decree Absolute.—Every decree of dissolution or nullity is in the first instance a decree nisi. The marriage subsists until the decree is made absolute, usually three months after decree nisi. After that date either spouse may marry again; but as to marriage within "Prohibited Degrees" see Marriage—Miscellaneous Notes, pp. 987–8. By the Matrimonial Proceedings (Children) Act, 1958 a decree nisi cannot be made absolute until the Court is satisfied that arrangements have been made for the care and upbringing of every child of the family who has not attained the age of sixteen which are satisfactory or the best which can be desired in the circumstances or that it is impracticable for the parties before the Court to make any such arrangements.

Maintenance, etc.—The Court has wide powers to make orders as to maintenance or alimony (usually payable to an innocent wife), and as to costs. The husband can be ordered to pay his wife's costs, even if she is unsuccessful in her suit or defence. A guilty co-respondent may be ordered to pay costs and damages.

By the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, the High Court in England may, where the husband has wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for the wife or children, order the husband to make provision for them, even though no matrimonial suit is pending between the parties to the marriage, and while such an order is in force the Court may also deal with custody of and access to the children.

CUSTODY OF CHILDREN

In suits for nullity, divorce or judicial separation, whether the suit succeeds or is dismissed, the Court can make orders as to the custody of and access to the children and as to their upkeep and education, and these orders can be made not only in respect of children of the marriage but also in respect of a child of one party who has been accepted as one of the family by the other party. A guilty spouse will normally be entitled to reasonable access to the children and may even be awarded the custody if the Court thinks fit. The paramount consideration is always the welfare of the child.

A spouse who has been deprived of the custody of a child will not thereby be deprived of his other rights as the child's guardian unless the Court expressly so orders.

SEPARATION BY AGREEMENT

Husband and wife may agree, with or without consideration, to separate and live apart, but the agreement, to be valid, must be followed by an immediate separation. It is most desirable to consult a solicitor in every such case.

MAGISTRATE'S SEPARATION AND MAINTENANCE ORDERS

When a husband has been guilty of adultery or assault or has deserted his wife, or has been guilty of persistent cruelty to her or her children, or of wilful neglect to maintain her or her infant children, or where he is an habitual drunkard, or insists on having intercourse while suffering from a venereal disease, or compels her to submit herself to prostitution, the wife may obtain relief from the local magistrates' court. A husband may apply on the ground that the wife has been persistently cruel to his children; or is an habitual drunkard, or has committed adultery. The Court may declare that the applicant is no longer bound to cohabit with the other spouse. Where a wife is the applicant, the legal custody of children under sixteen may be given to her, and the husband may be ordered to pay a weekly sum not exceeding £5 for the benefit of the wife and a sum not exceeding £1 10s. a week for each child until the child attains sixteen. Further, if a child is or will be engaged in a course of education or training after attaining the age of sixteen, the Court may on the application of the wife continue an order for the payment of maintenance in respect of that child for a further period of up to two years from the date of the making of the order; such further period may be extended on subsequent applications to the Court, but this maintenance provision will in no case be extended beyond the date when the child attains the age of twenty-one. Where the husband applies, the custody of any children of the marriage may be given to him. The Court may, on giving the custody of any children to either spouse, make such order as to access to those children by the other spouse as it thinks fit. If the wife has been guilty of adultery, no order will be made on her application unless there was condonation or connivance or conduct conducing thereto by the husband; and if, having obtained an order, she commits adultery, the order must be discharged, unless the Court is of opinion that the husband condoned to the adultery by failing to make such payment of the separation allowances as he was able. An order may be altered, varied or discharged at any time on fresh evidence, or, as regards orders for payment, on cause being shown. All applications for relief, except on grounds of desertion or failure to maintain, must be made within six months of the offence complained of. The Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952, separates the hearing of matrimonial disputes from ordinary Court business; specifies the persons allowed to be present; limits newspaper reports, etc., etc.

SCOTLAND DIVORCE

Proceedings are brought in the Court of Session and it is necessary that the husband be domiciled in Scotland, or, he not being domiciled in the United Kingdom or in the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man, that the wife is resident in Scotland and has been ordinarily resident there for a period of three years immediately preceding commencement of proceedings.

The following are the grounds for divorce:—

1. Adultery.—A mere confession by the defender is of itself insufficient; there must be proof of the facts. Direct evidence is not required, if facts can be established which give rise to an inevitable inference of adultery. There must be no collusion between the parties, and the pursuer is required to swear to this. It is not collusion, however, for a guilty spouse to give information of an act of adultery already committed. It is a defence to an action of divorce for adultery to plead that the innocent spouse has condoned the misconduct on which the action is founded.

2. Desertion.—The defender must have wilfully and without reasonable cause deserted the pursuer and persisted in such desertion for a period of not less than three years. It must be shown that the desertion was without reasonable cause, and that the pursuer has throughout the period been willing to adhere. Refusal by one spouse to have marital relations with the other for any period of three years without any overt act of desertion does not constitute desertion. Here also, collusion is fatal to the success of the action.

3. Incurable Insanity.—The defender must, for five years preceding the raising of the action, have been under care and treatment as an insane person.

4. Cruelty.—The degree of cruelty to be established depends on the circumstances of each individual case, but the test, generally speaking, is that the conduct complained of must be such as to endanger the health of the pursuer. Cruelty may take the form of habitual drunkenness on the part of one of the spouses.

5. Unnatural Sexual Offences.—An extract of the criminal conviction is sufficient proof.

Effect of Divorce on Property.—A husband or wife obtaining decree of divorce against the other, except on the ground of incurable insanity, is entitled to claim his or her legal rights, jus relictii, however, being excused, as if the offender was dead. Where there has been a successful cross-action the effect is the same as though both spouses had died at the date of decree.

Nullity of Marriage.—A declaration of nullity of marriage may be obtained on the ground of any impediment, viz., consanguinity and affinity, subsistence of a previous marriage, non-age of one of the parties, incapacity or insanity of one of the parties, or by the absence of genuine consent.

SEPARATION

A decree of judicial separation may be obtained by one spouse against the other on the grounds of (a) adultery, (b) cruelty. This entitles the parties to live apart, but does not dissolve the marriage. The husband, if the guilty party, is liable for alimony.

CUSTODY OF CHILDREN

In actions for divorce and separation, the Court has a discretion in awarding the custody of the children of the parties. The welfare of the children is the paramount consideration, and the mere fact that a spouse is the guilty party in the action does not of itself deprive him or her of the right to claim custody, though where the considerations of welfare are equally balanced the Court will have regard to the element of guilt.

HIRE-PURCHASE

ENGLAND AND WALES

Protection of the purchaser against unscrupulous dealings is given by the Hire-Purchase Act, 1938 (as amended by the Hire-Purchase Act, 1954), which applies to a hire-purchase agreement under which the hire-purchase price i.e., the total sum payable by the hirer to complete the purchase of the goods, does not exceed £1000 for livestock, or £300 in any other case.

Before any agreement is made, the owner of the goods must state in writing to the hirer the cash price at which the goods can be purchased, and there must be a memorandum of the agreement signed by the hirer himself and by or on behalf of the owner and any guarantor. The memorandum must contain (i) the cash price, (ii) the hire-purchase price, (iii) the amount of each instalment, (iv) when each instalment falls due, (v) a list of the goods, and (vi) a notice informing the hirer of his right to terminate the agreement (below), and of the restrictions on the owner's right to recover the goods (below), and a copy of the memorandum must be sent to the hirer within seven days of the agreement being made. In breach of any of these conditions the owner can neither recover the goods nor enforce the agreement or any security given, although the Court can dispense with any of these requirements save that as to the signed memorandum. The same result ensues (while default continues) if the owner fails without reasonable cause within four days after written request (with a tender of 1s. for expenses) to supply to the hirer a copy of the agreement and a statement of amounts paid, in arrear, and not yet payable. Before the last instalment becomes due, the hirer may by writing determine the agreement, and, although he will not thereby escape liability for any instalments which have already become due he will be under no further obligation under the agreement. Under the Act, however, he must allow the owner to retake the goods and, if one-half of the hire-purchase price exceeds the total of the sums paid and due, he must pay the difference to the owner. These rights of the hirer cannot be taken away from him, but he can enforce more favourable rights (if any) under the agreement.

Any provision in the agreement giving the owner a right to enter any premises for the purpose of seizing the goods is invalidated by the Act. Further, even though the agreement may have been terminated because the hirer has broken it, or because the owner has exercised a right to terminate it, if one-third of the hire-purchase price has been paid or tendered, the owner cannot recover the goods otherwise than by action in a County Court, in which the Court can ensure that the hirer is fairly treated. If the owner disregards this provision, the hirer cannot recover the goods, but can recover all sums paid under the agreement.

SCOTLAND

The Hire Purchase and Small Debt (Scotland) Act, 1932, provides that no contract of hire purchase to which the Act applies is binding on the hirer unless (1) it is signed by him and (2) either a copy is acknowledged by him to have been delivered at the time of his signature or sent to him by registered post within fourteen days thereafter. Any contract which limits any right conferred by the Act on the hirer is void to that extent. The hirer may terminate the contract at any time by (1) re-delivery of the article in a good state of repair, fair wear and tear excepted, and (2) paying any instalment then due together with the amount, if any, by which one-third of the total payments stipulated for in the contract by way of instalment exceeds the cumulo amount of the instalments due. Even after the owner has obtained decree of delivery of an article, the hirer is entitled to retain it in his possession or to recover it if, within fourteen days of the decree, he pays the whole instalment which is due, with expenses.

The above Act was extended by the Hire Purchase Act, 1954, to apply to articles exceeding £300 in value.

ILLEGITIMACY AND LEGITIMATION

ENGLAND AND WALES

A man may be summoned to petty sessions on the application of the mother of a bastard child, or by the Public Assistance Authority where the child becomes chargeable to the local authority, and the Justices, on his being proved to be the father of the child, may make an order requiring him to pay for its maintenance and education a sum not exceeding 20s. a week. The evidence of the woman must be corroborated in a material particular. The mother has the custody of her bastard children. Prima facie every child born of a married woman during a marriage is legitimate; and this presumption can only be rebutted by strong, distinct, satisfactory and conclusive evidence.

LEGITIMATION.—By the Legitimacy Act, 1926, which came into force on Jan. 1, 1927, where the parents of an illegitimate person marry, or have married, whether before or after that date, the marriage, if the father is at the date thereof domiciled in England or Wales, renders that person, if living, legitimate as from Jan. 1, 1927, or from the date of the marriage, whichever last happens. Under the Act of 1959, marriage legitimates a person whose father or mother was married to a third person at the time when the illegitimate person was born. It is the duty of the parents to supply to the Registrar General information for re-registration of the birth of a legitimated child.

Declarations of Legitimacy.—A person claiming that he, his parent, or any remoter ancestor has become legitimated, may petition the High Court or the County Court for the necessary declaration.

Rights and Duties of Legitimated Persons.—A legitimated person, his spouse or issue may take property under an intestacy occurring after the date of legitimation, or under any disposition (e.g., a will) coming into operation after such date, as if he had been legitimate.

He must maintain all persons whom he would be bound to maintain had he been born legitimate, and he is entitled to the benefit of any Act of Parliament which confers rights on legitimate persons to recover damages or compensation. The Act specially provides that nothing therein contained is to render any person capable of succeeding to or transmitting a right to any dignity or title.

SCOTLAND

Illegitimate Children (Scotland) Act, 1930.—The mother of an illegitimate child may raise an action of affiliation and aliment against the father, either in the Court of Session or, more usually, in the Sheriff Court. Where in any such action the Court finds that the defender is the father of the child, the Court shall, in awarding inlying expenses, or aliment, have regard to the means of the parties, and the whole circumstances of the case. The Court may, upon application by the mother or by the father of any illegitimate child, or in any action for aliment for an illegitimate child, make such order as it may think fit regarding the custody of such child and the right of access thereto of either parent, having regard to the welfare of the child and to the conduct of the parents and to the wishes as well of the mother as of the father and may on the application of either parent recall or vary such order. The obligation of the mother and of the father of an illegitimate child to provide aliment for such child shall (without prejudice to any obligation attaching at common law) endure until the child attains the age of sixteen years.

By Scots Law an illegitimate child is legitimated by the subsequent marriage of its parents provided there was no impediment to the marriage of the parents at the time of the conception of the child. Such legitimation is recognized by International Law so far as the laws of particular countries allow it and is valid to that extent in England. By the Legitimacy Act, 1926, an illegitimate child may, in certain circumstances, succeed on intestacy. By the Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1934, a child so legitimated, who has already been registered as illegitimate, may, in certain circumstances be re-registered as legitimate. The consent of the father of an illegitimate child to its adoption is not required.

INTESTACY

ENGLAND AND WALES

As regards deaths on or after January 1, 1953, the position is governed by the Administration of Estates Act, 1925, as amended by the Intestates' Estates Act, 1952. The latter Act considerably increased the benefits of a surviving spouse of an intestate, and also extended the provisions of the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938 (see under "Wills"), to intestacies. These notes deal with the position under the 1952 Act, so that if the death occurred before 1953 reference must be made elsewhere. If the intestate leaves a spouse and issue, the spouse takes (i) the "personal chattels"; (ii) £5,000 with interest at 4 per cent, from death until payment; and (iii) a life interest in half of the rest of the estate. This life interest can be capitalized at the option of the spouse. "Personal chattels" are articles of household use or ornament (including motor-cars), not used for business purposes. The rest of the estate goes to the issue. If the intestate leaves a spouse and no issue, but leaves a parent or brother or sister of the whole blood or issue of such brothers and sisters the spouse takes (i) the "personal chattels"; (ii) £20,000 with interest at 4 per cent, from death until payment, and (iii) half of the rest of the estate absolutely. The other half of the rest of the estate goes to the parents, equally if more than one, or, if none, to the brothers and sisters of the whole blood. If the intestate leaves a spouse, but no issue, no parents, and no brothers or sisters of the whole blood or their issue, the spouse takes the whole estate absolutely. If resident therein at the intestate's death, the surviving spouse may generally require the personal representatives to appropriate the interest of the intestate in the matrimonial home in or towards satisfaction of any absolute interest of the spouse, including the capitalized value of a life interest. In certain cases, leave of Court is required. On a partial intestacy, any benefit (other than personal chattels specifically bequeathed) received by the surviving spouse under the will must be brought into account against the statutory legacy of £5,000 or £20,000 as the case may be. If there is no surviving spouse, the estate is distributed among those who survive the intestate in the following order (those entitled under earlier numbers taking to the exclusion of those entitled under later numbers):—(1) issue; (2) father or mother (equally, if both alive); (3) brothers and sisters of the whole blood; (4) brothers and sisters of the half blood; (5) grandparents (equally, if more than one alive); (6) uncles and aunts of the whole blood; (7) uncles and aunts of the half blood; (8) the Crown.

In cases (1), (3), (4), (6) and (7) the persons entitled lose their interests unless they or their issue not only survive the intestate, but also attain twenty-one or marry under that age, their shares going to the other persons (if any) within the same group who do attain twenty-one or marry. Moreover, in the same cases, succession is not per capita, but per stirpes, i.e., by stocks or families. Thus, if the intestate leaves one child and two grandchildren, being the children of a child of the intestate who pre-deceased the intestate, the two grandchildren represent their deceased parent and take between them one-half of the issue's share, the remaining half going to the surviving child. Similarly, nephews and nieces represent a deceased brother, and so on.

When the deceased died partially intestate (i.e., leaving a will which disposed of only part of his property), the above rules apply to the intestate part.

Children must bring into account (hotchpot) any substantial advances received from the intestate during his lifetime before claiming any further share under the intestacy. Special hotchpot provisions apply to partial intestacy.

Note that the old rule of primogeniture no longer applies.

For further details, see Administration of Estates Act, 1925, as amended by the Intestates' Estates Act, 1952.

The Legitimacy Act, 1926, contains special provisions concerning the intestacy of an illegitimate child or the mother of an illegitimate child.

SCOTLAND

Heritage.—The lines of succession are: (1) descendants; (2) collaterals; (3) ascendants and their collaterals and so on in the ascending scale. Males have preference over females and the rule of primogeniture obtains. Regard is had, however, to the right of representation; thus, if the eldest son of the deceased, being his heir, has predeceased him leaving issue, the issue (whether male or female) are preferred to the younger sons of the deceased. Daughters only succeed if there are neither sons nor the issue of predeceasing sons, and where there are more than one, they share equally. There being no descendants, brothers, etc., will succeed, those of the full blood excluding those of the half blood. Among collaterals it is noted that the deceased's immediate younger brother is preferred to an elder brother. Failing a younger brother and his issue the estate ascends to the next elder brother and so on. If there are no brothers and sisters, nor the issue of brothers and sisters, the estate goes to the father and falling him to his collaterals; falling these the estate ascends to the paternal grandfather and his collaterals. The succession never ascends to the mother and her relations; even the mother's own estate, after vesting in her son or daughter, never ascends to the maternal line again.

By the Intestate Husband's Estate (Scotland) Acts, 1912, 1919 and 1959, the widow of a man dying intestate and without lawful issue is entitled to the whole estate both heritable and moveable if under £5,000 in value; if over that amount, she takes £5,000 with interest at 4 per cent. from the date of death, out of the heritable and moveable estate rateably before any division is made, and without prejudice to her rights of terce and jus relictæ (see post, p. 992). Section 5 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act, 1940, gives like rights to a surviving husband. The same section covers the case of partial intestacy.

Moveable.—One-third of the moveable estate goes to the surviving spouse as jus relictæ (relictæ); one-third to surviving children as legitim (see post, p. 992); and one-third to surviving children and issue of predeceased children per stirpes, i.e., the share which would have fallen to a predeceased parent, if alive, is divided equally among the children. Where no children or issue of children survive, half of the estate goes to the surviving spouse and half to the heirs in mobilitas, i.e., nearest heirs including representatives of predecessors, subject to the spouse's right to £5,000 (supra). The lines of succession are the same as in heritable succession, but the right of representation (supra) only applies where there are next of kin or the issue of predeceased next of kin. Intestate Moveable Succession (Scotland) Act, 1855 (amended 1919). Beyond that relationship heirs take per capita. Where an intestate leaves no issue and is predeceased by his father, his mother is entitled to the same rights as the father would have had on survivorship (1919 Act).

JURY SERVICE

Liability to Jury Service depends upon inclusion in the local jury book. This is compiled from the Electors Lists for each year (see post under "Voters' Qualifications"). The names of all persons who are on 10th October qualified and liable to serve as jurors are marked with the letter "J" on the Electors Lists. The marked Electors Lists are published, and anyone whose name is improperly marked may before the following 17th December claim that, although qualified to serve [see below] he is exempt from service [see below]; the marks will be removed from the names of exempted persons. The remaining marked names are thereafter included in the jury book. No one whose name actually appears in the jury book may claim exemption on any ground whatever except illness or, if a woman, for medical reasons.

QUALIFICATIONS

England and Wales.—Every man and woman between the ages of 21 and 60 years [persons over 60 are exempt but not disqualified] residing in England or Wales being the owner, legally or under a trust, of freehold land worth £10 a year or more, or of leasehold land worth £20 a year or more (if the lease is for at least 21 years) in the county in which they live; or being a householder rated in respect of premises of a net annual value of at least £20 (or in London or Middlesex £30); is qualified and liable to serve on juries in the superior courts (civil and criminal), and at Assizes in their own county, and on petty juries in the local County Court or Quarter Sessions. Also all burgesses of boroughs having separate quarter sessions or a borough civil court are qualified and liable to serve on juries therein. Special regulations govern the qualifications and method of listing common jurors in the City of London; and jurors for a coroner's inquest. By the Juries Act, 1949, a person attending for jury service is entitled to be paid travelling and subsistence allowances together with compensation for loss of earnings and other loss or expenses.

Disqualifications.—Any person who has been attainted of treason or felony, or convicted of any infamous crime (unless he has obtained a free pardon) is disqualified from service on all juries.

Exemptions.—The persons who are exempt from serving on juries (including coroner's juries) include: peers; M.P.'s; judges; ministers of religion (Christian and Jewish); practising lawyers; officers of the Courts; coroners; prison, etc., officers; asylum keepers; practising M.R.C.S.'s, M.R.C.P.'s and L.R.C.P.'s; practising apothecaries, doctors and chemists (and registered practising dentists at their option); midwives; members of the armed forces; members of the Territorial Army (in certain cases) or the Royal Auxiliary Air Force; members of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, and of the Port of London Authority; certain members of Trinity House, Deptford Strand; masters of buoy and light vessels under the Trinity Houses, and all licensed water pilots; household servants of the Crown; officers of the Post Office, customs and excise; sheriff's officers; police officers; special constables; metropolitan magistrates and their court clerks and servants; officers of the Houses of Parliament; Registrars of births, deaths, and marriages.

As to their own counties: members of the L.C.C., and commissioners of income tax.

As to their local counties: borough councillors and J.P.'s, town clerks and borough treasurers; burgesses of boroughs having separate Quarter Sessions are exempt from serving on the County Sessions.

As to their own area of jurisdiction: J.P.'s.

Moreover a juror can never be called upon to serve oftener than once in each year; this period of exemption is longer in certain counties.

JURY SERVICE IN SCOTLAND

It is the duty of the Sheriff in each county to make up a list of persons qualified and liable to serve as jurors. The list is compiled from information which every householder is required to provide. From this list the General Jury Book is made up. Part II of the Juries Act, 1949, applies only to Scotland and provides, inter alia, for the payment of travelling expenses and subsistence allowances to jurors, and for compensation for loss of earnings, of which the latter must not exceed 20s. per day.

QUALIFICATIONS

Every man or woman between the ages of 21 and 60 is qualified, who is possessed of heritable property of the yearly value of at least £5, or of moveable property of the value of at least £200 sterling.

Exemptions.—The persons who are exempt from serving on juries include: peers, judges of the supreme courts, sheriffs, magistrates of Royal Burghs, ministers of religion, parochial schoolmasters, practising lawyers, clerks and officers of court, prison officers, university professors, physicians, surgeons and dentists, officers in the Navy or Army on full pay, customs officers, messengers-at-arms and other officers of the law, lighthouse keepers and their assistants, soldiers, members of the Territorial Army and the Auxiliary Air Force (in certain circumstances), Inland Revenue officials and officers of the Post Office.

Jurors failing to attend without good cause are liable to a penalty.

LANDLORD AND TENANT ENGLAND AND WALES

Although basically the relationship between the parties to the lease is governed by the lease itself, the law on this subject is complicated by the mass of legislation thereon, and no attempt is made here to deal in any detail with that legislation. Some of the statutes which govern specific aspects of the topic are set out at the end of this note with brief particulars. The few points dealt with may show the desirability of seeking professional assistance in these matters. Important statutes include:—

(1) As to agricultural holdings—the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948. Among other things, this Act regulates the length of notice necessary to determine an agricultural tenancy, the tenant's right to remove fixtures on the land, his right to compensation for damage done by game, for improvements and for disturbance, and his right to require the consent of the Agricultural Land Tribunal to the operation of a notice to quit.

(2) As to business premises—the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, which does not extend to Scotland, has made substantial changes in the law. The compensation for improvement provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, are still applicable, although slightly amended, but the compensation for loss of goodwill and right to a new lease provisions of the 1927 Act have gone. Part II of the 1954 Act gives security of tenure to the tenant of most business premises, and in effect he can only be ousted on one or more of the seven grounds set out in the Act. In some cases, where the landlord can resume possession, the tenant is entitled to compensation.

(3) As to unfurnished dwelling houses—the complicated mass of legislation generally known as the Rent Acts. If a house is within these Acts, the tenant may have a personal right to reside in the house and can only be ousted on certain grounds. Further, each house within the Acts has a rent limit, and the rent recoverable by the landlord is limited to this rent. Details of how this rent limit is determined are contained in the Rent Act, 1957 (see below). If there is a mortgage of a house which is within the Acts, the mortgagee can only take steps to enforce his security if certain grounds exist. Further, he cannot in general increase the rate of interest.

Houses let at a rent which includes board or substantial attendance or furniture are governed by the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946, as amended by the Landlord and Tenant (Rent Control) Act, 1949, if within the limits of rent control imposed by the Rent Act, 1957 (see below).

Since the Rent Act, 1957, the Rent Acts do not apply to a lease of a dwelling house granted for a term certain exceeding twenty-one years, but Part I of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, gives protection in such cases, provided the rateable value does not exceed £100 in London and elsewhere in England and Wales, £75. Under this Act, the contractual tenancy is automatically extended until brought to an end in the manner prescribed by the Act, and in effect the landlord can only get possession on one of the grounds specified in the Act.

The Rent Act, 1957, has made considerable inroads into the importance of rent control by removing many houses from control altogether and fixing new maximum rent limits for all houses which remain subject to control. The principal changes effected by this Act are as follows:

1. Any house whose rateable value on November 7, 1956, exceeded £40 in London and elsewhere £30, is automatically decontrolled (and the operation of the Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act is restricted to houses within the same limits of rateable value). However, the landlord cannot recover possession earlier than the date specified in a notice served by him, which must not be earlier than six months after service of the notice, and to recover possession the landlord must bring court proceedings. If, in these proceedings, the tenant can satisfy the court as to certain matters, the court can suspend the execution of the order for possession for a certain period. There are special provisions with regard to the rent payable by the tenant after the date specified in the landlord's notice. (Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1958.)

2. No tenancies beginning on or after July 6, 1957, are subject to control unless the person to whom the tenancy is granted is already a protected tenant of that house.

3. For all houses remaining subject to control the maximum rent is determined by reference to the gross value shown in the rating valuation list on November 7, 1956. The maximum rent is then computed as follows:—(a) where the tenant is not responsible for repairs other than internal decorative—twice the 1956 gross value; (b) where the landlord is responsible for all repairs including internal decorative— $\frac{2}{3}$ of the gross value; (c) where the tenant is responsible for all repairs— $\frac{4}{3}$ of the gross value. (There are varying proportions in certain other cases.) In all cases there may be added, (a) rates borne by the landlord; (b) a reasonable charge for services provided by the landlord.

4. All increases in rent are only applicable to a statutory and not a contractual tenancy, except so far as may be consistent with the terms of the tenancy.

5. In order to obtain any increase in the rent of premises remaining subject to control, the landlord must serve notice of increase in the prescribed form which will take effect from the date specified therein; this date must be at least three months after service of notice, and the rent cannot be increased by more than 7s. 6d. a week during the nine months following service of the notice.

6. A notice to quit any dwelling house must be given at least four weeks before it is to take effect.

The 1957 Act also provides that the tenant of a decontrolled house may, before giving up possession, claim compensation for an improvement made after August 15, 1945, unless the landlord has made written objection to the improvement before completion.

SCOTLAND

A Lease is a Contract, the relationship of the parties being governed by the terms thereof. As is also the case in England (see the foregoing Section) legislation has played an important part in regulating that relationship. Thus, what at Common Law was an Agreement binding only the parties to the deed, becomes in virtue of Statute 1449 c. 17, a contract binding the landlord's successors, as purchasers or creditors, provided the following four conditions are observed: (1) the lease, if for more than one year, must be in writing, (2) there must be a rent, (3) there must be a term of expiry, and (4) the tenant must have entered into possession.

It would be impracticable in a brief section of these Notes to enter upon a general discussion of this branch of the law and, accordingly, the plan adopted in the preceding Section of quoting a few important Statutes is followed here.

The Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act, 1949, which is a consolidating act applicable to Scotland, contains provisions similar to those in the English Act, which is alluded to in the preceding Section. It cannot here be analysed in detail.

It is of interest to note that the Small Landholders Act, 1921, provided for the setting up of the Land Court which has jurisdiction over a large proportion of agricultural and pastoral land in Scotland.

In Scotland business premises are not controlled by Statute to so great an extent as in England, but the Tenancy of Shops (Scotland) Act, 1949, gives a measure of security to tenants of shops. This Act enables the tenant of a shop who is threatened with eviction to apply to the Sheriff for a renewal of the tenancy. If the landlord has offered to sell the subjects to the tenant at an agreed price the application for a renewal of the tenancy may be dismissed. Reference should be made to Section 3 (3) of the Act for particulars of other circumstances under which the Sheriff has a discretion to dismiss an application. The Act applies to premises held by the Crown or Government Departments, either as landlord or tenant.

The series of complicated statutes known as The Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Acts, 1920 to 1939, largely govern the relations between landlord and tenant in regard to certain unfurnished houses—including parts thereof if let as separate dwellings—and it is important to note that notwithstanding conditions in the lease of a controlled house providing for the removal of the tenant, it is not possible to contract out of the Acts. Employees occupying premises by virtue of their employment are not tenants and so cannot claim protection. The Housing (Repairs and Rents) (Scotland) Act, 1954, provides for increase in rent of a controlled dwelling house on which repairs of a certain value have been carried out. The Rent of Furnished Houses Control (Scotland) Act, 1943 contains provisions applicable to houses or parts of houses let with furniture and with or without services, as also to unfurnished premises let with services. These Acts have however been substantially altered or modified by The Rent Act, 1957. The changes in the law are inter alia as follows:—(1) Dwelling houses, the rateable value of which was on November 7, 1956, over £40, are released from control. (2) All tenancies coming into operation on or after July 6, 1957, are free from control, except where a new tenancy is granted to a statutory tenant already in occupation. (3) Provision is made for the increase of rent by a maximum of one quarter of all controlled houses. (4) The repairs increase of two-fifths provided for in the 1954 Act is increased to one-half.

The Rent Act, 1957, further provides that a notice to quit a dwelling house (furnished or unfurnished) must be sent at least four weeks before the date on which it is to take effect. It should be noted, however, that transitional provisions operate when a house is to be decontrolled: thus a landlord cannot recover possession earlier than 15 months after the date of decontrol and during this interim period the landlord cannot impose an increase in rent. Further, to obtain possession, he must serve a notice specifying the date when the tenancy will terminate, and must, under the Landlord and Tenant (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1958, bring court proceedings for possession. (See further ante, under England and Wales.) Compensation for an improvement made after August 15, 1945, may also be claimed. (See ante, under England and Wales.)

The Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, referred to in the preceding section, does not apply to Scotland.

LEGAL AID

LEGAL AID IN CIVIL PROCEEDINGS

The Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, is designed to make legal aid and advice more readily available for persons of small and moderate means. The main structure of the new service is contained in the Act itself, but the administrative details are embodied in a scheme made by the Law Society.

Legal aid is at present limited to proceedings (including matrimonial causes) in the High Court and Court of Appeal, proceedings in any County Court and in certain local courts e.g., the Liverpool Court of Passage. Legal aid is not available in civil proceedings before Magistrates. In any event, an application for legal aid will not be approved if it appears that the applicant would gain only a trivial advantage from the proceedings. Further, proceedings wholly or partly in respect of defamation, breach of promise of marriage, seduction, inducement of one spouse to leave or remain apart from the other are excepted from the scheme, as are also relator actions, election petitions and proceedings by way of judgment summons.

Eligibility for legal aid in civil proceedings depends upon an applicant's "disposable income" and "disposable capital." Legal aid cannot be granted if the former exceeds £420 per annum, and a person may be refused assistance if he has a disposable capital of more than £500 and it appears that he can afford to proceed without legal aid. Even so, the applicant may be required to contribute up to half the excess of his disposable income above £156, together with the whole excess of his disposable capital above £75. Disposable income is calculated by making deductions from gross income in respect of certain matters such as dependants, interest on loans, income tax, rates, rent and other matters for which the applicant must or reasonably may provide. Disposable capital is calculated by excluding from gross capital the value of the house in which the applicant resides, of furniture and household possessions; a deduction of up to £75 may be made in respect of dependants. Except in matrimonial proceedings or cases where the spouses are living apart, any resources of a person's wife or husband are to be treated as that person's resources. These figures will be assessed by the National Assistance Board, and will be certified to a Local Committee, who will determine whether reasonable grounds exist for the grant of a civil aid certificate. Appeal from refusal of a certificate lies to an Area Committee. A person resident in England or Wales desiring legal aid may apply for a certificate to any Local Committee; if resident elsewhere, application should be made to the Local Committee for London. However, if the application is made in respect of proceedings in an appellate court and the applicant is resident in England or Wales, application should generally be made to any Area Committee—if resident elsewhere, to the Area Committee for London. If a certificate is granted, the applicant may select his solicitor, and, if necessary, counsel, from a panel. However, in matrimonial causes, where the maximum contribution payable by an applicant does not exceed £10, his case will be conducted by a solicitor employed whole time to deal with such cases.

LEGAL ADVICE

Legal advice from a solicitor on the Legal Aid Panel is now available to anyone over the age of sixteen. Persons on National Assistance can get it free of charge, whilst those whose means are within the limits set out below can get it for as. 6d. An application form should be obtained from a Citizens' Advice Bureau, Court Office or from one of the Law Society's Legal Aid Offices, or from a solicitor whose name is on the panel, and, after completing the form, it should be taken to a solicitor on the panel and an interview requested. A person is entitled to advice on any one legal question only from one solicitor; and for not more than one hour and thirty minutes, but application for further advice may be made to the Area Committee. Lists of solicitors concerned may be consulted at the places mentioned above.

Legal advice is available for 2s. 6d. to a person whose capital is £75 or less and whose income has not been more than £4 10s. during the seven days up to and including the day of application for legal advice. Capital and income of husband and wife must be added together for this purpose, unless they are living apart or the applicant seeks advice on a matter in which the spouse has a contrary interest. In working out capital, the value of the applicant's house, its contents and the value of clothing and tools can be ignored. In working out income, a deduction of £1 10s. may be made for a spouse living with or maintained by the applicant, of £1 5s. for each child maintained by the applicant, and of £1 10s. for any other adult person maintained by the applicant. There may also be deducted any income tax and any National Insurance, Industrial Injuries or National Health contributions paid by the applicant during the week immediately before the date of obtaining legal advice.

Quite apart from the above statutory scheme for legal advice, there exists a voluntary scheme under which any person may apply to a solicitor who is on the panel for advice for a fee of £1 for up to thirty minutes. If the matter cannot be disposed of in thirty minutes, the solicitor should give an estimate of the approximate cost of any further advice or steps which may be necessary.

It should be mentioned that under both schemes a solicitor, even though he is on the panel, is entitled to decline to give advice to the applicant without giving any reason to the applicant.

LEGAL AID IN CRIMINAL CASES

The Poor Prisoners' Defence Act, 1930, provides for free legal aid in criminal proceedings in specified cases, and official lists are kept of solicitors and barristers willing to undertake the defence of poor prisoners. On trial for an indictable offence (i.e., before the higher courts, such as Assizes or Quarter Sessions) the person charged may have free legal aid, if Justices, on committal for trial, or Judge of trial court grant a Defence Certificate. If the person's means are insufficient, such Certificate may be granted in cases where desirable, and must be given for a murder charge. In Magistrates' Courts, a Defence Certificate may be granted to a person of insufficient means if it is considered desirable to do so owing to gravity of charge or exceptional circumstances. The Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949, provides that application for free legal aid under the Poor Prisoners' Defence Act, 1930, may be made by letter by any person arrested or summoned for an offence, as well as by a person charged with an offence. The letter should be addressed to the clerk to the Justices and must give particulars of the offence charged and set out the grounds of the application. Refusal of a legal aid certificate by a Justice after such application does not prevent the applicant being granted a legal aid certificate at the hearing. Legal aid is also available under the 1930 Act in proceedings on the question of the sentence to be passed, and after as well as before the defendant has pleaded or been found guilty.

Provision is also made for applications for legal aid in the event of an appeal under the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, and the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933.

In any application for aid under the Poor Prisoners' Defence Act, 1930, the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933, or the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, if any doubt exists as to whether the applicant can afford to provide his own legal aid, or whether it is desirable in the interests of justice that he should have free legal aid, such doubt is to be resolved in favour of the applicant. Further, the Justices have an almost absolute discretion in deciding applications.

SCOTLAND

Civil Proceedings

The Legal Aid and Solicitors (Scotland) Act, 1949, came into force on 2nd October, 1949. For the time being the scheme provided by the Act is limited to civil actions in the Court of Session and in the Sheriff Courts except actions in respect of defamation or verbal injury, breach of promise of marriage, the inducement of one spouse to leave or remain apart from the other, election petitions (under the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868, or the Elections (Scotland) (Corrupt and Illegal Practices) Act, 1890), and small debt proceedings (i.e., under £20) and proceedings for summary removing, in both of which liability for the debt and the amount thereof are admitted.

As to those to whom legal aid is available, the same considerations as to income and capital apply in Scotland as in England. (See the preceding paragraph.) A person believing himself to be eligible may instruct any solicitor of his own choice who is on the official lists, or he may apply for a solicitor to one of the various Legal Aid Committees which are set up to administer the scheme. Application for a certificate granting legal aid is thereafter made to the appropriate Committee by the applicant's solicitor, who is required to prepare, for the signature of the applicant, a memorandum setting forth the grounds of the proposed action. Investigation into the applicant's financial means is carried out by the National Assistance Board after the Committee has considered the memorandum and, on a suitable contribution, if any, by the applicant being approved, a Certificate is granted enabling the applicant to proceed with his action.

LEGAL ADVICE

Since March, 1950, legal advice, as distinct from legal aid in proceedings, is available to anyone in Scotland on terms similar to those stated in the preceding paragraph dealing with legal aid in England. Application forms are available in the offices of all Legal Aid Committees and Citizens' Advice Bureaux.

Criminal Proceedings

In every sheriffdom there are Solicitors for the poor, and in the Court of Session there are Counsel and Solicitors for the poor, all of whom act gratuitously. No Court dues are payable in the first instance. The means that preclude a person from the benefit of the Poors' Roll are not fixed, and each application depends on its own circumstances.

MARRIAGE

A.—MARRIAGE ACCORDING TO RITES OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND

1. MARRIAGE BY Banns.—The Marriage Act, 1949, prescribes audible publication according to the rubric, on three Sundays preceding the ceremony during morning service or, if there is no morning service on a Sunday on which the banns are to be published, during evening service. Where the parties reside in different parishes, the banns must be published in both. Under the Act, banns may be published and the marriage solemnized in the parish church, which is the usual place of worship of the persons to be married or either of them, although neither of such persons dwells in such parish; but this publication of banns is in addition to any other publication required by law and does not apply if the church or the residence of either party is in Wales. The Act provides specially for the case where one of the parties resides in Scotland and the other in England, the publication being then in the parish in England in which one party resides, and, according to the law and custom in Scotland, in the place where the other party resides. After the lapse of three months from the last time of publication, the banns become useless, and the parties must either obtain a licence (see below), or submit to the republication of banns.

2. MARRIAGE BY LICENCE.—Marriage licences are of two kinds:—

(i) A Common Licence, dispensing with the necessity for banns, granted by the Archbishops and Bishops through their Surrogates, for marriages in any church or chapel duly licensed for marriages. A Common Licence can be obtained in London by application at the Faculty Office (1 The Sanctuary, Westminster, S.W.1) and (for marriages in London) at the Bishop of London's Diocesan Registry (2 Dean's Court, Doctors' Commons, E.C.4), by one of the parties about to be married. In the country they may be obtained at the offices of the Bishops' Registrars, but licences obtained at the Bishop's Diocesan Registry only enable the parties to be married in the diocese in which they are issued; those procured at the Faculty Office are available for all England and Wales. No instructions, either verbal or in writing, can be received, except from one of the parties. Affidavits are prepared from the personal instructions of one of the parties about to be married, and the licence is delivered to the party upon payment of fees amounting to thirty shillings. [The cost of licences through a clerical Surrogate in the country (see below) is £25 ss.] No previous notice is required and the licence is available as soon as it is issued. Before a licence can be granted one of the parties must make an affidavit that there is no legal impediment to the intended marriage; and also that one of such parties has had his or her usual place of abode for the space of fifteen days immediately preceding the issuing of the licence within the parish or ecclesiastical district of the church in which the marriage is to be solemnized, or the church in which the marriage is to be solemnized is the usual place of worship of the parties or one of them. In the country there may generally be found a parochial clergyman (Surrogate) before whom the affidavit may be taken, and whose office it is to deliver the licence personally to the applicant. (In some dioceses it is necessary for the Surrogate to procure the licence from the Bishop's Registry.) The licence continues in force for three months from its date.

(ii) A Special Licence granted by the Archbishop of Canterbury, under special circumstances, for marriage at any place with or without previous residence in the district, or at any time, etc.; but the reasons assigned must meet with his Grace's approval. Application must be made to the Faculty Office. Fees for licence, etc., £25.

3. MARRIAGE UNDER SUPERINTENDENT REGISTRAR'S CERTIFICATE.—A marriage may be performed in church on the Superintendent Registrar's Certificate (as to which see below) without banns, provided that the incumbent's consent is obtained. One of the parties must be resident within the ecclesiastical parish of the church in which the marriage is to take place unless the church is the usual place of worship of the parties or one of them.

MARRIAGE FEES.—The Church Commissioners settle tables of fees for all parishes. The usual fees are paid although a stranger-clergyman be invited to perform the service.

B.—MARRIAGE UNDER SUPERINTENDENT REGISTRAR'S CERTIFICATE

The following marriages may be solemnized on the authority of a Superintendent Registrar's Certificate (either with or without a licence):—

- (a) A marriage in a registered building (e.g., a nonconformist church registered for the solemnization of marriages therein).
- (b) A marriage in a register office.
- (c) A marriage according to the usages of the Society of Friends (commonly called Quakers).
- (d) A marriage between two persons professing the Jewish religion according to the usages of the Jews.
- (e) A marriage according to the rites of the Church of England (see above)—in this case the marriage can only be without licence).

NOTICE.—Notice of the intended marriage must be given as follows:—

- (i) Marriage by certificate (without licence).—If both parties reside in the same registration district, they must both have resided there for seven days before the notice can be given. It may then be given by either party. If the parties reside in different registration districts, notice must be given by each to the Superintendent Registrar of the district in which he or she resides, and the preliminary residential qualification of seven days must be fulfilled by each before either notice can be given.
- (ii) Marriage by certificate (with licence).—One notice only is necessary, whether the parties live in the same or in different registration districts. Either party may give the notice, which must be given to the Superintendent Registrar of any registration district in which one of the parties has resided for the period of fifteen days immediately preceding the giving of notice, but both parties must be resident in England or Wales on the day notice is given.

The notice (in either case) must be in the prescribed form and must contain particulars as to names, marital status, occupation, residence, length of residence, and the building in which the marriage is to take place. The notice must also contain or have added at the foot thereof a solemn declaration that there is no legal impediment to the marriage, and, in the case of minors, that the consent of the person whose consent to the marriage is required by law (see below) has been duly given, and that the residential qualifications (mentioned above) have been complied with. A person making a false declaration renders himself or herself liable to prosecution for perjury. The notice is entered in the marriage notice book.

ISSUE OF CERTIFICATE:

- (i) Without licence.—The notice (or an exact copy thereof) is affixed in some conspicuous place in the Superintendent Registrar's office for 21 days next after the notice was entered in the marriage notice book. After the lapse of this period the Superintendent Registrar may, provided no impediment is shown, issue his certificate for the marriage, which can then take place at any time within three months from the date of the entry of the notice.
- (ii) With licence.—The notice in this case is not affixed in the office of the Superintendent Registrar. After the lapse of one whole day (other than a Sunday, Christmas Day or Good Friday) from the date of entry of the notice, the Superintendent Registrar may, provided no impediment is shown, issue his certificate and licence for the marriage, which can then take place on any day within three months from the date of entry of the notice.

SOLEMNIZATION OF THE MARRIAGE:

- (i) In a Registered Building.—The marriage must generally take place at a building within the district of residence of one of the parties, but if the usual place of worship of either is outside the district of his or her residence, it may take place in such usual place of worship. Further, if there is not within the district of residence of one of the parties a registered building within which marriages are solemnized according to the rites and ceremonies which the parties desire to adopt in solemnizing their marriage, it may take place in an appropriate registered building in the nearest district.

The presence of a Registrar of Marriages is not necessary at marriages at registered buildings which have adopted the provisions of section 43 of the Marriage Act, 1949. This section provides for the appointment of an "authorized person" (a person, usually the minister or an official of the building, certified by the trustees or governing body as having been duly authorized for the purpose) who must be present and must register the marriage.

The marriage must be solemnized between the hours of 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. with open doors in the presence of two or more witnesses. The parties must at some time during the ceremony make the following declaration—"I do solemnly declare that I know not of any lawful impediment why I, A. B., may not be joined in matrimony to C. D." Also each of the parties must say to the other: "I call upon these persons here present to witness that I, A. B., do take thee, C. D., to be my lawful wedded wife [or husband]," or, if the marriage is solemnized in the presence of an authorized person without the presence of a Registrar, each party may say in lieu thereof: "I, A. B., do take thee, C. D., to be my wedded wife [or husband]."

- (ii) In a Register Office.—The marriage may be solemnized in the office of the Superintendent Registrar to whom notice of the marriage has been given. The marriage must be solemnized between the hours of 8 a.m. and 6 p.m., with open doors in the presence of the Superintendent Registrar and a Registrar of the registration district of that Superintendent Registrar, and in the presence of two witnesses. The parties must make the following declaration: "I do solemnly declare that I know not of any lawful impediment why I, A. B., may not be joined in matrimony to C. D.," and each party must say to the other: "I call upon these persons here present to witness that I, A. B., do take thee, C. D., to be my lawful wedded wife [or husband]." No religious ceremony may take place in the Registry Office, though the parties may, on production of their marriage certificate, go through a subsequent religious ceremony in any church or persuasion of which they are members.

- (iii) Other Cases.—If both parties are members of the Society of Friends (Quakers), or if, not being in membership, they have been authorized by the Society of Friends to solemnize their marriage in accordance with its usages, they may be married in a Friends' meeting-house. The marriage must be registered by the registering officer of the Society appointed to act for the district in which the meeting house is situated. The presence of a Registrar of Marriages is not necessary.

If both parties are Jews they may marry according to their usages in a synagogue, which has a certified marriage secretary, or private dwelling-house at any hour; the building may be situated within or without the district of residence. The marriage must be registered by the secretary of the synagogue of which the man is a member. The presence of a Registrar of Marriages is not necessary.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES

Consanguinity and Affinity.—A marriage between persons within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity is void. Relaxations have, however, been made by various statutes which have now been replaced by the Marriage Act, 1949 (see the 1st Schedule to the Act). It is now permitted to contract a marriage with:—

- Deceased wife's sister.
- Deceased brother's widow.
- Deceased wife's brother's daughter.
- Deceased wife's sister's daughter.
- Father's deceased brother's widow.
- Mother's deceased brother's widow.
- Deceased wife's father's sister.
- Deceased wife's mother's sister.
- Brother's deceased son's widow.
- Sister's deceased son's widow.

No clergyman can be compelled to solemnize any of the foregoing marriages, but he may allow his church to be used for the purpose by another minister. During the lifetime of a person upon whose decease a marriage is now authorized (but which would otherwise be prohibited owing to affinity), it is not lawful for such a marriage to be contracted.

Minors.—Persons under 21 years of age are generally required to obtain the consent of certain persons (see Marriage Act, 1949, section 3 and 2nd Schedule). Where both parents are living, both must consent; where one is dead, the survivor, or, if there is a guardian appointed by the deceased parent, the guardian and the survivor. No consent is required in the case of an infant's second marriage. In certain exceptional cases consent may be dispensed with, e.g., the insanity of a parent. If consent is refused the Court may, on application being made, consent to the marriage; application can be made for this purpose to the High Court, the County Court, or a Court of Summary Jurisdiction. The Act prohibits any marriage where either party is under 16 years of age.

C.—MARRIAGE IN ENGLAND OR WALES WHEN ONE PARTY LIVES IN SCOTLAND OR NORTHERN IRELAND

Notice for a marriage by a Superintendent Registrar's certificate in a register office or registered building may be given in the usual way by the party resident in England. As regards Scotland, the party there, after a residence of fifteen days, should either apply to the session clerk to publish banns or give notice of marriage to the registrar; as regards Northern Ireland, the party there, after a residence of seven days, must give notice to the District Registrar of Marriages. Notice cannot be given for such marriages to take place by Certificate with licence of the Superintendent Registrar.

Marriage of such parties may take place in a church of the Church of England after the publication of banns, or by Ecclesiastical licence.

MARRIAGES IN SCOTLAND

According to the law of Scotland, marriage is a contract which is completed by the mutual consent of parties.

Impediments to marriage: These render the marriage null and void. (a) Age: If either party is under the age of 16. (b) Forbidden Degrees: If the parties are within certain degrees of relationship. (c) Subsisting previous marriage. (d) Impotency of either party. (e) Non-residence, i.e., if the legal requirement of prior residence of one or other of the parties in Scotland have not been complied with. (f) Insanity of either party.

No consent of parents or guardians is necessary. Marriages may be regular or "irregular."

Regular Marriages.

A regular marriage is one which is celebrated by a Minister of religion or authorized Registrar after due notice by the publication of banns or publication by the Registrar. Any Minister of any denomination (including a person officiating at a Quaker wedding) who performs the ceremony is reckoned to be a minister of religion. It must be performed before two witnesses and one of the parties must have resided in the Registration District for at least 15 days before the ceremony. No form, place or hours are prescribed by law. There are no canonical hours as in England. Public proclamation is made by (a) banns or (b) notice by the Registrar. Banns must be proclaimed in the parish church of both parties. It is ordered that the proclamation of banns should be made three times, but by immemorial practice proclamation on one Sunday is sufficient. The Clerk of the Kirk Session of the Parish takes in notices of banns and issues certificates of proclamation. The fee for proclamation may not exceed 2s. 6d. A certificate of proclamation of banns is only valid for three months.

Under the Marriage Notices (Scotland) Act, 1878, a notice posted up in a conspicuous or accessible place on the board or outer wall of the Registrar's office is equivalent to the proclamation of banns, but a minister of the Church of Scotland is not bound, although he is entitled, to celebrate a marriage not preceded by banns. The statute is limited to persons living in Scotland, i.e., for at least 15 clear days prior to the notice. Exhibition is made for 7 consecutive days, during which time any person may appear personally and lodge an objection in writing subscribed by him. If no objections are lodged the Registrar issues a certificate: fees, 2s. 6d. Such certificate of publication is only valid for three months. The Naval Marriages Act, 1908, regulates the publication of banns on board H.M. ships and the granting of certificates by the Officer-Commanding.

Marriage before Registrar: After obtaining a certificate of due publication as above, it is competent for the parties to contract the marriage in the office of the authorized Registrar in his presence and in the presence of two witnesses. Such a marriage is regular and valid in all respects.

Marriage by Licence: In unforeseen and exceptional circumstances—see Section 4 of the Marriage (Scotland) Act, 1939—where normal methods of publication cannot be carried through, the Sheriff, on application by the parties may grant a licence which is deemed in all respects to be equivalent to a certificate of publication.

Irregular Marriages.

Since the passing of the Marriage (Scotland) Act, 1939, only one form of irregular marriage is recognized, viz, marriage by co-habitation and habit and repute. If parties live together constantly as husband and wife, and if they are held to be such by the general repute of the neighbourhood, then there may arise a presumption from which marriage can be inferred. Before such marriage can be registered, however, a decree of declarator of marriage must be obtained from the Court of Session.

MASTER AND SERVANT

WAGES AND HOLIDAYS

Under the Truck Acts, it is in general forbidden for an employer to pay wages other than in current coin of the realm, and it is illegal for an employer to deduct from the employee's wages sums alleged to be due to the employer. However, the application of these Acts is confined to workmen, and domestic servants are specifically excluded from their operation. Even in the case of payments to workmen, certain deductions, including rent and the price of food to be consumed on the employers' premises, are not forbidden where the employee's written consent is obtained. These Acts did not relate to the amount of wage to be paid to the employee, but to-day minimum wage rates for particular trades are prescribed by numerous statutes. The Wages Councils Act, 1945, established Wages Councils, which are given power to fix minimum wages in respect of a number of trades and industries. The Councils may also direct as to the length of holidays for workers in such trades and industries, and for payment of wages during holidays, under the Holidays with Pay Act, 1938. Subject to this Act, a servant's right to a holiday is a matter of contract. The terms of the contract may be express or implied; but if there is a right to a holiday once in a year and the servant is rightfully dismissed before the end of that year, he cannot successfully claim pay in respect of the loss of the holiday.

RECEIPTS

Receipts should be kept for six years from the date of payment, after which period no action can be brought concerning the goods, etc., received.

In Scotland, as in England, inability to produce receipts does not necessarily bar defence to an action for payment.

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING

The Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, contains very far-reaching provisions affecting the liberty of an owner of land to develop and use it as he will. A person has generally to get planning permission before carrying out any development on his land from the Local Planning Authority. Development charge is not payable in respect of operations begun or uses of land instituted on or after the 18th November, 1952.

What is Development:—

(a) Carrying out of building, engineering, mining or other operations.

(b) Making a material change in use.

It is expressly provided that if one dwelling-house is converted into two or more dwelling-houses, this involves a material change in use.

Examples of what is not Deemed Development:—

(a) Maintaining, improving or altering the interior of a building (except works for making good war damage), provided there is no material change to the exterior.

(b) Change of use of property within the curtilage of a dwelling-house for a purpose incidental to the use of the dwelling-house as such. (It will, however, be development if building operations are carried out.)

Application can be made to the Local Planning Authority to determine whether or not an operation or change of use constitutes development.

Planning Permission.—Application for such permission is not always necessary, as the Minister may make Development Orders giving general permission for a specified type of development. Thus a General Development Order of 1950 specified a number of types of development for which no permission is required e.g., enlargement of a dwelling-house (including erection of a garage), so long as the cubic content of the original dwelling (external measurement) is not exceeded by more than 1,750 cubic feet or one-tenth whichever is greater, subject to a maximum of 4,000 cubic feet.

Appeal against refusal of permission lies to the Minister, and from the Minister, in limited circumstances, to the High Court. If the result of the appeal is unsatisfactory, an applicant may in certain circumstances require the Council to purchase the land.

Enforcement Notice.—If development is carried out without permission, or in defiance of conditions attached to such permission, the Local Planning Authority may serve an enforcement notice on the owner of the land calling upon him to demolish or alter any building, or to discontinue the use of land, or to comply with the said conditions. If the notice is not complied with, the Local Planning Authority may take appropriate steps to enforce it, recovering their expenses from the owner for the time being of the land. Appeal against an enforcement order lies to a Court of Summary Jurisdiction and thence to Quarter Sessions.

For further details and other provisions of the planning law, the Act of 1947 and the Orders made under the Act, the Town and Country Planning (Amendment) Act, 1951, and the Town and Country Planning Acts, 1953, 1954 and 1959, should be consulted. Elaborate provisions as to payments for loss of development value by reference to established claims on the £300 million fund (established under the 1947 Act) are contained in the 1954 Act.

Scotland.

In Scotland special provisions, on similar lines, have been made by the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act, 1947, which incorporates certain provisions of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act, 1945, all other earlier planning Acts being repealed. The financial provisions of the 1947 Act, have, however, been amended by the Town and Country Planning Act, 1953, which abolished development charges, and by the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act, 1954, which set up a new Scheme of compensation. See also the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act, 1959.

VOTERS' QUALIFICATIONS

The franchise is governed by the Representation of the People Acts, the latest of which, the Acts of 1948 and 1949, have made important changes in the law. Those entitled to vote as electors at a parliamentary election in any constituency are those resident there on the qualifying date who, at that date and on the date of the poll, are British subjects of at least twenty-one years of age and not subject to any legal incapacity to vote; but registration as an elector in the register to be used at the election in question in that constituency is a prerequisite, and at a general election no person may vote in more than one constituency. Since the Electoral Registers Act of 1949, the registers are prepared once in each year only. Under the Electoral Registers Act, 1953, the Register (of parliamentary and local government electors or, in Northern Ireland, of parliamentary electors) is published not later than February 15 in each year and is for use in the period of 12 months commencing on February 16. The qualifying date referred to is, in England, Wales and Scotland the preceding October 10, and in Northern Ireland the preceding September 15. It is, however, provided that any person who is not of full age on the relevant qualifying date, but is of full age on June 15, and is otherwise duly qualified, is entitled to vote at elections held in Great Britain between October 2 of that year and February 15 of the following year. Detailed provisions are laid down as to the meaning of "residence" in doubtful cases.

The Act of 1948 abolished the university constituencies and the business premises vote.

The Register is prepared by the Registration Officer in each constituency in Great Britain. It is the registration officer's duty to have a house to house or other official inquiry made as to the persons entitled to be registered and to publish preliminary electors lists showing the persons appearing to him to be entitled to be registered. Any person whose name is omitted may claim registration, and any person on the list may object to the inclusion therein of other persons' names: the registration officer determines the claims and objections. The procedure is slightly different for Northern Ireland.

Special provision is made for "Service voters," who include wives of Service voters resident with their husbands outside the United Kingdom. Such persons may make a Service declaration in a prescribed form and are then treated as resident at the address specified in the declaration. Service voters may vote by post or by proxy, on making the necessary application to the registration officer.

Certain other persons (e.g., those unable to go in person to the polling station owing to the general nature of their occupation, blindness or other physical incapacity, etc.) may vote by post or, in some cases, by proxy as "absent voters."

The local government franchise now depends upon either residence in the area or the possession of a non-resident qualification, i.e., occupation as owner or tenant of rateable lands or premises of the yearly value of not less than £10, excluding occupation of furnished dwelling-houses let for less than nine weeks and excluding occupation as a lodger. There are provisions, similar to those relating to the parliamentary franchise, for the preparation of registers, etc., and in fact the same register is used, as far as possible, with a mark indicating those persons entitled to vote for local government purposes only.

The Acts apply generally to Scotland where certain matters relating to local government and parliamentary elections are further regulated by Representation of the People (Scotland) Regulations, 1949.

WILLS

IMPORTANT NOTE.—The following notes must be read subject to the provisions of the Inheritance (Family Provision) Act, 1938, which is liable to affect or modify the will of any person (domiciled in England) dying after July 13, 1939. This Act empowers the High Court to order maintenance out of the testator's estate for the benefit of certain "dependants," i.e., a surviving wife or husband; an unmarried (or invalid) daughter; an infant (or invalid) son. Such order can be made if the will does not itself make "reasonable provision" for the maintenance of the dependant who seeks the order. An application must normally be made within six months of probate. A legally adopted child comes within the definition of a "son" or "daughter" under the Act. For further details as to the limits of an order, the Act itself should be consulted.

Since the object of the Act is to provide maintenance for dependants, an application is not likely to be successful where the estate is very small, e.g., two or three hundred pounds.

REASONS FOR MAKING A WILL.—Every person should make a will. However small the estate, it is safer in every case to protect the interests of the survivors by a will, and by the appointment of one or more trustworthy persons as executors to carry the testator's wishes into effect. The help of a lawyer in making a will is not in every case essential, but it is always advisable, particularly where there is a desire on a testator's part to provide for his property being "settled" as it is called—e.g., the income being paid to his widow and the capital being ultimately divided among his children, for this requires the skill of a practised lawyer. When property is thus "settled," there may be a saving in death duties. Assuming a lawyer is not employed, a person having resolved to make a will must remember that it is only after a person is dead, and cannot explain his meaning, that his will can be open to dispute. It is the more necessary, therefore, to express what is meant in language of the utmost clearness, avoiding the use of any word or expression that admits of another meaning than the one intended. Avoid the use of "legal terms," such as "heirs" and "issue," when the same thing may be expressed in plain language. If in writing the will a mistake be made, it is better to rewrite the whole. Before a will is executed (see below) an alteration may be made by striking through the words with a pen, but opposite to such alteration the testator and witnesses should write their names or place their initials. Never scratch out a word with a knife or other instrument, and no alteration of any kind whatever must be made after the will is executed. If the testator afterwards wishes to change the disposition of his estate, it is best to make a new will, revoking the old one. The use of codicils should be left to the lawyer. A will should be written in ink and very legibly, on a single sheet of paper. Although, of course, forms of wills must vary to suit different cases, the following forms may be found useful to those who, in cases of emergency, are called upon to draw up wills, either for themselves or others.

Nothing more complicated should be attempted. The forms should be studied in conjunction with the notes following.

This is the last will and testament of me [Thomas Smith] of [Vine Cottage, Silver Street, Reading, Berks] which I make this [thirteenth] day of [February, 1960] and whereby I revoke all previous wills and testamentary dispositions.

1. I hereby appoint [John Green of — and Richard Brown of —] to be the executor(s) of this my will.

2. I give all my property real and personal to [my wife Mary or my sons Raymond and David equally or as the case may be].

Signed by the testator in the presence of us both present at the same time who, at his request, in his presence and in the presence of each other have hereunto set our names as witnesses.

Thomas Smith
Signature of Testator:

William Jones (signed) of Green Gables, South Street, Reading, tailor.

Henry Morgan (signed) of 16, North Street, Reading, butcher.

Should it be desired to give legacies and or gifts of specific property, instead of giving the whole estate to one or more persons, the form above should be used with the substitution for clause 2 of the following clauses:—

2. I give to — of — the sum of £ — and to — of — the sum of £ — and to — of — all my books (or as the case may require).

3. All the residue of my property real and personal I give to — of —.

TERMS.—Real property includes freehold land and houses; while personal property includes debts due, arrears of rents, money, leasehold property, house furniture, goods, assurance policies, stocks and shares in companies, and the like. The words "my money," apart from the context, will normally only include actual ready money. The expression "goods and chattels" should not be used. In giving particular property, ordinary language is sufficient, e.g., "my house, Vine Cottage, Silver Street, Reading, Berks." Such specific gifts fail if not owned by the testator at his death.

RESIDUARY LEGATEES.—It is well in all cases where legacies or specific gifts are made, to leave to some person or persons "the residue of my property," although it may be thought that the whole of the property has been disposed of in legacies, etc., already mentioned in the will. It should be remembered that a will operates on property acquired after it has been made.

EXECUTION OF A WILL, AND WITNESSES.—The testator should sign his name at the foot or end of the will, in presence of two witnesses, who will immediately afterwards sign their names in his and in each other's presence. A person who has been left any gift or share of residue in the will, or whose wife or husband has been left such a gift, should not be an attesting witness. Their attes-tation would be good, but they would forfeit the gift. It is better that a person named as executor should not be a witness. Husband and wife may both be witnesses, provided neither is a legatee. If a solicitor be appointed executor, it is lawful to direct that his ordinary fees and charges shall be paid; but in this case he (as an interested party) must not be a witness to the will.

It is desirable that the witnesses should be fully described, as they may possibly be wanted at some future time. If the testator should be too ill to sign, even by a mark, another person may sign the testator's name to the will for him, in his presence and by his direction, and in this case it should be shown that the testator knew the contents of the document. The attestation clause should therefore be worded: "Signed by Thomas Brown, by the direction and in the presence of the testator, Thomas Smith, in the joint presence of us, who thereupon signed our names in his presence and in the presence of each other, the will having been first read over to the testator, who appeared fully to understand the same."

A blind person may make a will in Braille. If the testator be blind the will should be read aloud to him in the presence of the witnesses, and the fact mentioned in the attestation clause. A blind person cannot witness a will.

If by inadvertence the testator should have signed his will without the witnesses being present, then the attestation should be:—"The testator acknowledged his signature already made as his signature to his last will and testament, in the joint presence," etc. Any omission in the observance of these details may invalidate the will. The stringency of the law as to signature and witnessing of a will is only relaxed in favour of soldiers, sailors and airmen in certain circumstances.

EXECUTORS.—It is usual to appoint two executors, although one is sufficient; any number up to and including four may be appointed. The name and address of each executor should be given in full. An executor may be a legatee. Thus a child of full age or wife to whom the whole or a portion of the estate is left may be appointed sole executor, or one of two executors. The addresses of the executors are not essential; but it is desirable here as elsewhere, to avoid ambiguity or vagueness.

LAPSED LEGACIES.—If a legatee die in the lifetime of the testator, the legacy generally lapses and falls into the residue. Where a residuary legatee pre-deceases the testator, his share of the residuary estate will not generally pass to the other residuary legatees, but will pass to the persons entitled on the deceased's intestacy. In all such cases it is desirable to make a new will.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.—A minor cannot make a will except, in certain circumstances, if he be a soldier, sailor or airman. A married woman (married on or since January 1, 1883) may dispose by will of any real or personal property as if she were a man.

REVOCATION.—A will is revoked by a subsequent will (but, if it does not expressly revoke former wills, only so far as such subsequent will operates as an implied revocation as by making other provisions inconsistent with the previous will; for this reason a will should always have a clause revoking previous testamentary dispositions), or by burning, tearing or otherwise destroying the same with the intention of revoking it. Such destruction must either be by the testator or by some other person in his presence and at his direction. It is not sufficient to obliterate the will with a pen. Marriage in every case acts as the revocation of a will, unless, in the case of a will made on or after Jan. 1, 1926, it is expressed to have been made in contemplation of a particular marriage (Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 177); so that after marriage a new will should be made, except in this last case.

PERSONAL APPLICATION FOR PROBATE OR LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION

Application for probate or for letters of administration may be made in person at the Principal Probate Registry, or at a district registry, by the executors or persons entitled to a grant of administration. Applicants should bring (1) the will, if any; (2) a certificate of death; (3) particulars of property liable to estate duty; and (4) generally, a list of debts and funeral expenses. In an application for administration, the applicant will be required to enter into a bond for due administration, generally with two sureties who must attend at the Registry, although they need not do so at the same time as the applicant.

WHERE TO FIND A PROVED WILL

A will proved since 1858 must have been proved either at the Principal Registry at Somerset House, or a District Registry. In the former case the original will itself is carefully preserved at Somerset House, the copy of which probate has been granted is in the hands of the executors who proved the will, and another copy for Parliament is bound up in a folio volume of wills made by testators of that initial and date; the indices to these volumes fill a room of considerable size at Somerset House, where the indices may be examined and a copy of any will read on payment of a search fee of one shilling. In the latter case, the original will proved in the District Registry, is there kept, and may be seen or a copy obtained, but a copy is sent to and filed at Somerset House, where also it may be seen. A general index of grants, both probates and administrations, is prepared and printed annually in lexicographical form, and may be seen at either the Principal or a District Registry. This index is usually ready by about October of the following year.

SCOTS LAW OF WILLS

A domiciled Scotsman, unlike a domiciled Englishman, cannot in certain circumstances dispose of the entirety of his estate. If he leave a widow and children, the widow is entitled to a one-third share in the whole of the moveable estate (her jus relictae), and the children are entitled to another one-third share equally between them (their legitim). If he leave a widow but no children—or children but no widow—the jus relictae or legitim is increased to a one-half share in the estate. The remaining portion is known as the dead's part. The widow is also entitled to terce, i.e., a life rent in one-third of her husband's heritable property. A surviving husband and children have comparable rights in the wife's estate. The dead's part is the only portion of which the testator can freely dispose. All burdens falling upon the representatives in moveables are payable out of the whole of the moveables before any division. Burdens in the nature of legacies are payable out of the dead's part. Pupils cannot make wills. Minors may dispose of moveables without the consent of any other person; but minors (unless they be serving in H.M. forces) cannot dispose of heritage. A will must be in writing (except that a person may leave a legacy verbally if the amount of that legacy does not exceed 100 Scots (£8 6s. 8d. sterling) and may be typewritten or even in pencil. A will may be either (1) holograph, i.e., written by the testator himself, in which case no witnesses are necessary; a printed form filled up by the testator is not necessarily holograph but may be made effectual when it has clearly been adopted as holograph. Words written on erasure or marginal additions or interlineations in holograph writings, if proved to be in the handwriting of the maker of the deed, are valid; (a) tested, i.e., signed in presence of two witnesses. It is not necessary that these witnesses should sign in presence of one another, or even that they should see the testator signing so long as the testator acknowledges his signature to the witnesses. If the testator cannot write, or is blind, his will may be authenticated by a notary and two witnesses. It is better that the will be not witnessed by a beneficiary thereunder, although this circumstance will not invalidate the attestation of the will or (as it would in England) the gift. A parish minister may act as a notary for the purpose of subscribing a will in his own parish. Wills are registered in the Books of the County in which the deceased died domiciled, and in the Books of Council and Session, H.M. General Register House, Edinburgh. The original deed may be inspected on payment of a small fee and a certified official copy may be obtained. A Scottish will is not revoked by the subsequent marriage of the testator. The subsequent birth of a child, no testamentary provision having been made for him, may revoke a will in whole or in part. A will is revoked by a subsequent will, either expressly or by implication; but in so far as the two can be read together both wills have effect.

"Confirmation," the Scottish equivalent of Probate, is obtained in the Sheriff Court of County in which the deceased was domiciled at the date of his death or, where he had no fixed domicile or died abroad, in the commissariat of Edinburgh. Executors are either "nominate" or "dative." An Executor nominate is one nominated by the deceased in his will. An Executor dative is one appointed by the Court (i) in the case of intestacy or (a) where the deceased had failed to name an executor in his will. In the former case the deceased's next-of-kin are all entitled to be declared executors dative. An inventory of the deceased's estate and a schedule of debts, together with an affidavit, must first be given up. In estates under £500 confirmation is obtained under a simplified procedure at reduced fees.

SEASONABLE AND UNSEASONABLE FISH

THE following table shows the periods when the different kinds of edible fish mostly in use are "in season" and "out of season."

The letter p signifies that the fish are then in their prime or most plentiful; the letter x signifies that the fish may be obtained, but are not at their best; the letter c signifies that it is "close-time" as fixed by statute.

(a) This is for sea crayfish (or crawfish). River crayfish can be obtained in the summer and autumn. It is illegal to take fresh-water crayfish from March to June.

(b) Foreign oysters can be sold in the close season, and are to be had almost all through the year, even though they have been laid down in English beds for temporary storage.

(d) In the close season, salmon from the Netherlands, and also from certain British rivers where net fishing is permitted later in the year than usual, are largely sold.

(e) In normal times, for the first six months, the bulk of our London supply of shrimps comes from the Netherlands, but Dutch shrimps are far inferior to the English, which are plentiful from July to Dec.

PROFESSIONAL FEES

The following notes on the Fees and Charges of various Professions are based on information supplied by the appropriate professional Societies and Institutes.

SOLICITORS

Solicitors and their clients may (subject to certain rules designed to prevent undercutting) make special agreements as to remuneration in non-contentious business (including conveyancing) under Section 57 of the Solicitors Act, 1957. In the absence of any such agreement the solicitor's remuneration is governed by Orders made under Section 56 of that Act. There are two methods of charging under the Orders. The more usual is by a scale based upon the amount of money involved; the other is by a charge (usually known as a Schedule II charge) determined by reference to all the circumstances of the case, the amount of money involved being only one factor amongst many. Usually a scale charge is payable in conveyancing matters, provided the transaction has not been abortive, but a solicitor has an option to elect, before undertaking any business, to be paid a Schedule II charge instead. For negotiating sales or purchases the charges are always under Schedule II. In addition to solicitors' charges, disbursements such as Government stamp duty, search fees and Land Registry fees may be payable.

Where under Table I below the charges would amount to less than £7 10s. 0d. there is a minimum fee of £7 10s. 0d.; if, however, the amount of money involved is less than £100 the minimum fee (except for conducting a sale of property by public auction) is £4 10s. 0d.

In sales by auction further charges may be payable, which will be computed under Schedule II below, e.g. for preparing or perusing Particulars of Sale and poster and attending the sale.

The following tables illustrate the scales of charges on sales, purchases and mortgages based upon the amount of money involved:—

I. For land (including houses) having a title which is not registered at the Land Registry.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

The Councils of the several Institutes of Chartered Accountants and of the Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants have not laid down any scale of fees for their members. There are no statutory scales of fees except for certain special appointments such as Approved Auditors under the Industrial and Provident Societies Act.

Accountancy and auditing.—The Councils of the above Institutes have stated that accountants' charges should generally be calculated on the basis of the type of work involved, the seniority of the persons necessarily engaged on the work and the time occupied by each person engaged. The normal practice is therefore to calculate charges at an appropriate rate per day for the principal and for each of the clerks engaged on the work.

Special work.—The general basis referred to above will not usually be applicable to special types of work involving a special degree of skill or calling for priority, for example, prospectus reports and special investigations. For this type of work special fees are usually agreed with the client.

Receivers, Liquidators and Trustees in Bankruptcy.—Usually a percentage on the amount realized and on the amount distributed in dividend.

The remuneration of a liquidator of a company in a members' voluntary winding-up is fixed by the company in general meeting. In the case of a creditors' voluntary winding-up remuneration is fixed by the Committee of Inspection, or, if there be no such committee, by the creditors. In either case application may be made to the Court to fix the remuneration.

Taxation.—The rates charged for taxation matters are generally higher than those for audits. The Councils of the accountancy Institutes have all intimated that a member undertaking taxation work on the basis that he should be remunerated by a percentage on the amount recovered, or receive no remuneration if no recovery results would be liable to be regarded as acting discredibly.

ARCHITECTS

Conditions of Engagement

1. Members of the R.I.B.A. are governed by the Charters, Bye-laws and Code of Professional Conduct of the Royal Institute.

2. The Architect shall give such periodical supervision and inspection as may be necessary to ensure that the works are being executed in general accordance with the contract; constant supervision does not form part of the duties undertaken by him.

3. In cases where constant superintendence is required a Clerk of Works shall be employed for this purpose. He shall be nominated or approved by the Architect, and appointed and paid by the Client. He shall be under the Architect's direction and control.

4. The Architect shall not make any material deviation, alteration, addition to or omission from the approved design without the knowledge and consent of the Client.

5. The Architect has authority to give orders on behalf of the Client if such are necessitated by constructional requirements provided that the Client shall be immediately notified thereof.

6. The Architect shall, if requested to do so, at the completion of the work, prepare free of charge to the Client, drawings sufficient to show the main lines of drainage and other essential services as executed.

7. The following Architects' charges do not include for Surveyors' work for which see Clauses B 11 to B 16 which are those of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors adopted by the R.I.B.A.

8. The employment of Consultants shall be at the Architect's discretion in agreement with the Client and Consultants shall be nominated or approved by the Architect, and appointed and paid by the Client. Where it is agreed to retain the services of Consultants in no case shall the Architect's fee be reduced by more than one-third on the cost of the work upon which the services of the Consultants are retained, provided always that the Architect's fee on the cost of the whole scheme shall not be reduced by more than one-sixth.

9. An engagement entered into between the Architect and the Client may be terminated at any time by either party upon reasonable notice being given.

10. Copyright in all drawings and in the work executed from them will remain the property of the Architect.

11. Under these Conditions of Engagement, the fees and charges payable to the Architect shall be in accordance with the following Scale of Charges.

B

Scale of Charges

NOTE.—Apart from the two copies of the drawings and documents provided for in Clause B 1 and the drawings specified in Clause A 6, the fees as set out in this Scale of Charges are in all cases exclusive of the cost of all prints and other reproductions of drawings and documents, travelling and hotel expenses, and other reasonable disbursements.

1. New Works

For taking the Client's instructions, preparing sketch designs, making approximate estimate of cost by cubic measurement or otherwise, submitting applications for building or other licences and town planning, bye-law or other approvals, preparing working drawings, specification or such particulars as may be necessary for the preparation of bills of quantities by an independent Quantity Surveyor, or for the purpose of obtaining tenders, advising on tenders and preparation of contract, nominating and instructing Consultants (if any), preparing, and supplying for the use of the Contractor, two copies of all drawings, specification, or other particulars and of such further details as are necessary for the proper carrying out of the works, giving general supervision as defined in the Conditions of Engagement, issuing certificates for payment, and certifying accounts, exclusive of the services enumerated in Clauses B 5 and B 14, the charge is to be a percentage on the total cost of all executed works as follows:

Total Cost of Executed Works	Percentage Fee	Minimum
(i) Up to £500	10
£500-£1,000	9½	£50
£1,000-£1,500	9	£95
£1,500-£2,000	8½	£135
£2,000-£2,500	8	£170
£2,500-£3,000	7½	£200
£3,000-£3,500	7	£225
£3,500-£4,000	6½	£245
Over £4,000	6	£260

(ii) When work is executed wholly or in part with old materials, or where material, labour or carriage is provided by the Client, the percentage shall be calculated as if the works had been executed wholly by the Contractor supplying all labour and materials.

(iii) In addition to a percentage on the total cost of executed works, the Architect is entitled to charge in respect of all works included in the tenders, but subsequently omitted, two-thirds of the charge which would have been payable had they been executed.

2. Variations of Charges

The above Scale of Charges is subject to variation by prior written agreement between Client and Architect in respect of the following:

(i) Repetitive Works: In the case of extensive works of a simple repetitive character, the charge may be reduced by one-sixth.

(ii) Works to Existing Buildings: In the case of works to existing buildings a higher percentage is chargeable, not exceeding twice the amount payable under the Scale for new works of the same cost, and depending upon the intricacy of the work involved.

(iii) Special Works: In works involving special services in respect of fittings, furniture, decorations, exhibitions, garden or landscape design, special fees appropriate to the circumstances are chargeable.

3. Partial Services

In cases where the Architect performs partial services for any reason, including the abandonment, deferment, substitution or omission of any project and/or works, or part thereof, or if the services of the Architect are terminated, the charges in respect of the services performed are as follows:

(i) For taking Client's instructions and preparing preliminary sketch designs to illustrate possibilities of a site or cost of a scheme the charge is on quantum meruit.

(ii) For taking Client's instructions, preparing sketch designs sufficient to indicate the Architect's interpretation of the Client's instructions (but not in detail adequate to enable bills of quantities to be prepared) and making approximate estimate of cost, the charge is on quantum meruit and shall not exceed one-sixth of the percentage due under Clause B 1 or B 2 (as the case may be) on the estimated cost of such works.

(iii) For taking Client's instructions, preparing sketch designs sufficient to indicate the Architect's interpretation of the Client's instructions, and preparing drawings and particulars sufficient to enable applications to be made for Town Planning, Bye-law and/or Building Act approvals, the charge is one-third of the percentage due under Clause B 1 or B 2 (as the case may be) on the estimated cost of such works.

(iv) For taking Client's instructions, preparing sketch designs, making approximate estimate of cost by cubic measurement or otherwise, and preparing working drawings, specification, or such particulars as may be necessary for the preparation of bills of quantities by an independent Quantity Surveyor, or for the purpose of obtaining tenders, the charge is two-thirds of the percentage due under Clause B 1 or B 2 (as the case may be) on the estimated cost of such works.

(v) If the project or any part thereof is abandoned or deferred or any part omitted or substituted on the Client's instructions during the preparation of the working drawings, the charge is two-thirds of the appropriate percentage on the estimated cost of such works less a quantum meruit charge for bringing the working drawings and other particulars up to the stage defined in Clause B 3 (iv).

(vi) In all cases where fees are assessed on the basis of quantum meruit regard must be had to all relevant factors.

4. Mode and Time of Payment

The Architect is entitled to payment in stages as follows:

(i) On the completion of sketch designs one-sixth of the total fees payable.

(ii) On the completion of the drawings and particulars sufficient to enable applications to be made for Town Planning, Bye-law and/or Building Act approvals, one-third of the total fees payable less the amounts of any payments already received by the Architect pursuant to sub-clause B 4 (i).

(iii) During the preparation of working drawings and other particulars instalments consistent with the amount of work completed by the Architect.

(iv) On completion of the said working drawings and other particulars, two-thirds of the total fees payable less the amount of any payments already received by the Architect pursuant to sub-Clauses B 4 (i), B 4 (ii) and B 4 (iii).

(v) The remaining one-third of the total fees to be paid by instalments as the building work proceeds consistent with the value of the said building work as certified from time to time.

5. Services not Included in the Scale

Charges assessed on the basis of quantum meruit in accordance with Clause B 3 (vi) shall be payable in respect of any additional services involved:

(i) In advising as to the selection and suitability of sites. Negotiating as to sites or buildings. Surveying sites or buildings and taking levels, and making surveys, measurements, and plans of existing buildings.

(ii) In preparing for the use of the Client special drawings in addition to working drawings, and preparing drawings for negotiations with ground landlords, adjoining owners, public authorities, licensing authorities or others.

(iii) In amending working drawings or preparing new working drawings to give effect to alterations of the Client's instructions or changes in design due to causes outside the control of the Architect.

(iv) In negotiations arising from applications for building or other licences, town planning, bye-law or other approvals, and negotiations in connection with Party Walls, Rights of Light and other easements, reservations or restrictions.

(v) Arising out of delay in building operations due to causes outside the control of the Architect.

6. Inspections and Reports

For making inspections, preparing reports or giving advice on the condition of premises, the charge is on quantum meruit in accordance with Clause B 3 (vi).

7. Litigation and Arbitration

For qualifying to give evidence, settling proofs, conferences with Solicitors and Counsel, attendance in Court or before Arbitrations or other tribunals, and for services in connection with litigation, the charge is based upon the time occupied in accordance with Clause B 3.

Architects acting as Arbitrators are recommended to base their charges upon the total time occupied in dealing with a case at the rate of £3 3s. an hour exclusive of out-of-pocket expenses and other disbursements.

8. Dilapidations

For preparing schedule and settling the amount if required, the charge is 5 guineas per cent. on the amount of the settlement, or on the estimated cost of complying with the Schedule. (Minimum fee, 5 guineas.)

9. Travelling Time

An additional charge may be made by prior written agreement if the work should be at such a distance as to lead to an exceptional expenditure of time in travelling.

10. Time Charges

In cases in which charges are based upon time occupied the minimum fee is 1½ guineas per hour exclusive of charges for Assistants' time.

NOTE.—Clauses dealing with the following subjects are in accordance with the Schedule of Professional Charges of the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors and are adopted by the Royal Institute of British Architects.

- 11. For approving plans submitted by lessees and inspecting buildings during progress.
- 12. The laying out or development of estates.
- 13. For land surveying and the preparation of plans and maps.
- 14. Preparing bills of quantities and valuing work executed.
- 15. Valuation of freehold or leasehold properties.
- 16. Work under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act or other Acts for the compulsory acquisition of property.

STRUCTURAL ENGINEERS

The following charges are those usually in operation among Consulting Structural Engineers who are not connected with any firm of contractors and who receive remuneration for their services directly from their clients. Full details of the scales which it authorizes can be obtained from the Institution of Structural Engineers, 21 Upper Belgrave Street, S.W.1.

Reports, Advisory Work and Surveys

For inspections, professional advice, opinions and reports: a fee of Three Guineas per hour upwards, minimum three hours at rate agreed, plus any necessary expenses for travel and services of Engineer's staff.

Constructional Work

A fee of £25, plus (1) for Reinforced Concrete, 7½ per cent. on total cost of work, with an additional 2 per cent. on the first £20,000; for preparation of Bending Lists, 5 per cent. on cost of steel bent and fixed in work; (2) for Structural Steelwork and other work except (1) above, 6 per cent. on total cost of work, with additional 1 per cent. on first £20,000; (3) an additional fee where the Engineer is required to give advice or accept responsibility for the strength or safety of brickwork or other items not covered by (1) and (2) above.

The above scale is governed by conditions regarding constructional emergencies, remuneration for work done to the Engineer's Specification and/or Drawings, remuneration for works varied or abandoned, travelling and out-of-pocket expenses, etc.

Bills of Quantities, etc.

A fee of from 2½ per cent. to 2½ per cent. (depending on the size and complexity of the work) of the total actual cost or, in the case of abandoned work, the total estimated cost. Measuring and making-up accounts for variations upon contracts, including pricing and agreeing totals with contractors: 2½ per cent. upon the amount of the additions and 1½ per cent. upon the amount of the omissions, less the provisional sums or work omitted as a whole.

Technical Evidence

For "qualifying," considering documents, preparing proof of evidence, attending consultations, appearing before Parliamentary Committees, Courts of Law, Arbitration Tribunals and Official Enquiries: (1) a fee of Three Guineas per hour upwards, varying in accordance with the standing of the Engineer and the importance of the case, with a minimum of three hours at whatever rate is agreed; (2) a charge for the time spent by the Engineer's assistants; (3) a refresher for each day for which the Engineer is requested to hold himself in readiness to attend but is subsequently not required, at the rate agreed for one hour per day; (4) fees at the agreed hourly rate for time occupied in travel, together with travelling and out-of-pocket expenses.

Valuations and Negotiations for Purchase

For valuation of, and negotiations for the purchase of, engineering undertakings less than £10,000: a percentage charge dependent on the amount of work and responsibility involved; £10,000 or more: a fee in accordance with Ryde's Scale, i.e. Thirteen Guineas, plus one-half of one Guinea per cent. of the total.

CONSULTING ENGINEERS

The fees payable to Consulting Engineers for design and supervision are based on a percentage scale and for project reports, inspections, etc., on a lump sum or time scale. Full details can be obtained from the Association of Consulting Engineers (Incorp.), 36 Victoria Street, S.W.1.

A booklet "Professional Rules and Practice and Scales of Fees" which gives full details of fees in addition to containing Model Forms of Agreement between a Client and a Consulting Engineer is issued at 5s. per copy. The Model Forms of Agreement contained in this booklet are:—

- Form "A"—For Design and Supervision of Works of Civil Engineering Construction.
- Form "B"—For Design and Supervision of Works Principally of an Electrical and Mechanical Nature (not being Electrical or Mechanical Installation Work for Buildings or other Structures to which Model Form "D" applies).
- Form "C"—For Design and Supervision of Structural Engineering Work in Buildings and other Structures (where an Architect has been appointed by the Client).
- Form "D"—For Design and Supervision of Electrical and Mechanical Installation Work for Buildings and other Structures.

QUANTITY SURVEYORS

In general Quantity Surveyors' fees are calculated as a percentage upon the estimated cost of the work or are based upon the time involved. Details of the scales of charges which they authorize can be obtained from:—

THE ROYAL INSTITUTION OF CHARTERED SURVEYORS, 12 Great George Street, S.W.1., and THE INSTITUTE OF QUANTITY SURVEYORS, 98 Gloucester Place, W.1.

STOCKBROKERS

The Rules and Regulations drawn up by the London Stock Exchange Council are voluminous and technical. On British Government stocks the scale of brokerage is ½ per cent. on Stock up to £10,000 Stock and ¼ per cent. on Stock on any balance in excess of £10,000 Stock. On shares not exceeding 15s. the brokerage is ¼d. to 2½d. per share,

Not exceeding 20s.	3d. per share
"	"	30s. 3½d. "
"	"	40s. 4½d. "
"	"	50s. 6d. "
"	"	60s. 7½d. "

and so on. There are minimum charges of 5s. on less than £200; 10s. on less than £100; and £1 on £100 and over. In certain circumstances the above charges may be modified. Copies of the Rules and Scale of Commission may be obtained from the Secretary.

SHIPBROKERS

A scale of Minimum Agency Charges became operative for members of the Institute of Chartered Shipbrokers (Office, 25 Bury Street, E.C.3) from 1920, and has been revised from time to time. Copies (price 6d. post free) may be obtained from the Secretary.

AUCTIONEERS AND ESTATE AGENTS

(Summary based on the Scales of Charges of the Professional Societies. In all cases expenses are excluded)

Sales by Private Treaty or by Auction

Freehold Property and Leasehold Property, where the rent is less than $\frac{2}{3}$ rd. of the rateable value, including in the case of auctions the preparation of particulars and advising as to reserves:—On the first £500, 5 per cent.; on the next £4,500, $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; on the residue, $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

In addition to the above charges:—On payments for goodwill, 5 per cent. on the first £1,000 and $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the residue; and on amounts paid by the purchaser for Chattels, Fixtures, Fittings, Furniture, Trade Stocks, and other Movable Effects, Timber, and Tenant-right, 5 per cent. to include inventory and valuation if required.

Where the division of an estate into a number of lots involves substantial additional work, an extra fee may be charged.

Sales before Auction

After acceptance of instructions, whether sale arranged by auctioneer or not, the same scale as for sale by auction.

Non-Sale

In the event of non-sale at the auction, a fee, the amount of which is a matter of arrangement, is payable.

Sales within 3 Months after Auction

Whether arranged by auctioneer or not, same commission as for sale by auction merging any fee for non-sale previously paid.

Disposal of Leasehold Property.—On disposing of all leases (other than those to which the foregoing sale scale applies and building leases) either by private treaty or by auction (whether effected by assignment, surrender or otherwise):—On the rent, the same commission as for a letting (see below); and, on the premium and any consideration equivalent thereto, 5 per cent. on the first £1,000 and $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the residue; and, where the necessary instructions are held, on payments for goodwill, 5 per cent. on the first £1,000 and $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the residue; and on payments for Chattels, Fixtures, etc.—As for Freehold Property (see above).

NOTE.—Where two Agents are co-operating at the request of the owner, the commission shall be at the rate of a scale and a half.

Purchases

Freehold and Leasehold Property.—For seeking and negotiating the purchase of a property to suit a client's requirements:— $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the first £5,000; $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the next £10,000; and 1 per cent. on the residue. For abortive work a fee to be fixed by arrangement. For negotiating the purchase of a particular property named by the client:— $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the first £15,000; and 1 per cent. on the residue. If no purchase is effected, the usual scale for valuation should be charged: one guinea per cent. on first £1,000; half a guinea on next £9,000; and a quarter of a guinea per cent. beyond on the residue. Minimum fee, £7 17s. 6d.

Lettings

NOTES.—(a) Should the rent be a progressive one, the commission is based on the average rent for the period up to the first possible break of the tenancy. (b) When a property, which an Agent has been instructed to let or sell, is let with an option to purchase, and the tenant afterwards exercises his option, or becomes the purchaser within the period of the option, the commission for selling, less the commission already paid on the letting, will then become payable. (c) "Letting" includes a letting to a sitting tenant (including negotiating and agreeing a new rent) or to a nominee of the landlord. (d) For the purposes of these scales "rent" means (except where otherwise stated) the rent reserved by the letting plus any regular payments made to the landlord for which the tenant is responsible.

(1) Unfurnished Premises.—(a) Where there is a premium or any equivalent consideration and the rent (exclusive of any payment in respect of rates, heat, light, water, service or other incidental charges) is less than two-thirds of the rateable value, the same commission as is payable for the sale of such property (see above); (b) in all other cases, 10 per cent. on 1 year's rent, or, in the case of a letting for less than a year, 10 per cent. on the amount of rent payable under the letting, and in addition a commission on the premium or goodwill as for the disposal of leasehold property (see above).

(2) Furnished Premises, including collection of rent, if required, but excluding the making and checking of inventories: (a) for lettings of six weeks or less, 10 per cent. on the amount of rent payable under the letting; (b) for lettings of more than six weeks, $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the amount of rent payable, with a minimum of the amount payable under (a) if the letting had been for six weeks.

(3) Sporting Rights, including collection of rent if required—10 per cent. on one year's rent or, where letting is for less than one year, 10 per cent. on the amount of rent payable under the letting.

(4) Farms and Agricultural Land.—10 per cent. on the first £250 and $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the residue, of 1 year's rent.

(5) Land on Building Lease, or at a Fee Farm Rent.—100 per cent. on the first £100; 50 per cent. on the next £900; and 25 per cent. on the residue, of one year's ground rent; and in addition where a premium is paid, a Commission of 5 per cent. on the first £1,000 and $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the residue.

SAVINGS BANKS

Post Office Savings Bank.—On Dec. 31, 1958, there were approximately 22,425,000 active deposit accounts in the Post Office Savings Bank, with the sum of £1,645,569,000 due to depositors. On December 31, 1958, Government Stock and Bonds to the amount of £808,639,000 stood to the credit of holders in the Post Office Savings Bank Section of the Post Office Register. Any sum from one shilling to £500 may be deposited and interest is allowed at 2½ per cent. per annum. A depositor may have more than one account. There is a limit of £3,000 to the amount which may stand to his credit and he may not deposit more than £500 in the aggregate in any year.

In 1957 the Average Amount due to each Depositor in Active Accounts was £75 2s. 1d.

TRUSTEE SAVINGS BANKS

Trustee Savings Banks were started in the early years of the 19th century by public-spirited men who recognized the importance of individual thrift to the well-being of the community.

On Nov. 20, 1958, there were 8,660,332 active accounts in the Trustee Savings Banks. The total assets of the Banks amounted to £1,333,452,207 which comprised £1,165,418,939 due to depositors; in the Ordinary and Special Investment Departments, £147,693,889 Stocks and Bonds held for depositors and £20,339,379 representing the accumulated surplus of the individual Trustee Savings Banks throughout the country. Information about these Banks and their offices, numbering 1,335 (principal and subordinate) in November, 1958, can be obtained from the Trustee Savings Bank Association, Tavistock House South, Tavistock Square, W.C.1. Chairman, Sir Kenneth Stewart, G.B.E.; Secretary, R. T. H. Scott, M.B.E.

PREMIUM BONDS

A scheme to attract further savings in the United Kingdom was launched by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on November 1, 1956. £1 Premium Bonds are sold by Post Offices, Banks and Trustee Savings Banks up to a maximum value of £500 to individuals. They may not be held by institutions. Group schemes for the purchase of bonds in industrial organizations are promoted by the National Savings Committee. Premium Bonds bear no interest but after six months are included monthly in a draw for money prizes of £1,000, £500, £250, £100, £50 and £25. Numbers are selected by an electronic random number indicator ("Ernie"), winning numbers being published in the press. In the first five months of currency, £66,633,850 was invested by the public. Total investment rose to £153,305,851 in March, 1958, and to £250,000,000 on June 30, 1959. Repayments over the same period totalled £22,000,000.

Prizes.—By July 1, 1959, 327,919 prizes worth £3,748,125 had been paid out: Prizes of £1,000, 1,362; of £500, 2,724; of £250, 5,448; £100, 13,620; £50, 27,240; £25, 277,525. £792,425 was available for distribution as prizes on July 1, 1959, and it was expected that the monthly figure would exceed £1,000,000 in 1959.

THE PRESS COUNCIL

In April, 1947, a Royal Commission was appointed to enquire into the control, management and ownership, etc., of the Press and news agencies and to make recommendations thereon. The Commission, in its report of June, 1949, recommended inter alia that a voluntary Press Council be formed.

A constitution ultimately set up provided for the establishment of such a council on July 1, 1953. The objects of the Council were stated in the constitution to be (1) to preserve the established freedom of the British Press; (2) to maintain the character of the British Press in accordance with the highest professional and commercial standards; (3) to keep under review any developments likely to restrict the supply of information of public interest and importance; (4) to promote and encourage methods of recruitment, education and training of journalists; (5) to promote a proper functional relation among all sections of the profession; (6) to promote technical and other research; (7) to study developments in the Press which may tend towards greater concentration or monopoly; (8) to publish periodical reports recording its own work and reviewing from time to time the various developments in the Press and the factors affecting them.

The membership of the Council is composed of 25 editorial representatives (3 national newspaper editors, 2 provincial newspaper editors elected by editors of newspapers in membership of the Newspaper Society, 2 provincial newspaper editors nominated by the Guild of British Newspaper Editors, 1 Scottish newspaper editor, 4 editorial representatives nominated by the National Union of Journalists and 3 editorial representatives nominated by the Institute of Journalists) and 20 managerial representatives (4 nominated by the Newspaper Proprietors Association, 4 nominated by the Newspaper Society, 1 nominated by the Scottish Daily Newspaper Society and 1 nominated by the Scottish Newspaper Proprietors Association).

Chairman (vacant).

Vice-Chairman and Acting Chairman, G. Murray, C.B.E.

Members, D. M. Ballantine; W. D. Barnetson; H. Bate; T. Blackburn; K. Brown; S. Campbell; E. M. Clayton; G. Crosfield; A. Dunnett; M. Edmunds; G. R. French; R. A. Gibbs; A. J. Gibson; R. Hammond; C. THE COUNCIL OF INDUSTRIAL DESIGN

28 Haymarket, S.W.1

The Council of Industrial Design, with its Scottish Committee, was set up in December, 1944, by the President of the Board of Trade, "to promote by all practical means the improvement of design in the products of British Industry." For manufacturers, the Council provides advice on the application of design policy, and recommends designers from its Record of Designers. For retailers, it provides courses for buyers and salesmen on design appreciation, and has organized exhibitions in retail stores. For the public it provides selective exhibitions of well designed goods.

The Council maintains a selective, pictorial record of well designed goods in current production known as Design Index, which is available for consultation at its headquarters. The Council also maintains a photograph and slide library, press and information services, and publishes a monthly journal Design.

In April, 1956, the Council launched the Design Centre for British Industries, which occupies an 8,000 sq. ft. showroom at 28 Haymarket, S.W.1. In 1957 the Scottish Design Centre was established at 46 West George Street, Glasgow, C.A.

Chairman, Sir Walter Worboys, B.Sc., D.Phil.

Chairman of Scottish Committee, Sir Charles Connell.

Director, Paul Reilly.

Chief Executive, Scottish Committee, Alister Maynard, M.B.E., 46 West George Street, Glasgow, C.A.

THE NATIONAL BUILDINGS RECORD

31 Chester Terrace, N.W.1

Chairman of Advisory Council, Sir James Mann.

K.C.V.O., Hon. V.P.S.A., F.B.A.

Director and Secretary, Walter H. Godfrey, C.B.E., F.S.A., F.R.I.B.A.

The National Buildings Record is an organization established in 1941 under the direction of an Advisory Council. It is supported by an annual grant from the Treasury, and its functions are:

To maintain a library of photographs and measured drawings of English and Welsh architecture which is open to the public for consultation and study. It is arranged topographically and contains approximately 500,000 items.

To supply copies of photographs where negatives are available. There are approximately 300,000 negatives.

To prepare and acquire additional records which are constantly being added to the library.

To maintain an index of architectural records (photographs, measured drawings, sketches, and engravings) in public and private possession.

FEDERATION OF BRITISH INDUSTRIES 21, Tothill Street, S.W.1.

The Federation of British Industries was founded in 1916, and in 1923 was granted a Royal Charter. In the Charter, the F.B.I. is defined as an association of manufacturers founded for the "encouragement, promotion and protection of British Industries of all kinds."

The membership consists of individual firms engaged in productive industry (excluding the nationalized industries) and trade associations. More than 7,500 firms and 300 trade associations (representing about 40,000 firms) are members. The Federation has 12 regional and district offices and has representatives in 140 centres overseas.

President, W. H. McFadzean.

Director-General, Sir Norman Kipping.

Secretary, J. Gough.

NATIONAL UNION OF MANUFACTURERS 6, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.1.

The National Union of Manufacturers is a national organization representing manufacturing industry. Formed in 1915, its membership (restricted to manufacturers) now totals over 5,000 individual firms with 60 affiliated trade associations. It is regarded both by Government and by industry as the national representative of medium-sized and smaller firms in particular. It has no party-political affiliations. There are branches in London, Birmingham, Manchester, Liverpool, Nottingham, Leeds, Newcastle, Glasgow and Cardiff.

President, Morton Oliphant, M.B.E., T.D.

Director, Lt.-Col. V. I. Robins, O.B.E.

TRADES UNION CONGRESS (T.U.C.)

Congress House, 23-28 Great Russell Street, W.C.1.

[Museum: 4030]

The Trades Union Congress, founded in 1868, is a voluntary association of Trade Unions, the primary purpose of which is to enable the representatives of unions to meet annually to consider matters of common concern to their members. The Congress has met annually since its foundation (with the exception of 1914) and in recent years has met normally on the first Monday in September, its sessions extending through the succeeding four days. Congress is constituted by delegates of the affiliated unions on the basis of one delegate for every 5,000 members, or fraction thereof, on whose behalf affiliation fees are paid. Affiliated unions (in 1958-59) totalled 186 with an aggregate membership of 8,176,252.

The main business of the annual Congress is to consider the report of its General Council dealing with the activities of the Congress year, along with resolutions from affiliated societies on questions of policy and organization. Although 186 trade union organizations are affiliated to Congress, some of these, especially in cotton, are themselves federal bodies including in total 150 more unions. Only three British unions with large membership are not affiliated to the T.U.C.

One of the important responsibilities of the annual Congress is to elect a General Council to keep watch on all industrial movements, legislation affecting labour and all matters touching the interest of the Trade Union Movement, with authority to promote common action on general questions, and to assist Trade Unions in the work of organization. The General Council is elected by Congress and is composed of 35 members (33 representing 18 trade groups and two representing women workers). Following is a list of these trade groups with the aggregate membership of unions in each group (the woman membership included in the total being shown separately), and with the number of representatives each group is entitled to have on the General Council:—

Trade Group (with representation)	Membership
	Total	Women
Mining and Quarrying (3)	716,927	40
Railways (3)	508,200	28,064
Transport (other) (3)	1,347,584	147,468
Shipbuilding	130,726	—
Engineering, Founding and Vehicle Building (3)	1,517,113	87,162
Iron and Steel and Minor Metal Trades (2)	208,699	7,401
Building, Woodworking and Furnishing (2)	542,222	14,212
Printing and Paper (1)	326,766	74,351
Cotton (2)	134,030	91,367
Textiles (other) (1)	94,084	38,574
Clothing (1)	163,848	125,380
Leather and Boot and Shoe (1)	101,144	41,410
Glass, Pottery, Food, Chemicals, etc. (2)	470,689	202,278
Agriculture (1)	135,000	7,500
Public Employees (1)	277,498	94,260
Civil Service (2)	465,583	147,865
Non-Manual (1)	255,028	72,469
General Workers (3)	781,111	156,464
TOTAL	8,176,252	1,336,265

Among the powers vested in it by consent of the Unions in Congress is the responsibility of adjusting disputes and differences between affiliated organizations; such matters being dealt with by a Disputes Committee of the General Council which investigates matters referred to it and issues its findings thereon, which are invariably accepted by the parties to the dispute. The General Council has power also, if there appears to be justification, to institute an investigation into the conduct of any affiliated organization on the ground that its activities are detrimental to the interests of the Trade Union Movement or contrary to the declared principles and policy of the Congress; but membership of the Congress is voluntary and Unions retain full control of their own affairs, and a penalty of suspension from membership of the Congress or exclusion from membership is the only measure that can be taken to enforce Congress decisions. Through the General Council the Trade Union Movement maintains organic relations with the Government and Government Departments, and with a large number of outside bodies. The principal instrument for Government relations is the National Joint Advisory Council which functions on the Cabinet level; in this body the British Employers' Confederation and the Boards of nationalized industries are represented along with the T.U.C. for purposes of consultation and advice on matters of governmental policy and administration affecting industry. The same bodies, together with the chairmen of the eleven Regional Boards for industry and representatives of the Federation of British Industries, serve on the National Production Advisory Council on industry which meets under the chairmanship of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who is accompanied by Ministers of Departments concerned with aspects of production, to advise the government on production questions. The General Council nominates members to serve on numerous other bodies, e.g. Economic Planning Board, the National Savings Committee, National Insurance Advisory Committee, British Institute of Management, Research Council, Consumers' Councils and numerous educational and miscellaneous bodies. Trades Councils and Federations, which are the local agents of the T.U.C., are registered annually and close contact is maintained with them through a Joint Consultative Committee. There are also a number of national advisory bodies for various groups of industries, including the engineering and shipbuilding trades, the non-manual workers, local Government employees and the nursing profession.

Chairman (1959-60), C. Bartlett.

General Secretary, Sir Vincent Tewson, C.B.E., M.C.
Assistant General Secretary, G. Woodcock, C.B.E.

Assistant Secretary, V. Feather.

SCOTTISH TRADES UNION CONGRESS

12, Woodlands Terrace, Glasgow, C.3.

Chairman (1959-60), J. Milne.

General Secretary, G. Middleton, C.B.E.

The Scottish Trades Union Congress was established in 1897 and it is pointed out that it is in no way a competitor of the British Congress, nor does it "justify its existence on strictly nationalist lines." Its objects are parallel to those of the T.U.C., with which it works in the closest co-operation.

In 1959 the Congress had 91 affiliated Unions and 42 Trades Councils with a membership of 779,214. The Annual Congress is held in April and a General Council of twelve members is elected.

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH ASSOCIATIONS

A notable development in modern industry is the growth in numbers and importance of Industrial Research Associations and their increasing influence on the scientific and economic life of the country. The total expenditure of these Associations in 1958 was about £6,300,000 per annum, of which £1,650,000 was provided by the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research and the remainder by subscriptions of individual members.

The Government Scheme for Co-operative Industrial Research was launched by the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research in 1918. Its aim was to stimulate the industries of the United Kingdom to undertake co-operative research as a means of increasing their efficiency.

Research Associations formed under this scheme are registered companies, limited by guarantee of a nominal sum and working without the division of profits in the form of dividends. To assist the formation of such Associations the Board of Trade and the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research have drawn up a model Memorandum and Articles of Association, to which Research Associations under the scheme conform in all essential points.

The income of the Research Associations is derived from subscriptions from their individual members, supplemented in most cases by substantial grants from the Government, through the Department of Scientific and Industrial Research.

The Research Associations are autonomous bodies free to determine their own policy for the development of their research programmes and the use to be made of the results of their research. Membership is open to any British firm in the particular industry, subject to the approval of the Councils of the Research Associations.

There are now 40 Research Associations and 10 other organizations in receipt of grants from the Department. They cover most of the principal industries of the country, as follows:—

Baking.

BRITISH BAKING INDUSTRIES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Baking Industries Research Station, Chorleywood, Herts.—Dir., G. A. H. Elton, D.Sc., Ph.D.

Boots and Shoes.

BRITISH BOOT, SHOE AND ALLIED TRADES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Satra House, Rockingham Rd., Kettering.—Dir., H. Bradley, C.B.E.

Cast Iron.

BRITISH CAST IRON RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Bordesley Hall, Alvechurch, Birmingham.—Dir., H. Morrogh.

Ceramics.

BRITISH CERAMIC RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Queen's Road, Penkhull, Stoke-on-Trent.—Dir., A. T. Green, C.B.E., D.Sc.

Coal.

BRITISH COAL UTILISATION RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Randalis Rd., Leatherhead, Surrey.—Dir., Gen., D. T. A. Townend, C.B.E., D.Sc., Ph.D.

Coke.

BRITISH COKE RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Coke Research Centre, Chesterfield.—Dir., G. W. Lee.

Cotton.

BRITISH COTTON INDUSTRY RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Shirley Institute, Didsbury, Manchester.—Dir., D. W. Hill, D.Sc., Ph.D.

Cutlery.

CUTLERY RESEARCH COUNCIL, Hoyle Street, Sheffield, 3.—Senior Research Officer, E. A. Oldfield.

Electrical.

BRITISH ELECTRICAL AND ALLIED INDUSTRIES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Clewe Road, Leatherhead, Surrey.—Dir., H. G. Taylor, D.Sc.

Felt.

BRITISH HAT AND ALLIED FELTMAKERS RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Stanley House, Manchester Rd., Fairfield, Droylsden, Manchester.—Dir., T. Barr, Ph.D.

Files.

FILE RESEARCH COUNCIL, Hoyle Street, Sheffield, 3.—Consultant, J. Pearson, Ph.D.

Flour.

RESEARCH ASSOCIATION OF BRITISH FLOUR-MILLERS, Cereals Research Station, Old London Road, St. Albans, Herts.—Dir., T. Moran, C.B.E., D.Sc., Ph.D.

Food Manufacturing.

BRITISH FOOD MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Randalls Road, Leatherhead, Surrey.—Dir., F. H. Banfield, Ph.D.

Fruit and Vegetable Canning.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLE CANNING AND QUICK FREEZING RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Chipping Campden, Glos.—Dir., W. B. Adam.

Furniture.

RESEARCH AND INFORMATION COMMITTEE OF THE FURNITURE DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL, 22 Adelphi Terrace, Robert Street, W.C.2.—Dir., J. C. Pritchard, O.B.E.

Gelatine and Glue.

BRITISH GELATINE AND GLUE RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, 22 Dalmeny Avenue, Holloway, N.7.—Dir., A. G. Ward.

Glass.

BRITISH GLASS INDUSTRY RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Elmfield, Northumberland Road, Sheffield, 10.—Dir., R. G. Newton, Ph.D.

Heating and Ventilating.

HEATING AND VENTILATING RESEARCH COUNCIL, c/o B.C.U.R.A., Randalls Road, Leatherhead, Surrey.—Dir., N. S. Billington.

Hosiery.

HOSIERY AND ALLIED TRADES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Thorneywood, Gregory Boulevard, Nottingham.—Dir., J. W. Illingworth, Ph.D.

Hydromechanics.

BRITISH HYDROMECHANICS RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, South Road, Temple Fields, Harlow, Essex.—Dir., L. E. Prosser.

I.C. Engines.

BRITISH INTERNAL COMBUSTION ENGINE RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, 111-112 Buckingham Avenue, Trading Estate, Slough.—Dir., W. P. Mansfield, Ph.D.

Iron and Steel.

BRITISH IRON AND STEEL RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, 22 Park Lane, W.1.—Dir., Sir Charles Goodeve, O.B.E., D.Sc., F.R.S.

Jute.

BRITISH JUTE TRADE RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Kinnoull Road, Kingsway West, Dundee, Scotland.—Dir., H. P. Stout, Ph.D.

Lace

LACE RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Glaisdale Drive West, Bilborough, Nottingham.—Dir., John C. MacCallum.

Launderers.

BRITISH LAUNDERERS' RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Hill View Gardens, Hendon, N.W.4.—Dir., J. Leicester.

Leather.

BRITISH LEATHER MANUFACTURERS' RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Milton Park, Egham, Surrey.—Dir., K. W. Pepper, D.Sc.

Lime.

CHALK LIME AND ALLIED INDUSTRIES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Laboratories, Church Street, Welwyn, Herts.—Dir., G. E. Bessey.

Linen.

LINEN INDUSTRY RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Research Institute, Lambeg, Lisburn, Co. Antrim.—Dir., D. A. Derrett-Smith.

Marine Engineering.

PARSONS AND MARINE ENGINEERING TURBINE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATION, Pametrada Research Station, Wallsend, Northumberland.—Dir., T. W. F. Brown, D.Sc.

Motor.

MOTOR INDUSTRY RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Lindley, nr. Nuneaton, Warwickshire.—Dir., A. Fogg, D.Sc.

Non-Ferrous Metals.

BRITISH NON-FERROUS METALS RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Euston Street, N.W.1.—Dir., G. L. Bailey, C.B.E.

Paint.

RESEARCH ASSOCIATION OF BRITISH PAINT, COLOUR AND VARNISH MANUFACTURERS, Waldegrave Road, Teddington, Middlesex, Dir., L. A. Jordan, C.B.E., D.Sc.

Paper.

BRITISH PAPER AND BOARD INDUSTRY RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Welcomes Road, Kenley, Surrey.—Dir., N. R. Hood, Ph.D.

Printing and Packaging.

PRINTING, PACKAGING AND ALLIED TRADES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Patra House, Randalls Road, Leatherhead, Surrey.—Dir., V. G. W. Harrison, Ph.D.

Production Engineering.

PRODUCTION ENGINEERING RESEARCH ASSOCIATION OF GREAT BRITAIN, Melton Mowbray, Leics.—Dir., D. F. Galloway, Ph.D.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH INSTITUTES AND UNITS

The following research institutes are under the direct control of the Agricultural Research Council (see p. 363):—

Field Station, Compton, near Newbury, Berks.—Director, W. S. Gordon, C.B.E., Ph.D., M.R.C.V.S., F.R.S.E.

Unit of Insect Physiology, Department of Zoology, Cambridge.—Director, Prof. V. B. Wigglesworth, C.B.E., M.D., F.R.S.

Institute of Animal Physiology, Babraham Hall, Babraham, Cambs.—Director, J. H. Gaddum, M.A., Sc.D., M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., F.R.S.

Animal Breeding Research Organisation, Glenbourne, 6 South Oswald Road, Edinburgh, 9.—Director, H. P. Donald, D.Sc., Ph.D., F.R.S.E.

Poultry Research Centre, King's Buildings, West Mains Road, Edinburgh, 9.—Director, A. W. Greenwood, C.B.E. D.Sc., Ph.D., F.R.S.E.

Unit of Experimental Agronomy, Department of Agriculture, University of Oxford.—Hon. Director, Prof. G. E. Blackman.

Unit of Biometrical Genetics, Department of Genetics, University of Birmingham.—Hon. Director, Prof. K. Mather, C.B.E., D.Sc., Ph.D., F.R.S.

Unit of Microbiology, Department of Microbiology, The University, Sheffield, 10.—Hon. Director, S. R. Eldsen, Ph.D.

Rayon.

BRITISH RAYON RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Heald Green Laboratories, Wythenshawe, Manchester.—Dir., L. A. Wiseman

Rubber.

RESEARCH ASSOCIATION OF BRITISH RUBBER MANUFACTURERS, Shawbury, Shrewsbury, Shropshire.—Dir., W. F. Watson, D.Sc., Ph.D.

Scientific Instruments.

BRITISH SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENT RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, South Hill, Chislehurst, Kent.—Dir., J. Thomson, D.Sc., Ph.D.

Shipbuilding.

BRITISH SHIPBUILDING RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, 5 Chestertield Gardens, Curzon Street, W.1.—Dir., Sir Victor Shephard, K.C.B.

Springs.

COIL SPRING FEDERATION RESEARCH ORGANISATION, Hoyle Street, Sheffield.—Dir., R. Haynes.

Steel Castings.

BRITISH STEEL CASTINGS RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, East Bank Road, Sheffield, 2.—Dir., A. H. Sully, Ph.D.

Tar.

COAL TAR RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Oxford Road, Gomersal, nr. Leeds.—Dir., D. McNeil, Ph.D.

Timber.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE OF THE TIMBER DEVELOPMENT ASSOCIATION, 21 College Hill, E.C.4.—Dir., P. O. Reece.

Welding.

BRITISH WELDING RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, 29 Park Crescent, W.1.—Dir., R. Weck, Ph.D.

Whiting.

RESEARCH COUNCIL OF THE BRITISH WHITING FEDERATION, 30 Church Street, Welwyn, Herts. Dir., D. C. Soul.

Wool.

WOOL INDUSTRIES RESEARCH ASSOCIATION, Torridon, Headingley Lane, Leeds, 6.—Dir., A. B. D. Cassie, C.B.E., D.Sc., Ph.D.

Unit of Soil Physics, School of Agriculture, Cambridge.—Director, E. C. Childs, Sc.D., Ph.D.

Unit of Embryology, Univ. College of N. Wales, Bangor.—Hon. Director, Prof. F. W. Rogers Brambell, D.Sc., Ph.D., F.R.S.

Unit of Statistics, University of Aberdeen.—Director, D. J. Finney, Sc.D., F.R.S., F.R.S.E.

Statistics Group, School of Agriculture, Cambridge.—Officer-in-Charge, R. C. Campbell, M.A., Ph.D.

Unit of Reproductive Physiology and Biochemistry, Molteno Institute, Cambridge.—Director, T. R. R. Mann, M.D., Sc.D., Ph.D., F.R.S.

Unit of Animal Genetics, University of Edinburgh, King's Buildings, West Mains Road, Edinburgh, 9.—Hon. Director, Prof. C. H. Waddington, C.B.E., Sc.D., F.R.S.

Radiobiological Laboratory, Grove, Wantage, Berks.—Director, R. Scott Russell, M.Sc., Ph.D.

Unit on Plant Growth Substances and Systemic Fungicides, Wye College, Ashford, Kent.—Hon. Director, Prof. R. L. Wain, D.Sc., Ph.D.

Virus Research Unit, Huntingdon Road, Cambridge.—Director, K. M. Smith, C.B.E., D.Sc., Ph.D., F.R.S.

Ditton Laboratory, Larkfield, Maidstone.—Director, R. G. Tomkins, M.A., Ph.D.

Covent Garden Laboratory, Inveresk House, 346 Strand, W.C.1.—Officer-in-Charge, J. C. Fidler, Ph.D.

Low Temperature Research Station, Downing Street, Cambridge.—Director, E. Bate-Smith, M.Sc., Ph.D.

Smithfield Laboratory, 91-93 Charterhouse Street, E.C.1.—Officer-in-Charge, E. H. Callow, Ph.D.

Pest Infestation Laboratory, London Road, Slough, Bucks.—Director, G. V. B. Herford, C.B.E., M.Sc.

GRANT-AIDED RESEARCH INSTITUTES

In addition to the above there are other institutes which, while retaining their own individuality, are financed wholly or in the main by grants made by the Agricultural Departments. Most of these Institutes have governing bodies of their own to which they are directly responsible. The maintenance grants for Institutes in England and Wales are met from funds voted by Parliament and administered by the Agricultural Research Council; the Scottish Institutes are borne on the vote of the Department of Agriculture for Scotland. These Departments seek the advice of the Agricultural Research Council in the consideration of research programmes and estimates.

(a) Research affecting Plants and Soils

Soil Science and Plant Pathology

Rothamsted Experimental Station, Harpenden, Herts.—Director, F. C. Bawden, M.A., F.R.S.

Macaulay Institute for Soil Research, Craigiebuckler, Aberdeen.—Director, Prof. A. B. Stewart, M.A., B.Sc., Ph.D., F.R.I.C.

Plant Breeding

Hop Research Centre, Wye College, Ashford, Kent.—Officer-in-Charge, H. S. Darling, B.Sc.

Plant Breeding Institute, Maris Lane, Trumpington, Cambridge.—Director, G. D. H. Bell, Ph.D.

Welsh Plant Breeding Station, Plas Gogerddan, Nr. Aberystwyth.—Director, Prof. P. T. Thomas, B.Sc., Ph.D.

Scottish Plant Breeding Station, Pentlandsfield, Roslin, Midlothian.—Director, J. W. Gregor, D.Sc., Ph.D., F.L.S.

Horticulture

John Innes Horticultural Institution, Bayfordbury, Hertford.—Director, K. S. Dodds, D.Sc., Ph.D.

East Malling Research Station, Nr. Maidstone, Kent.—Director, F. R. Tubbs, Ph.D.

Agricultural and Horticultural Research Station, Long Ashton, Bristol.—Director, Prof. H. G. H. Kearns, O.B.E., B.Sc., Ph.D.

Scottish Horticultural Research Institute, Mylneduff, Invergowrie, Dundee.—Director, T. Swarbrick, M.Sc., Ph.D.

Vegetables

National Vegetable Research Station, Wellesbourne, Warwickshire.—Director, J. Philip, Ph.D., F.L.S.

Grassland

Grassland Research Institute, Hurley, nr. Maidenhead, Berks.—Director, William Davies, D.Sc.

Glasshouse Crops

Glasshouse Crops Research Institute, Worthing Road, Rustington, Littlehampton, Sussex.—Director, F. W. Toovey, O.B.E.

Crop Variety Testing, Seed Testing and Seed Production

National Institute of Agricultural Botany, Huntingdon Road, Cambridge.—Director, F. R. Horne, C.B.E.

(b) Research affecting Animals

Animal Diseases

Animal Diseases Research Association, Moredun Institute, Gilmerton, Edinburgh, 9.—Director, J. T. Stamp, D.Sc., M.R.C.V.S., F.R.S.E.

Research Institute (Animal Virus Diseases), Pirbright, Surrey.—Director, I. A. Galloway, D.Sc., M.R.C.V.S.

Hill Farming

Hill Farming Research Organisation, 48 Palmerston Place, Edinburgh, 12.—Director, A. R. Wannop, O.B.E., F.R.S.E.

Dairying

National Institute for Research in Dairying, Shinfield, nr. Reading.—Director, Prof. R. G. Baskett, O.B.E., M.Sc.

Hannah Dairy Research Institute, Kirkhill, Ayr.—Director, J. A. B. Smith, C.B.E., D.Sc., Ph.D., F.R.S.E.

Nutrition

Rowett Research Institute, Bucksburn, Aberdeen.—Director, D. P. Cuthbertson, C.B.E., M.D., D.Sc., F.R.S.E.

Poultry

Houghton Poultry Research Station,* Houghton Grange, Huntingdon.—Director, R. F. Gordon, D.Sc., M.R.C.V.S.

(c) Research on Agricultural Engineering

National Institute of Agricultural Engineering, Wrest Park, Silsoe, Beds.—Director, W. H. Cashmore, C.B.E.

National Institute of Agricultural Engineering, Scottish Station, Howden, Mid-Calder, Midlothian.—Director, W. J. West.

* Financed jointly by the Agricultural Research Council and the Animal Health Trust.

DISTANCE OF THE HORIZON

THE limit of distance to which one can see varies with the height of the spectator. The greatest distance at which an object on the surface of the sea, or of a level plain, can be seen by a person whose eyes are at a height of 5 feet from the same level is nearly 3 miles. At a height of 20 feet the range is increased to nearly 6 miles, and an approximate rule for finding the range of vision for small heights is to increase the square root of the number of feet that the eye is above the level surface by a third of itself, the result being the distance of the horizon in miles, but is slightly in excess of that in the table below, which is computed by a more precise formula. The table may be used conversely to show the distance of an object of given height that is just visible from a point in the surface of the earth or sea. Refraction is taken into account both in the approximate rule and in the Table.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

Headquarters: Porte Dauphine, Paris, 16.

Secretary-General and Chairman of the North Atlantic Council, M. Paul-Henri Spaak (Belgium).

The North Atlantic Treaty was signed on April 4, 1949, by the Foreign Ministers of twelve nations. The twelve are Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Iceland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom and United States. Greece and Turkey acceded to the Treaty in 1952 and the Federal Republic of Germany upon the coming into force of the Paris Agreements in 1955.

The original machinery set up to carry out the provisions of the Treaty has undergone considerable modification during the passage of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization from the planning to the implementing stage. Since April, 1952, the North Atlantic Council, the principal body of the Treaty Organization, has been in continuous session in Paris. Member Governments are represented by permanent representatives, who head national delegations of advisers and experts. Ministerial meetings of the Council are held periodically. Heads of Governments may attend meetings of the Council in person. A meeting of Heads of Governments took place in December, 1957. Otherwise, at ministerial meetings, Governments are represented by their Ministers for Foreign Affairs, or by other ministers, according to the nature of the agenda. Each year a Foreign Minister is President of the Council; the Secretary-General is Chairman.

The Council is now directly responsible for the tasks performed before April, 1952, by the former Council Deputies, Defence Production Board and Financial and Economic Board. Specialized functions, such as those assigned to the Planning Board for Ocean Shipping, to the Petroleum Planning Committee, and to other subsidiary bodies, are directed by the Council.

The Secretary-General is appointed by and is responsible to the Council. He has direct access to all NATO agencies and to member Governments, and is responsible for organizing the work of the International Secretariat.

The Secretary-General is assisted by a Deputy Secretary-General, Signor Alberico Casaridi (Italy), and by three Assistant Secretaries-General, who are: Sir Evelyn Shuckburgh, K.C.M.G., C.B. (U.K.) for Political Affairs; M. François-Didier Gregh (France) for Economic and Financial Affairs; M. E.H. Meili (U.S.A.) for Production and Logistics.

The senior military authority in NATO is the Military Committee (composed of a Chief-of-Staff of each member country). Its executive agency is the Standing Group which meets in Washington. The Standing Group is composed of one representative each of France, the U.K. and the U.S.A.—currently Air Chief Marshal Max Gelee (France), Air Marshal Sir George Mills (U.K.) and Admiral Walter F. Boone (U.S.A.). It is responsible for higher strategic direction throughout the North Atlantic Treaty area.

Of the five original Regional Planning Groups one remains: the Canada-U.S.A. Regional Planning Group, with headquarters in Washington. The functions of three of the remainder have been taken over by SHAPE (Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers in Europe, under General Lauris Norstad, U.S.A.) and its regional commands. The fourth has been absorbed in the Atlantic Command (SACLANT) under Admiral Jerauld Wright (U.S.A.). The Allied Command Channel is exercised jointly by Admiral Sir Manley Power, K.C.M.G., C.B.E., D.S.O. (U.K.) and Air Marshal Sir Edward Chilton, K.B.E., C.B. (U.K.).

Life Assurance and Fire and General Insurance

LIFE ASSURANCE

THE list on the following two pages contains the names of all the more important British Life offices, and of Commonwealth companies (marked C), all of which transact business in this country.

CLASS OF BUSINESS.—The second column shows whether the company is conducted on the Mutual system whereby the whole of the divisible profit is allotted to participating policy-holders (M), or whether the company has proprietors by whom part (usually a very small proportion) of such profit is received (P). Life offices transacting other insurance business are marked (O) in this column. In such cases the Life funds are kept separately, and are not liable for the claims of other departments. The Share Capital is usually liable for the claims of all branches. Those having an Industrial branch are indicated by letter (I).

FIGURES.—These are taken from the latest annual accounts available at date of going to press, and in the majority of cases refer to annual reports for the financial year ended December 31, 1958.

LIFE FUNDS.—The amounts of these funds, though interesting, are not in themselves a sufficient indication of the financial stability of a company, which cannot be judged unless liabilities are actuarially compared with assets.

PREMIUM INCOME.—The annual premium income is in all cases stated after deduction of the amount paid to other companies for reassuring parts of the risks.

EXPENSES.—The expenses of a Life office include in all cases where paid, commission to agents. The amount of expenses is less important in itself than in relation to premium income, consequently the percentage of the premium income absorbed in expenses is shown. The average percentage of British offices is about 16½%, of which about 5½% is expended on commission and 11% on other expenses. This ratio taken by itself is frequently misleading, because, if the proportion of new business is large, the percentage of the total premiums absorbed in expenses may legitimately be higher than where the new business is small. Moreover, where rates of premium are below the average any comparisons of percentage should be considered, with due regard to this feature, a gain to the policy holder through reduced premium being equivalent to an immediate cash bonus.

INTEREST.—The rate of interest earned is important for comparison with the rate assumed in valuing liabilities, since the greater the margin between these rates the greater is the surplus available from this source for bonus. The rate of interest given is before deduction of Income Tax except where marked (N)—net.

VALUATIONS.—The last columns of the table are derived from the valuation returns made by the companies to the Board of Trade. A valuation indicates liability under existing policies, after making allowance for the amounts to be paid and received. It is assumed that deaths will occur in accordance with a mortality table, and that interest will be earned at a certain rate. Various mortality tables are employed, the most used being known as the A. 1924-29. If a company assumes that it will earn a high rate of interest in the future the net liability will appear less than if it assumes a low rate, while the liability on account of mortality appears greater by some tables than by others. The position of an office is most satisfactory when a stringent basis of valuation is adopted, because the margin between the calculated and experienced liability is larger and the surplus available for bonuses is greater. The lower the rate of interest assumed the more stringent is the valuation. The foregoing remarks, however, do not apply in the case of an office which has adopted a Bonus Reserve Valuation.

FIRE INSURANCE RATES

MOST large fire offices belong to the tariff association, charging identical rates of premium. There are, however, a number of non-tariff offices which claim to assess individual risks independently on merits. Tariff rates of premium per £100 insured against fire for the more common classes of risk are as follows:—

Private Dwelling Houses, built of brick or stone and tiled or slated and in no hazardous proximity 2s. 6d.

Household goods therein, usually 2s.

A number of companies issue "comprehensive" policies embracing in one contract all risks incidental to private houses and contents.

Shops and Warehouses, similarly built and circumstanced, in which no hazardous goods are deposited nor hazardous trades carried on, from 2s.

Stock and Utensils in trade fixtures, and household furniture in such shops and warehouses, from 2s.

Most fire insurance companies transact accident (including Motor) and miscellaneous business, and if a strong company be selected it will probably be found to the advantage of an insurer that he should effect with it all such policies as he may require, in place of dividing them amongst several companies. The "comprehensive" policies, previously referred to, combine in one contract protection against damage by fire to the contents of a house, or from burglary, housebreaking, larceny, theft, etc., and insurance against domestic servants' employers' liability, damage from storm or tempest, third party risks, and other hazards. This can usually be arranged for an annual premium of 5s. per £100 of the full value of the contents of the house. Fire insurance of the house itself is not included, however, in this estimate, but can be included under the same policy, if desired. The advantage of a policy of this description is that it obviates the inconvenience of payments of small amounts in insurance premiums at different dates, and that in one comprehensive form it supplies protection at a moderate cost for all a householder's ordinary insurance requirements.

NOTE.—As Insurance is highly technical, particularly where business risks are involved, the advice and assistance of a qualified Insurance Broker can be utilized with considerable advantage.

ANNUAL PREMIUMS FOR WHOLE LIFE ASSURANCE

Life assurance may be effected either with or without participation in profits. If with participation then a higher premium is charged and the Policy is entitled to a Bonus, which is a share in the profits made by the Office, as and when declared. Valuations are made by Offices at periods varying from one to five years and the rate of Bonus then declared is usually in respect of each year since the previous valuation. These Bonuses are normally payable with the Sum Assured for their full amount, but, if desired, they can be applied to reduce the premium or surrendered for a cash payment. If a Policy is effected without participation the Sum Assured only is payable.

The ages applicable to the life and endowment assurance (but not the annuity) rates as hereafter given are "next birthday" unless otherwise stated.

The next table shows the annual premiums payable throughout life [with some Offices premiums cease at age 85] for a policy of £100 payable at death, with and without profits. It is not sufficient to judge a life office by premium rates only. An office charging a high premium may give higher bonuses than one charging a low premium, and therefore bonus results and prospects as well as premiums have to be considered. Most offices grant interim bonuses between valuation periods, and it is important to ascertain if this is the case before an assurance is effected, and how such interim bonuses compare with valuation bonuses, especially in cases of endowment assurance. A without profit Insurance provides the maximum amount of cover at the lowest cost and if an Office, as in some cases, is prepared to allow the option of converting the Insurance at any time to "with" profits either for whole of Life or on the Endowment plan, this gives an attractive contract. The change would, of course, entail a higher premium being paid but under this arrangement the highest cover can be obtained in the early years and the alteration made when the increased cost can be met.

ENDOWMENT ASSURANCES.

Endowment Assurances are very popular, and are extremely attractive to persons who desire to combine a provision for their dependants, in event of premature death, with the investment of savings for the realization of a fund for their own personal enjoyment in later life. For the investment of small annual sums there is no medium promising more satisfactory results than an Endowment assurance participating in profits in a good bonus-paying life office. The selection of such an office is all-important, as so much depends upon office earning capacity—see first page of Life Assurance.

Under endowment assurances the sum assured is paid after a given number of years, or on the attainment of a fixed age. Should the life assured, however, die during the endowment period, the sum assured is paid at death together with any Bonuses attaching under a "with profit" Policy.

The following table shows the annual premiums, for various ages at entry, charged by the offices named, to secure £100 at the end of 25, 30 and 35 years, or at death, if previous, with profits.

Co-operative Societies—Great Britain

Industrial and Provident Societies Acts, 1893-1954

During the 10 years ended 1958 Co-operative Retail Trading Societies (almost all General Supply Stores) expanded their membership by 22 per cent. and assets by 16 per cent. as shown by the following particulars covering the 1,015 societies on the register at the end of 1958 and 1,113 societies in 1948:

Year	Number of Members	Share Capital	Sales	Surplus on Year's Working	Interest on Shares	Dividends on Sales	Total Assets
		£000's	£000's	£000's	£000's	£000's	£000's
1958	12,420,000	251,751	976,318	63,814	7,242	49,935	460,007
1948	10,020,000	243,375	489,887	45,921	6,583	35,461	396,368

In addition, 166 Co-operative Wholesale and Productive Trading Societies (with a total membership of 55,000) were on the register at the end of 1958. The total figures for these societies are dominated by those of the two main Wholesale Trading Societies (with their "joint" undertaking) whose combined sales for 1958 amounted to £556,000,000, their assets at the end of the year totalling £191,000,000.

Friendly Societies—Great Britain

Acts 1896-1958

VOLUNTARY (i.e. Not Including State) BUSINESS.

In spite of the expansion of Compulsory "Health" insurance since the introduction of the State scheme in 1912 and its extension in 1948, the Voluntary business of Friendly Societies registered under the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, still continues on a large scale, as shown by the following comparative totals—those in ordinary type relate to registered Friendly Societies proper (embracing both "Centralized" societies and "Orders with Branches"); those in italics "Collecting" societies which, although registered under the Friendly Societies Acts, are subject also to the special provisions of the Industrial Assurance Acts:—

End of Year	No. of Societies on Register	Member-ship	Assurances or Policies	Total Funds
		Thousands		£,000's
1957.....	11,756	97	6,277	233,294	270,910
1938.....	19,600	140	8,491	151,613	84,837
1913.....	25,475	71	6,783	51,483	11,163

Although recent years have seen the growth of societies registered for such specific purposes as the provision of institutional treatment or assuring annuities and pensions, most friendly societies continue to provide the customary benefits in sickness and at death. During 1957 Friendly Societies proper paid out £5,304,000 in sickness benefit and £1,985,000 in death benefit while payments on death claims by collecting societies amounted to £8,804,000.

Many societies still operate mainly on the old system of accumulating funds on a mutual basis. Others, usually termed deposit societies, allocate all or the greater part of their funds annually to the individual credit of the members to be withdrawn by them as the rules provide. Apart from the National Deposit Society's method of a uniform contribution throughout membership there are several systems operated on individual account lines, one of which (known as the "Holloway" principle) is worked by a contribution increasing with each year of attained age after the member reaches age 30 up to age 65.

The membership and funds figures—as at the end of 1957—set out below indicate the strength of several leading old established societies, including the three largest Orders which operate through registered districts and branches subject to a central body:—

FRIENDLY Socs.—Name with (in brackets) Year Established	Membership	Funds (including Reserves)
National Deposit Friendly Society (1863).....	652,000	£ 23,420,000
Hearts of Oak Benefit Society (1842).....	549,000	18,080,000
Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Manchester Unity (1810).....	455,000	27,509,000

The present National Insurance scheme with its provision of "cradle to the grave" benefits has had serious repercussions on the Voluntary Friendly Societies. From the end of 1937 to the end of 1947 total membership rose from 8,341,000 to 8,608,000, an increase of 3 per cent., but during the next ten years it fell by 27 per cent. to 6,277,000. There are, however, signs that the decline in membership is now being arrested.

When the modest scheme of 1912 was introduced some people doubted the Voluntary Friendly Societies' ability to survive for long, and yet they continued to grow in the face of keen competition, although their remarkable expansion naturally brought many societies up to a point where they found it increasingly difficult to maintain a sufficient inflow of new, young entrants to replace membership losses due to death and other causes. In recent years, too, many of the older (non-deposit type) societies have had to introduce more attractive tables to cater for the growing preference amongst members for a curtailed (instead of whole-life) sickness insurance to enable a margin of contributions to accumulate to their credit as an increasing cash endowment payable in full at age 65, or in the event of prior death, with the option of drawing on the credit from time to time if the member is in need, subject to certain conditions, including the retention of a specified minimum sum in the member's account.

In considering how far the general body of members comprising the Friendly Societies movement can afford to continue their voluntary insurances along with their higher State scheme contributions in future, it must not be overlooked that present-day wage levels are substantially higher for all classes of workers than before the war and the Government has declared that continued Voluntary insurance to supplement State benefits, wherever one's means permit, should be encouraged.

Moreover, in addition to the widespread branch units of the better known "Orders," there are numerous small independent societies whose membership is maintained more easily than in the large societies, by age-long custom of family and social ties within their own locality, and there still exist a few such societies whose formation dates back far beyond any "Friendly Society" legislation. In fact, long before the term "Friendly Society" came into use, the seeds of Voluntary mutual insurance had been sown in the ancient religious and trade "Guilds." As is evident from the many extant parchment returns detailing their rules and possessions under a decree of Richard II, Guilds had become widespread in Britain by the 14th century. By then, the purely charitable character of the original Guilds had largely changed with the emergence of numerous small institutions adopting primitive mutual insurance methods of a regular flat rate contribution in order to obtain relief when sick or in old age and a payment to the widow in the event of death. Some of these old Guilds with their distinctive titles still survive, and the present Voluntary Register of Friendly Societies includes several societies which have been in existence for upwards of 200 years, the four earliest all operating in Scotland, the oldest being the "Incorporation of Carters in Leith" established as long ago as 1555. The three oldest in England were all formed in London—the "Norman Society" (estd. 1703), the "Society of Lintot" (estd. 1708) and the "Society for the Mutual Help of Swiss in London" (estd. 1703), the first two of these having been formed by Huguenot refugees from the Protestant persecution under Louis XIV.

The first Act for the encouragement and protection of "Friendly Societies" in this country was not passed until 1793, but various amending Acts were put on the Statute Book during the next century as the result of the recommendations of successive Select Committees (including a Royal Commission in 1871). For example, it was not until the 1829 Act that all registered Friendly Societies were required to keep proper records of individual sickness and mortality amongst their members, which data enabled the construction of standard actuarial tables showing the expected (average) duration of sickness at successive ages, and also (with data from the Census) the corresponding mortality rates.

The present consolidating Act of 1896 allows various specific classes other than "Friendly Societies" to be registered thereunder, but exemption from income tax (irrespective of the extent of interest income) is enjoyed only by registered "Friendly Societies."

The Friendly Societies Act, 1955, extended the purposes for which societies may be registered under the Acts, and authorized societies to invest their surplus funds in other registered societies.

The Industrial Assurance and Friendly Societies Act, 1948 (Amendment) Act, 1958 increased from £20 to £30 the amount of insurance allowable on the life of a parent or grandparent.

Building Societies—Great Britain

Acts 1874-1959.

Building Societies are, with few exceptions, associations incorporated with limited liability under the Building Societies Acts. All Building Societies are required to register their rules and file their accounts with the Registrar of Friendly Societies and Building Societies. The following particulars showing the growth of Building Societies (as also that of Friendly and Co-operative Societies tabulated on pp. 1077 and 1078) are based on the Registrar's Annual Reports. The Editor is also indebted to the publishers of the "Building Societies Year Book" for details of individual societies from which the second table hereunder has been compiled.

The building societies movement has played a considerable part in the expansion of home ownership since the war. Between 1946 and 1957 building societies advanced over £3,548,000,000 on mortgage, the bulk of it to assist owner-occupiers to buy their homes.

Throughout their long history it has been the general practice of societies to lend most of their funds on the security of this type of property. In his Annual Report for 1958, however, the Chief Registrar points out that, by law, societies can advance money on the security of any freehold or leasehold estate. He warns the investing public not to be attracted by extravagant offers of higher rates of interest than normal, such offers being made by societies which have advanced a substantial amount of their funds on the security of commercial property into which an element of speculation enters.

During 1958, advances on mortgage totalled £374,000,000 while shareholders and depositors added £487,000,000 to their accounts. Withdrawals of capital amounting to £377,000,000 were again the highest the societies have ever experienced but nevertheless the total assets increased to £2,617,000,000. Of this total, mortgage balances represented 83 per cent., the remainder consisting chiefly of investments in Government securities and cash. Reserves and profit balances represented 4.5 per cent. of the total assets.

For the year 1958 interest received by societies from borrowers amounted to £129,000,000. Interest payments to shareholders and depositors totalled over £81,000,000. Management costs, at £15,000,000 for 1958, averaged only about 1½d. per £1 of the mean mortgage assets. Of this total, advertising accounted for 9 per cent. and commission and agency fees 11 per cent.

The usual mortgage interest rate charged by societies is 5½ per cent., and the interest rates offered to investors are mainly 3½ per cent. on shares and 3 per cent. on deposits (income tax being paid by the societies).

Section 1 of the House Purchase and Housing Act, 1959, empowers the Chief Registrar to designate building societies for the purposes of the section. To be eligible for designation, a society must be permanent and have total assets amounting to not less than £500,000; it must also satisfy the conditions as to liquid funds, reserves and other matters prescribed by Treasury regulations. When a building society is so designated its deposits (but not its shares) rank as investments in which a trustee is permitted to invest trust funds (not exceeding £5,000 for any one trust); it also becomes eligible to participate in the Government scheme for Exchequer advances to building societies to be lent on the security of houses built before 1919.

Societies that had been designated up to the time of going to press are marked "D" in the list which follows. A few societies with total assets amounting to less than £500,000 are shown as having been designated. In these cases the 1958 accounts (not available in collated form at the time of going to press) show total assets exceeding that figure.

TAXES, STAMP DUTIES AND LICENCES

INCOME TAX 1959-60

Income Tax is a tax on income, not capital. Income must be represented by money, or money's worth. The charge to tax is in general on the full amount of income arising, subject to the deductions authorised by the Income Tax Acts but the profits or gains of a trade or profession are those arrived at on ordinary accountancy principles. The income of a married woman living with her husband is aggregated with his income.

The year of assessment is the fiscal year which runs from 6th April in one year to 5th April in the next. The amount on which tax is assessed depends upon the income of the relevant "basis year." For Schedule D, the "basis year" is normally the year preceding the year of assessment, otherwise the "basis year" is the same as the year of assessment; i.e. tax is charged on the income of the actual year of assessment. An individual earning income in a business or profession can use his own accounting year which ends in the year preceding the year of assessment as the "basis year."

Income Tax is imposed at the rates specified by the annual Finance Acts. There are graduated rates of tax, the principal rate being called the "Standard Rate." The standard rate for 1959/60 is 7/9d. in the £. There is an additional income tax on higher incomes called "Sur-tax." Tax is imposed on United Kingdom residents in respect of all sources of income, wherever arising, and on non-residents in respect of income from United Kingdom sources. The Income Tax Act 1918, and the income tax provisions of the Annual Finance Acts (up to and including the Finance Act, 1951) were consolidated by the Income Tax Act, 1952.

The Tables which follow show the tax payable on the amount of income specified, after deduction of the personal allowance and, in the case of earned income, the earned income relief. The taxpayer, however, may be entitled to further reliefs which would reduce the tax payable below the amounts shown in the Tables.

STATUTORY INCOME is computed as follows:—

Under Schedule A.—Assessed on an actual year basis, the annual value of Houses, Lands, Tenements, etc., including houses occupied by the owner. Net assessment is computed by deducting scale allowance for repairs, insurance, etc., from rack rental, i.e. rent payable when landlord undertakes all repairs and maintenance and tenant pays rates.

Scale allowance for repairs by reference to gross assessment.

Lands	one-eighth
Houses: Where assessment does not exceed £40.....	one-quarter
Exceeds £40, but not £50..	£10
Exceeds £50, but not £100	one-fifth
Exceeds £100.....	£20 plus one-sixth of excess over £100

A reduction may be claimed in the assessment of any year where average cost of previous five years' maintenance, etc., exceeds scale allowance for that year. In relation to recently acquired property it is permitted to claim a reduction in the net assessment equal to the excess of the actual year's maintenance over scale allowance, provided this basis is used for first five years of ownership. Except in the case of agricultural property, relief cannot exceed the net annual value. The cost of insuring the property and agents' charges are allowable maintenance expenditure.

Under Schedule B.—Fixed assessment on actual year basis to cover value of amenity lands—parks, gardens etc., not used for husbandry. Also on woodlands, although these can be assessed on actual profits under Sch. D. Case I, if taxpayer so elects. Schedule B assessments equal one-third of annual value of the land for Schedule A purposes.

Under Schedule C.—Dividends, interest, annuities from public revenue on actual year basis. Income Tax is deducted at source. For exceptions see Schedule D.

Under Schedule D.—Generally on income of preceding year. Profits of Trades and Professions.

Interest on public revenue escaping Schedule C and on Bank and Post Office Savings Bank Accounts, etc. Interest on P.O.S.B. and Trustee Savings Bank Accounts up to £15 per person exempt from income tax. Such amount of interest has to be included for Sur Tax purposes and has to be grossed at the standard rate. Income from Foreign or Commonwealth securities, rents and possessions. For persons domiciled and ordinarily resident in Great Britain this income is assessable whether remitted or not. Persons not domiciled or British subjects not ordinarily resident in Great Britain are assessable only on remittances to the United Kingdom or this income in any year in which they become technically resident. Income from Trades or Professions, carried on abroad is assessable only to extent that it is remitted and then only when person entitled thereto is technically resident in United Kingdom.

Profits from letting of Furnished Houses, etc., and Excess Rents (arising when rent of unfurnished house less attributable repairs allowance exceeds net schedule A assessment).

Under Schedule E.—Income from all Offices, Employments and Pensions, including Salaries, Wages, Emoluments, Directors Fees, etc. Taxed under system commonly known as PAYE on actual year basis.

Tax is charged on the emoluments of an office or employment if the holder is resident, and ordinarily resident within the United Kingdom, provided the duties are not performed wholly abroad. A person not resident (or if resident, then not ordinarily resident) in the United Kingdom is charged only on emoluments for duties performed in the United Kingdom.

Income from employments exercised abroad assessable only to the extent that it is received in the United Kingdom, and then only when employee is resident in United Kingdom.

Unemployment, sickness and maternity benefit payable under the National Insurance Acts are not assessable to income tax.

Expense allowances and payments in kind (less expenses incurred in performance of duties) to Directors and employees enjoying emoluments of £2,000 p.a. or more are assessable. Fees and subscriptions to certain professional bodies and learned societies may be allowed as expenses.

TAXABLE INCOME is Statutory Income less Allowances and Deductions as under:

Personal Allowance.—To single person... £140
To married man living with or normally maintaining his wife... £240

When either husband or wife is absent from United Kingdom throughout a complete fiscal year they are treated as separate entities for tax purposes, each entitled to Single Personal Allowance. This course is not followed if it is to the advantage of the spouses to be jointly assessed on the basis of the husband's residential position. A married woman permanently separated from her husband is treated as a feme sole.

Allowances for Children.—For each child under 16 (or over that age at the beginning of the fiscal year receiving full time education at a recognized educational establishment) and who does not have income in that year exceeding £200 in its own right, the allowances are:—

- (a) Child over 16 at commencement of fiscal year... £150
(b) Child over 11 at commencement of fiscal year... £125
(c) Other children (each)... £100

Scholarship or bursary does not count for this purpose.

"Child" includes step-child and adopted child.

When a husband and wife are divorced or permanently separated, relief in respect of any children of the marriage can be given to either the father or the mother or divided between them in any way they may mutually agree. Alternatively, the relief will be divided in the ratio in which they each contribute to the children's maintenance and education. In this connection, any payments which the father makes under an Order of Court or Separation Agreement for the benefit of the children or in any way which would entitle him to deduct the payments as a charge on his own income would not count for the purpose of apportioning the Child Relief.

The "Family Allowance" for children ranks as the father's income subject to Earned Income Allowance. Child Allowance may also be claimed when child over 15 years is articulated or apprenticed, provided emoluments (exclusive of premiums returned) do not exceed £200 in the year.

Allowance for Dependent Relatives.—A maximum deduction for each dependent relative of.....

This allowance is reduced by £1 for every £1 by which the relative's own income (excluding voluntary allowance) exceeds £135. Claimant must maintain relative who must be incapacitated by old age or infirmity from maintaining himself or herself, except in the case of his or his wife's widowed mother (which includes any woman living apart from her husband, or whose marriage has been dissolved or annulled). If more than one person gives support to the dependent relative then allowance is divided pro rata. If annual maintenance afforded is less than £60 allowance limited to amount expended.

A taxpayer, who by reason of his or her own age or infirmity, has to retain the services of a daughter resident with him or her is entitled to an allowance of..... £40
 Allowance for Housekeeper or person looking after children..... £60

The allowance of £60 is granted to:—

(a) any male taxpayer entitled to single personal allowances, any female taxpayer who was either working full time in some employment or business or was totally incapacitated throughout the year, and a married man entitled to higher personal allowance whose wife is totally incapacitated throughout the whole of the year, who has a female person resident with and maintained or employed by him or her for the purpose of having care of any child or children for whom the taxpayer is entitled to claim child relief.

(b) a widow or widower who has a female relative (or, if no relative is available, a female person) resident with her or him in the capacity of Housekeeper.

Earned Income.—Allowance of the following fractions of earned income (after deducting allowances for necessary expenses, superannuation, etc.):—

Up to £4,005—Two-ninths.

The next £5,945—One-ninth.

Married woman earning income in her own right has deduction of two-ninths of such earnings and, in addition, an allowance equal to seven-ninths of her earnings subject to a maximum of £140 plus Reduced Rate Reliefs as shown below.

Age Relief.—Allowance of two-ninths of unearned income where taxpayer (or his wife) attains 65 years subject to total income not exceeding £800. Where the total income exceeds £800, marginal relief is given so that the full tax on the investment income scale is not payable until the marginal relief runs out.

Age exemption.—Persons over 65 years of age are exempt from tax if their total incomes do not exceed:—

Single person.....£275

Married couple.....£440

Marginal relief is given as in Age Relief (above).

Pension Contributions and National Insurance Act.—Part of a taxpayers' N.I. contribution and contributions by both employed and self-employed persons to "approved" superannuation fund or for the provision of a life annuity in old age are allowed as deductions from income. Taxpayer paying "employer's" contribution in respect of personal or domestic servants may deduct whole of such contribution from his income.

Life Assurance Premiums.—Relief is given on premiums paid for Life Assurance or for Contracts for Deferred Annuities on life of taxpayer or his wife. In all cases, except those of policies or contracts taken up in connection with a Superannuation Scheme, a capital sum must be payable at death. Where date of policy or contract is after 22nd June, 1916, and total premiums available for relief to taxpayer and his wife do not exceed £25 an amount of £10 or total premiums, whichever is less, may be deducted from assessable income. Where total premiums exceed £25 relief given at two-fifths of standard rate. For policies or contracts dated before 22nd June, 1916, following rates of relief apply:—

Where total income does not exceed £1,000. Half standard rate (maximum 3s. 6d.).

Income between £1,000 and £2,000. Three-quarters standard rate (maximum 5s. 3d.).

Income exceeding £2,000. Full standard rate (maximum 7s.).

Where annual premium exceeds 7 per cent. of capital sum assured relief is limited to sum equal to 7 per cent. Relief also given on sums paid under Act of Parliament or under terms of employment for securing deferred annuity to widow or provision for children after death of the taxpayer. Relief is given as for life policy or deferred annuity premiums above, except that there is no restriction on amount of standard rate. Total relief under either of these headings limited to one-sixth of total income.

Payments for Retirement Annuities.—made under a contract approved by the Inland Revenue, and subject to certain statutory limits, may be deducted from total income for income-tax and sur-tax purposes.

Purchased Life Annuities.—The capital element of such annuities, whenever purchased, is not treated as income, and is not taxable. The annuities concerned are those, for a term referable to a life, which are purchased for money or money's worth from a person whose business is to grant annuities. The capital element, which is constant, is calculated actuarially, and is agreed between the grantor of the annuity and the Revenue. These provisions do not apply—

- To annuities which are already treated as having a capital element.
- To annuities bought with sums which have ranked for relief from Income Tax (e.g., retirement annuity premiums).
- To annuities under wills or settlements.
- To annuities under sponsored superannuation schemes or purchased in recognition of services in any office or employment.

On first £60	1s. 9d.
On next £150	4s. 3d.
On next £150	6s. 3d.
On balance	7s. 9d.

Small Income Relief.—All incomes up to £300 are treated as Earned Income. Marginal relief is given where total income exceeds £300 but does not exceed £405.

Building Society Interest.—Majority of societies operate under special arrangement with Inland Revenue Authorities and interest is paid to depositors and shareholders "free of income tax." While there is thus no liability to income tax on such interest it must be included in taxpayer's total income for assessment to sur-tax. The interest received must be grossed at the standard rate when brought in for sur-tax purposes.

Sur-tax.—No sur-tax is chargeable on the first £2,000 of total income. Married men add to that exempt portion the difference between Single and Married Personal Allowance (£100). Child, Housekeeper and Dependent Relative Allowance and similar reliefs can also be added.

Incomes over the exempt portion are charged on a sliding scale as follows:—

Seven-year Covenants.—Where covenant to pay annual sums of money is made for other than valuable and sufficient consideration, the period of the covenant must be for a term which can exceed six years if the Covenantor wishes to divest himself of such income for income tax purposes. Any such covenant entered into after 10th April, 1946, must be in favour of an individual, not employed in any way by Covenantor (and not, for example, a charitable body) in order to divest the Covenantor of the income for Sur-tax purposes.

Settlements in favour of taxpayer's own infant children.—The Income of any such Settlement made since 22nd April, 1936, is treated as that of the Settlor for all income tax purposes if:—

- the Settlement can be revoked within a period of six years (unless the child becomes bankrupt).
- the income can be paid to or for the benefit of the child during the lifetime of the settlor. This ceases to apply at the end of the fiscal year in which the child attains 21 years or marries.

Agreements for the Avoidance of Double Taxation have been made between the United Kingdom and Aden Colony, Antigua, Austria, Australia, Barbados, Basutoland, Bechuanaland, Belgium, British Guiana, British Honduras, British Solomon Islands Protectorate, Brunei, Burma, Canada, Ceylon, Cyprus, Denmark, Dominica, Falkland Islands, Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, Fiji, Finland, France, Gambia, Germany (Rep.), Gilbert and Ellice Islands, Gold Coast (Ghana), Greece, Grenada, Guernsey, Ireland (Rep.), Isle of Man, Israel, Jamaica, Jersey, Kenya, Malaya, Mauritius, Montserrat, Netherlands, New Zealand, Nigeria, North Borneo, Norway, Pakistan, St. Christopher and Nevis, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Sarawak, Seychelles, Sierra Leone, Singapore, Swaziland, Sweden, Switzerland, Tanganyika, Trinidad, Uganda, Union of South Africa, United States of America, Virgin Islands, and Zanzibar.

Double Taxation Relief.—Relief may be obtained by residents of the United Kingdom in respect of any income tax payable in any other Country, Colony or Dominion, not covered by the specific Agreements referred to above, when that income is also liable to British income tax. A credit against the British tax liability on the doubly taxed income is given at a rate equal to the rate paid outside the United Kingdom subject to a limit of the taxpayer's average or effective rate of British tax.

Persons Resident Abroad.—Persons normally resident outside the United Kingdom are not liable to United Kingdom Tax on income arising outside the United Kingdom (including Dominion, Colonial and Foreign Loans issued in London) nor on the interest from:—

3% War Stock 1955–59; 3% War Stock 1952; 4% Victory Bonds; 4% Fundine Loan 1960–60; 2½% and 3% Defence Bonds (all issues except the 5th); $\frac{1}{2}$ % National War Bonds (except 1954-56 issue); 3% Savings Bonds (all issues); $5\frac{1}{2}$ % Funding Loan 1982-84.

Such persons become technically resident in the United Kingdom if they visit for a period or periods exceeding six months in any fiscal year. Also if they visit for any period in a year in which they have retained a place of abode in the United Kingdom, except such persons as are engaged in full-time employment abroad. They would then be liable to United Kingdom Tax on all remittances of income arising abroad. If they visit the United Kingdom in four consecutive years for periods averaging three months or more per annum they would be regarded as ordinarily resident there.

A person who is not resident in the United Kingdom who has income which is liable to United Kingdom tax cannot claim any of the normal income tax allowances unless he is:

- a British subject;
- a present or former servant of the Crown; or widow of a former Crown servant;
- employed by any missionary society controlled from the United Kingdom or a servant of a native State under British protection.
- a resident of the Isle of Man or the Channel Islands; or
- was previously resident in the United Kingdom but resides abroad for the sake of his health or the health of a member of his family.

Post War Credits.—Those credits arising out of the temporary reduction of certain income tax allowances during the years 1941-42, 1942-43, 1943-44, 1944-45 and 1945-46 are repayable to women over 48 and men over 63 years of age. Where a man or woman has died repayment is made to beneficiaries or personal representatives. Repayment is made on death irrespective of age at death. Repayment is also made in certain cases of hardship. Interest will be added to the sum repayable. Forms for claiming repayment may be obtained at any Post Office.

INCOME TAX ADMINISTRATION

Income Tax under Schedules A, B, D and E, is assessed by H.M. Inspector of Taxes. Where taxpayer is assessable under Schedules A and (or) B, these assessments are made by H.M. Inspector for the district in which the land or property is situated. Assessments under Schedule D (Profits of Trades and Professions) and under Schedule E are made by H.M. Inspector of Taxes for the district in which Trade, Profession or Employment is carried on, or from which Pension is paid. Other Schedule D income is assessable by H.M. Inspector for the district to which the taxpayer makes his individual return. This is called his General Claims District

(G.C.D.) and is determined by the main source of his earned income. Where taxpayer has no earned income his chief place of residence determines his G.C.D. H.M. Inspector for this district decides, with the agreement of the taxpayer, against which assessment (or assessments) Personal Allowances shall be given. Notices of Assessment are sent to taxpayer who should make a formal appeal against any assessment which he disputes direct to H.M. Inspector by whom the Notice was issued within the time limit for such appeals, as stated on the notice. The grounds of appeal should be stated. If the assessment cannot be agreed, with H.M. Inspector, the appeal will be heard by the General Commissioners. (The name and address of their clerk will be supplied by H.M. Inspector on request.) Alternatively, certain appeals are, or may be made to the Special Commissioners. An appeal may be made by way of Case Stated from the appeal Commissioners decision to the High Court on points of law.

The tax on such assessments is demanded by and should be paid to the Collector of Taxes, but he is unable to discuss the assessment.

Sur-tax is assessable by the Special Commissioners of Income Tax to whom returns of total income are made, except where a full return of income is made to H.M. Inspector of Taxes. Appeals are made to the Special Commissioners and the procedure is similar to that in Income Tax appeals.

Penalties may be incurred for failure to make proper returns of income.

PAYE.—Income Tax payable under Schedule E is deducted by employer, who accounts for it to the Collector of Taxes. The amount of tax deduction from each payment of salary, wage, pension, etc., is determined by reference to Tax Tables issued by H.M. Inspector of Taxes to employer, in conjunction with the taxpayer's Code Number. This Code Number is an interpretation of the taxpayer's Allowances and Reliefs. Notices of Coding are issued by H.M. Inspector of Taxes and they may take into account income assessable under other Schedules. Notice of Coding should be checked on receipt and H.M. Inspector of Taxes informed of any necessary amendment in order that no considerable over or under-deduction of income tax may take place. The tax deductions are on a cumulative basis and can be carried on by successive employers should changes in employment take place during fiscal year. When leaving one employment a statement (Form P45) showing code number, remuneration, and tax deductions to date should be obtained from old employer and handed, in due course, to new employer. At the end of fiscal year employer should give employee a statement (Form P60) showing total remuneration and tax deductions for the year.

Where a transfer is made to a body of persons established for charitable purposes only, or to the trustees of a trust so established, the maximum rate of duty is £1 per cent.

CONVEYANCE OR TRANSFER of any other kind.....fixed duty 0 10 0

Included under this head are Transfers for nominal consideration within any of the following categories:—

(a) Transfers vesting the property in trustees on the appointment of a new trustee of a pre-existing trust, or on the retirement of a trustee.

(b) Transfers, where no beneficial interest in the property passes, (i) to a mere nominee of the transferor, (ii) from a mere nominee of the transferee, (iii) from one nominee to another nominee of the same beneficial owner.

(c) Transfers by way of security for a loan or re-transfer to the original transferor on repayment of a loan.

(d) Transfer to a residuary legatee of stock, etc., forming part of the residue divisible under a will.

(e) Transfers to a beneficiary under a will of a specific legacy of stock, etc. (Note.—Transfers by executors in discharge, or partial discharge, of a pecuniary legacy (unless made under an express power of appropriation) are chargeable with ad valorem duty on the amount of the legacy so discharged.)

(f) Transfers of stock, etc., forming part of an intestate's estate to the person entitled to it.

(g) Transfers to a beneficiary under settlement on a distribution of the trust funds of stock, etc., forming the share or part of the share of those funds to which the beneficiary is entitled in accordance with the terms of the settlement.

(h) Transfers on the occasion of a marriage to trustees of stocks, etc., to be held on the terms of a settlement made in consideration of marriage.

(i) Transfers by the liquidator of a company of stocks, etc., forming part of the assets of the company to the persons who were shareholders, in satisfaction of their rights on a wind-up.

The evidence necessary to establish that a transfer is liable to the fixed duty of 10s. should take the form of a certificate setting forth the facts of the transaction. In cases falling within (b) or (c) such a certificate should be signed by (1) both transferor and transferee or (2) a member of a Stock Exchange or a solicitor acting for one or other of the parties or (3) an accredited representative of a bank; in the last case when the bank or its official nominee is a party to the transfer, the certificate, instead of setting out the facts, may be to the effect that "the transfer is excepted from Section 74 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910." A certificate in other cases should be signed by a solicitor or other person (e.g., a bank acting as trustee or executor) having a full knowledge of the facts.

Registering Officers will in any case in which a Marking Officer's certificate has not been given require such evidence in order to satisfy themselves that a transfer stamped with the 10s. fixed duty is duly stamped.

Lower rates of duty are payable in certain circumstances on property passing on two deaths occurring within 5 years of one another. (Finance Act, 1958.)

A reduction of 45 per cent. of the above rates is applied to the "agricultural value" of agricultural property; and (as respects deaths on and after 30th July, 1954) to certain business assets, viz.: "industrial hereditaments" and "machinery or plant" (Finance Act, 1954, s. 28).

Gifts made by deceased during his life for public or charitable purposes are liable for duty, unless made more than twelve months before death; other gifts are liable for duty, unless made more than five years before death; gifts made in consideration of marriage, or as part of deceased's reasonable normal expenditure, excepted. Gifts not exceeding £100 in value or amount (or in certain circumstances £500) also excepted.

Payment of Estate Duty may, by agreement with the Commissioners, be made, wholly or in part, in the form of real or leasehold property comprised in the estate.

Interest at 2 per cent. per annum is also payable on the Estate Duty on personalty from the date of the death up to that of delivery of the affidavit or account.

The Estate Duty on real property may be paid, if desired, by eight yearly or sixteen half-yearly instalments, and 2 per cent. interest is charged on all unpaid instalments from twelve months after death.

FEES are taken in all Public Departments by means of Stamps: such payments are accounted for to the Exchequer under the heading of Miscellaneous Revenue.

LOCAL TAXATION LICENCES

In England and Wales, Dog, Game and Gun Licences are administered by the respective County Councils and County Borough Councils and the proceeds retained by them; and in Scotland by the Commissioners of Customs and Excise. Licences are issued for the Councils by the Post Office.

DOGS of any kind (annually), Great Britain £ s. d.
0 7 6
Dogs under 6 months of age, and those kept solely for the purpose of tending sheep or cattle on a farm, or by shepherds, or by blind persons for their guidance, exempt from Duty.

GAME AND GUN LICENCES.—A licence is required by every person who hunts, shoots, or takes game, except persons (in Great Britain) taking woodcock and snipe with nets or springs; proprietors, or tenants, on enclosed land, killing rabbits; persons hunting deer, or hares, with hounds; owners or occupiers, or their servants, killing deer on their own enclosed land; beaters and others, not holding guns, attending holders of game licences. Occupiers of enclosed land, or owners, having the right to kill game, may themselves kill hares, or authorize others to do so, without a licence, but such authority must be limited to one person at a time in any one parish, and must be registered with the clerk of the Justices of the Petty Sessional Division in which the land is situate. Even when the quarry is not what is legally known as "game," a "gun" licence is necessary. A game licence, however, covers a gun licence. Sailors, soldiers, airmen, territorial soldiers, or constables, on duty or at practice, need not take out a gun licence, nor need occupiers of land scaring birds or killing vermin on such land, or persons so acting under the orders of occupiers holding a licence. Unless, however, the occupier is himself licensed, he cannot authorize any unlicensed person to carry a gun. "Scaring" birds is not to be regarded as including killing of any birds, and "vermin" does not include rabbits. The rates of duty are as follows:—

A Firearm Certificate (5/- for the first, 2/6 subsequently—renewable every 3 years) is also necessary (with certain exceptions) for any person in possession of a firearm, other than a smooth bore gun with a barrel not less than 20 inches in length, or an air weapon.

A person under 17 may not purchase or hire and (with certain exceptions) a person under 14 may not have in his possession a firearm.

Firearm regulations are strictly enforced.

Licensing of Public Vehicles.

Public vehicles and also the persons concerned with driving and conducting them must be licensed. Vehicles are licensed by the Traffic Commissioners; licensing of personnel is effected by the authority in the area in which they live—not the area where the vehicle is to operate. Addresses of the Licensing Authorities can be obtained from Local Police Stations. See also Driving Licence Rates, p. 1097.

DRIVING LICENCES

By an Order under s.48 of the Road Traffic Act 1956, the issue of driving licences valid for a period of three years commenced on Sept. 1, 1957. Drivers (other than learners) whose surnames begin with the letters A-F were required to take out a three-year licence when they applied for renewal of their existing licences at any time after Aug. 31, 1957; drivers whose surnames begin with the letters G-N were required to take out a three-year licence when they applied for renewal at any time after Aug. 31, 1958; and those whose surnames begin with the letters O-Z when they apply for renewal at any time after Aug. 31, 1959. Drivers taking out a full licence for the first time after passing the driving test must take out a three-year licence.

SCIENCE, DISCOVERY AND INVENTION IN 1959

INTERNATIONAL EXPLORATION OF THE DEPTHS OF SPACE

The exploration of space which was begun in the International Geophysical Year was continued by British, Australian, South African, American, and Russian scientists, acting in friendly co-operation in sending up rockets and satellites. The Prime Minister announced a British programme for the construction of instruments to be carried in earth satellites. With the assistance of the Royal Society and the Advisory Council on Scientific Policy, there may be scope for joint action of the United States and the Commonwealth. No one country will be expected to cover all that can be done. Prof. H. G. W. Massey, head of the Royal Society's space research committee, announced the triple programme drawn up by the Royal Society for the Government. 1. The study of charged particles on the fringes of the atmosphere, to test the theory of Professor Chapman that the earth is on the outer extremities of the sun's atmosphere, where it is bathed by a constant stream of ionised atoms of hydrogen from the sun. By counting the charged particles and estimating their speeds it should be possible to learn more about the nature of the material in space. 2. The second group of experiments will attempt the measurement of the X-rays and ultra-violet radiation transmitted by the sun and stars. These radiations are absorbed by the atmosphere and cannot be detected by observatories on the ground. It may be possible to discover much about the effects of the sun's ray on the atmosphere. 3. The third group will consist of measurements of the heat radiated from the earth, how it varies between day and night and over different regions. Some idea of the heat generation and heat loss should lead to a better understanding of rainfall and be of importance to weather forecasting. The total cost of the satellites involved in this programme, has been estimated at between £10 and £15 million.

A Thor-Able rocket carrying a 142 lb. "Paddlewheel" satellite was launched successfully from Cape Canaveral, Florida. All three stages of the rocket ignited properly, and four hours later it was announced that the satellite was in orbit and would remain aloft for more than a year. Signals had been picked up at Jodrell Bank and at Singapore. The "Paddlewheel" may yield the first solid information on radiation conditions millions of miles from the earth. It is not intended to exceed a height of 23,000 miles, but is equipped with instruments designed to report on radiation conditions beyond the "Van Allen radiation belt" which surrounds the earth at altitudes of between 1,300 and possibly 52,000 miles. It also contains instruments to gauge the size of meteoric particles and to map the earth's magnetic field. From an altitude of 17,000 miles it transmitted a television picture of the earth, showing a broad area of the central Pacific. Only part of the earth was sunlit at the time and therefore only a crescent-shaped section came into view. A band width of 1.5 cycles per second was used, compared with 4,000,000 cycles per second used by normal commercial television. The satellite is spheroid-shaped, 26 inches in diameter, 29 inches long, and weighs 142 lb.

The United States Navy put into orbit from Cape Canaveral the first meteorological satellite, a 20-in. sphere carried in the nose of a Vanguard rocket. The "weather man" in this new "moon" consists of 2½ lb. of electronic equipment to give early notice of embryo hurricanes and tornadoes and possibly to detect new storm formations. This first moon carries an electronic cloud-detector able to spot and measure the density of cloud movement over 40 square miles of the earth's surface. Later satellites will be equipped to detect infra-red heat rays and to keep a continuous track of storm centres. It is hoped also to improve the accuracy of long-range forecasts of fine and rainy spells, of the sort of weather farmers may expect for spring planting, variations of summer heat, and prospects for winters hard or mild. Meteorologists explain that only about one-fifth of the globe's surface atmosphere can be scanned from below by land, sea, and air weather stations, manned by a staff of about eight thousand in the United States alone. Of these fewer than eight hundred are trained to research standards and able to measure the mois-tures, rheums, blasts of heat, and drifting pressure systems that are the weather man's raw material. "We don't even know," said one meteorological spokesman, "why it rains."

The moon has been the object of much attention in space exploration, in the hope that it may be possible to land a man there and obtain further knowledge of our satellite. The first American moon rocket proved during its 70,000 mile journey into space that there are two separate belts of radiation surrounding the earth, one of which is 2,000 miles and the other 20,000 miles away. The peak intensity of radiation within each belt is nearly 7,000 times greater than that in outer space—beyond both belts, 40,000 miles from earth. A 60-ton four-stage rocket fired from Cape Canaveral, and sent coursing towards the moon at 5,675 m.p.h., contained instruments for measuring the intensity of these inner and outer radiation belts. In May the first radio link using the moon as a reflector of radio waves for long distance communication was established between Jodrell Bank and the Cambridge Research Centre in Massachusetts, and it was found that intelligible voice transmissions could be made in this way. Radar signals transmitted in August from Malvern, at a wavelength of 10 c.m. were successfully received in Texas after reflection from the moon. The radar pulses, each of 5 microseconds duration and 2 megawatts power were sent from the 45 ft. diameter radio telescope at a repetition rate of 250 pulses a second. The equipment had been used previously for tracking the Soviet satellites and for moon echo experiments. The radar signals scattered back from the moon after a round trip of about 500,000 miles were received by the radio telescope in Malvern and by a slightly smaller radio telescope at the University of Texas.

A man in the moon? Many of the more speculating scientists are of opinion that man will land on the moon in the next few years. Experiments with animals have already been made. Two female monkeys Able and Baker, were recovered alive from the nosecone of a Jupiter missile which was taken out of the Atlantic after a space flight of 1,500 miles. The monkeys were the first living creatures known to have ridden into space and returned alive. The missile in which they travelled climbed 300 miles and flew at speeds of up to 10,000 m.p.h. Scientists reported that the monkeys suffered little ill effect from violent acceleration and a period of weightlessness for some nine minutes in their fifteen-minute journey. (See illustration, p. 555.) Able was trained before the flight to push a mouse key when a red light flashed once each second. This was tried out during the flight to show how she responded to the feeling of weightlessness, but the signals were not received. Other instruments relayed information back to earth about the monkeys' heart-beat and breathing rate. Able, lying on her back with her knees drawn up to provide maximum resistance from gravitation, wore a space suit and was equipped with earphones. She lay on a glass fibre couch in an air-conditioned chamber with a heating and cooling system. Her capsule received two complete changes of air every minute and a system was installed to dispose of carbon dioxide and moisture. Baker wore a helmet of moulded plastic with a soft chamois lining. She lay on a bed of rubber. She was in a small capsule lined with glass fibre and rubber for insulation. The cone was designed to protect a hydrogen war-head from the temperature of 5,000 degrees Fahrenheit generated by atmospheric friction on the return to earth. Sixteen channels of information were supposed to be sent back to earth during the flight. They included heart-beat, muscular reaction, heart sounds, the pulse of big blood vessels, body temperature, respiration, temperature pressure and relative humidity in the capsule.

Able was in good physical shape when she landed, but a minor local infection was discovered during the removal of an electrode placed under her skin to record physical data during her flight, and she died under anaesthetic.

A massive Russian rocket, Lunik II, carrying 860 lb. of scientific instruments, was launched at the moon late on Saturday evening, September 12. Continuous signals from the rocket stopped at zero hours two minutes 24 seconds (about 10 p.m. British time Sunday). This was one minute 23 seconds later than the Russians predicted. The rocket was believed to have hit the moon, then reckoned to be about 233,600 miles away. The point of contact was thought to be in the region of the Sea of Serenity, the Sea of Vapours, and the Sea of Tranquillity, a triangular area of the moon to the upper right of the centre of the sphere. These great "seas" are three of the salient features of the face of the moon, the largest being the Sea of Serenity. It is flanked by the Caucasus mountains, named after those in Russia.

Lunik II contained instruments to measure the magnetic fields of the earth and of the moon (if it has one), the radiation belts surrounding the earth, cosmic radiation, meteor particles and interplanetary gas.

Mr. Patrick Moore, the astronomer, told the British Association that there was a chance of information about the hidden side of the moon being available in the next decade or two. Manned space flight lay farther ahead, but few authorities now doubted that it would be achieved. It was quite safe to reject all ideas of life on the moon. On the observations made by the Russian astronomer Kozyrev, indicating an eruption inside the crater Alphonsus, he said, "If we accept the reality of the outbreak we must conclude that the existence of pockets of heat under the lunar surface is probable." Either the outbreak had genuinely occurred or Kozyrev had made mistakes. In view of his considerable experience and excellent reputation, the latter did not seem likely.

ALPINE TUNNELS.—Two great enterprises for tunnelling under the Alps were begun. In May work started on the French side for a tunnel carrying a motor road under Mont Blanc. When completed, in 1962-63, it will be the largest road tunnel in the world, over seven miles, and will run from a point $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Chamoni, 4,179 ft. above sea level on the French side, and emerge at Entrèves, 4,351 ft. above sea level, on the Italian side. When the two teams meet they will have over their heads 8,200 ft. of ice-capped granite. Annual traffic is expected to be 1,500,000 passengers and 75,000 tons of goods. The journey from Paris to Rome will be reduced by 20 per cent. One serious technical problem was that of ventilation; the tunnel will be provided with fresh air. The cost of the project, about £11,700,000, is being borne chiefly by France and Italy. Toll charges are expected to bring in a revenue of £750,000 a year. The Swiss and Italian Governments have agreed on a 3.6 mile tunnel under the Great St. Bernard pass to provide a motor road and oil pipeline between Western Switzerland and Northern Italy, which will remain open all the year round. (The Simplon is snowbound from November to April and the Great St. Bernard from the end of October to the end of June.) The tunnel will begin above Cantine de Proz, on the Swiss side, at a height of 6,200 ft., 25 miles from Martigny, and emerge at the same height near Saint Rhemy, 14 miles from Aosta. The distance between Martigny and Aosta will be shortened by six miles. The tunnel will be 6,430 yards long, 14 ft. high, and 23 ft. wide, with a double track and a 3 ft. footboard on each side. Gradients will not exceed 0.2 per cent. and ducts will remove fumes and gases and supply fresh air. It is expected to be ready by 1961.

ALUMINIZED CLOTHING.—A process for aluminizing clothing fabrics which could keep heat in or out was described by Mr. W. H. Rees, research officer at Shirley Institute, Manchester, to the British Association. The invention had now been patented as the Shirley metallized fabric. A small piece of the metallized fabric was shown by Mr. Rees, who said that there was no reason why wool, nylon, cotton, or indeed any fabric should not be woven with aluminium, which as used was only one 4,000th of an inch thick. To keep the body warm the metallized side was placed towards the body: to keep it cool the metallized side was turned away. Its main immediate use would be in fire-fighting. It should add little to the cost of clothing, and it would be possible to design a raincoat with an aluminized lining, very light to carry but as warm as an overcoat. Aluminium foil was completely impermeable to water vapour, and what was required was fabric coated with aluminium foil so that the coated fabric, while possessing the low emissivity of the metal, retained the natural permeability of the fabric for water vapour.

ARCHAEOLOGY'S WIDENING SCOPE.—Discussing the nature and scope of archaeology at the British Association, Professor Ian A. Richmond said that in no field had the impact of archaeology been more impressive or more appealing to the imagination than in prehistory, wherein it formed the sole basis for the study of ancient man. Through prehistoric studies the field had not only extended to cover almost every portion of the globe; but the time represented by its earliest recognized manifestations had continued to recede until its actual definition had become dim in terms of normal reckoning. Hence the possibilities of radioactivity, tree-ring cycles, and terrestrial magnetism were now being explored for what they could offer in fixing more remote chronology. Some developments had brought about a new understanding of primitive man, far outstripping anything considered possible a generation ago. It was not surprising that the outstanding characteristic of the overall picture of prehistoric man should be its great unevenness of definition and perspective. Resources, cultural achievement, and advancement differed so widely in different regions that the story tended to become not that of the effect made by man upon his environment but that of the effect of his environment upon man.

ARK IN OUR MIDST.—In a volume entitled "The Ark in our Midst", Mr. R. S. R. Fitter gives a long list of animals introduced into the British Isles, and now existing freely.

How many know that a colony of wallabies now lives on the Derbyshire moors? That edible dormice, introduced at Tring in 1902, by Lord Rothschild, either from Switzerland or Germany, are found on the house roofs of the Chilterns, making a noise "like a herd of diminutive elephants running about the rafters"? That mink have gone wild in Devon along rivers below Dartmoor? Or that wild deer in domestic English counties now include Sika deer from Japan, Muntjac deer from India and China, and Chinese Water Deer? What do the majority know of the wels and the bitterling and the golden orfe, the coypu, the rain frog or the rufous tinamou?

One chapter discusses the fervour of attempts to acclimatize foreign creatures. Charles II introduced the red-legged partridge. Charles Waterton first introduced the little owl (the experiment failed). The Romans are deprived of the credit of introducing the fallow deer and the mute swan, both probably native, the pheasant, the rabbit and the carp.

ARTIFICIAL ORGANS FOR MAN.—The rapid development of machines to undertake the work of human organs, such as the artificial kidney machine and the heart-lung by-pass machine, was reviewed by Professor A. Hemingway, Professor of Physiology, University of Leeds, at the British Association. With the development of artificial organ systems there was being created a demand for biological engineering. Design need not be based wholly on biological principles, because biological systems had ways of presenting and exposing surfaces or of distributing surfaces which were not readily transferable to machine design. Mechanical design should aim at the effect to be produced rather than necessarily imitate biological means. The success of the artificial kidney machine depended on a team composed of doctors, biochemists, nurses, and technicians and only frequent employment of the team and the apparatus led to efficiency in working. With the heart-lung by-pass machine much had been learnt about the necessity of a team composed of surgeons, pump operator, anaesthetist, cardiologist, biochemist, and haematologist—to report on changes in blood chemistry and cytology—nurses, and technicians.

ASLEEP OR AWAKE?—Experiments at Oxford University suggest that "swooning" is the wrong word to describe the effects which rock'n'roll music and some popular singers have on their audiences. The listeners may have fallen asleep. Dr. Ian Oswald, of the Institute of Experimental Psychology, found that young men between 19 and 30 fell asleep while beating time to the jazz music of undergraduates and professional bands.

People think of sleep as lying down like a log and going off for eight hours, he says. But it may mean sleeping for only two seconds at a time. There is no sharp division between being asleep and being awake. There is a complete gradation, from very deep sleep to light dozing. Signs of sleep were measured by electric brain waves, with an electro-encephalographic machine, heart beats and breathing. Some volunteers went to sleep between beats but made rhythmic movements, rather like sleepwalking. They also began to breathe in time to the music. Other volunteers, after loud spells by a full band, were liable to fall asleep when clear and pleasing clarinet solos followed. The same reaction occurred when applause made subjects feel part of a large audience. The music, he says, helped his subjects to escape from reality into a dream world where they no longer had to be awake. Because of the tendency to breathe in time to music people can breathe too fast and too hard. Emotion can also make people breathe too hard. Both conditions can occur in primitive religious ceremonies, like those which include native dancing. This could be important, because over-breathing reduces the blood flow to the brain and can seriously impair a person's consciousness. It may be added that Mr. Peter Tripp, a radio commentator, who undertook in New York to stay awake for 200 hours, completed his task, and then slept for 13 hours. Various devices were used to measure changes in his reactions. One of these showed no diminution of brain activity, but a normal amount of dreaming.

ASTROLABE BY REGIOMONTANUS.—The National Maritime Museum, Greenwich, has now on exhibition a unique relic of science. It is a small brass astrolabe made in 1462 by Johannes Muller, known to posterity as Regiomontanus, which stands as a dividing line between the Middle Ages and the renaissance of science. It was a gift to Cardinal Bessarion, who had brought the young scholar to Rome from Nuremberg and given him access to his manuscripts of classical Greek astronomy. At Nuremberg, Regiomontanus erected an observatory, a press for printing scientific books and a workshop for scientific instruments. This activity marked the re-birth of astronomy and all modern science, and stands at the beginning of a long line that reaches to the cyclotron and the radio telescope. The astrolabe is a circular star map to calculate the positions of the sun and the stars at any time of the day; it could also be used for simple observations. As decoration it has a self-portrait of Regiomontanus spreading wings of learning over the world—the only known contemporary portrait of him. The instrument was presented to Dr. William Somerville, husband of Mary Somerville, in Rome; he gave it to Sir John Herschel. It has remained in the Herschel family ever since and has been lent to the Museum by Commander M. H. Hardcastle.

AUSTRALIA'S RADIO TELESCOPE.—A German firm, Maschinefabrik Augsburg-Nürnberg, was awarded a £600,000 contract to build a giant radio telescope at Parkes, New South Wales. The telescope's radio "mirror"—a saucer-shaped bowl 220 ft. in diameter will be slightly smaller than that of the radio telescope at Jodrell Bank. It will survey those sections of the sky not at present covered by Britain's telescope at Jodrell Bank. Much of the Milky Way and other parts of the southern sky are invisible from Britain, but can be covered from the Southern Hemisphere.

BALDNESS DUE TO BRAIN PRESSURE?—Three professors in different parts of the world who for many years studied the cause of baldness reached the conclusion that the principal cause is the growth of the brain. They are Professor Arturo Manna, teacher of surgical pathology and plastic surgery at the University of Rome, Professor Hisuchi, of Japan, and Professor Wharton Young, of the University of Washington. According to these scientists the growth of the brain creates excessive tension of the membranous band which extends from the forehead to the back of the head, closely connected to the skin, to which the compression is transmitted. This stops the circulation of blood in the subcutaneous arteries causing anæmia of the hair bulbs, leading to atrophy of the hair and its falling out. If this is the cause of baldness, a cut that will detach the membrane from the frontal muscle will relax the tension and allow the blood to circulate again, and may stop the advance of baldness. Operations already carried out by Professor Manna are stated to have given good results.

BIOCHEMISTRY: £100,000 GIFT.—Mr. Jack Cotton, the Birmingham property owner, gave £100,000 to the Royal College of Surgeons for the endowment of a Chair in Biochemistry. The gift was promised at a dinner at the Royal College of Surgeons to commemorate the birth of "the father of scientific surgery", John Hunter, who was born on July 16, 1728. Biochemistry, now in a stage of rapid development, seeks to expand in chemical terms the processes taking place in living cells. Basically this includes not only the cells of animals, including human tissues, but also plant cells and bacteria. The study of the reactions in human tissue cells, under conditions of health and disease, is perhaps the major contribution which biochemistry can make to medicine and surgery, and this aspect is stressed in the teaching programme for students of surgery, anaesthetics and dentistry at the Royal College. It has become more and more obvious that this subject should be extended as much as possible. To this end the College had been hoping to establish a chair of Biochemistry, and the gift by Mr. Cotton will enable it to do so.

BIRD SONG.—Experiments are being made in various parts of the country to find out if birds inherit or learn their music. The method is to keep the bird, generally a chaffinch, in isolation from the time it emerges from its egg and to make a graph of its song. These isolated chaffinches have songs without the characteristic final flourish, but they improve when tape recordings of the natural song are played to them. Groups brought up in isolation evolve slightly different songs of their own. But no captive bird has the full range of sounds of the wild songster. Some tape recordings of bird song have been played over backwards to the captives, but none of them has responded by learning to sing in reverse. Dr. H. Kalmus, Reader in Biology at University College, who has taken a leading part in the experiments, thinks it quite possible that there are bird "dialects" varying from place to place, and that nightingales may sing more beautifully in Provence than elsewhere. Other examples of bird learning are the tits' habit of attacking milk bottle tops, which has spread over Southern England, and the greenfinches' new penchant for the fruit of a flowering shrub, the daphne, which seems to have been passed from one bird to the other.

BIRTH OF STARS.—Professor Fred Hoyle, F.R.S., has suggested an optical telescope of 20 in. aperture, carried in a satellite, and operating above the atmosphere. It would open up three additional ranges of wavelength at present cut off from ground equipment. Infra-red astronomy would enable scientists to study the birth of stars, and use could be made of electro-magnetic waves much longer than that of the interstellar dust, and stars could be observed from their earliest moments. Gamma-ray telescopes would reveal much about that exploded star known as the Crab Nebula. X-ray telescopes in satellites would open the whole field of high-temperature gases that are known to exist widely throughout the universe. Professor Hoyle said it was likely to prove easier to put a telescope into orbit than to send a man up in a satellite. There was no reason why a radio-inferometer with aerials several kilometres long should not be put into orbit.

BRAIN SURGERY BY PROTONS.—A brain operation in which for the first time a beam of protons, the positive charged unit of the atom nucleus, was used instead of surgical instruments, was performed at the Werner Institute for Nuclear Chemistry at Uppsala. It took two hours, and was completely painless. Not even the skin of the skull had to be pierced, and not a drop of blood was spilt. The patient, a man aged 55, had been suffering for five years from nerve pains and depression. Immediately after the operation he walked home from the hospital feeling perfectly normal. A month later no ill effects were registered. The operation was performed by a neurologist, Professor Lars Leksell, assisted by a professor of anatomy, Hr. Bror Rexed, and a young nuclear physicist, Hr. Boerje Larsson. One member of the team, who has been working for two years on the practical application of the idea, is the British histologist Professor William Mair. During the treatment the patient is kept "rotating", so that the beam goes straight through the tissue to a depth of 8 in., and hits the affected area of the brain from several different angles. Only the exact spot on which the beam is focused—on this occasion it was of finger-nail size—is "burnt away." A remarkable feature of the operation was that the surgeons were in constant telephone contact with the patient and could give him instructions. Extensive experiments on animals have given satisfactory evidence that the risks of the treatment are very small, but members of the team point out that much work over several years remains to be undertaken to arrive at more accurate estimates and improve the method.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION'S FUTURE.—The British Association for the Advancement of Science held its 121st meeting at York on September 2-9, under the presidency of Sir James Gray, F.R.S., the zoologist. The inaugural meeting of the association was held at York in 1831.

The subject of the presidential address was "The proper study of mankind is man". Scientists, said the President, would not make much impression on public opinion so long as men's minds were biased by fear and suspicion. Their primary objective should be that archaeology and history were a continuous spectrum of knowledge.

A shearwater had navigated the Atlantic without compass or chart, and Asdic had an extremely efficient prototype in the vocal cords and ears of bats. By surrounding themselves with an electric field, some fish could detect foreign objects in the surrounding water with remarkable precision. The total weight of the mechanism involved, including the animal's brain, amounted to a few grams; a man-made instrument of comparable performance would involve at least a ton of highly complex electronic machinery. Man's inventions had not reached the standards produced during biological evolution; but he had accomplished in a few centuries things for which nature required many millions of years. Nevertheless, we need not feel ashamed of our evolutionary past or get too big for our biological boots. Man had still a great deal to learn from animals.

Man had been able to exploit his environment and increase his numbers and range of distribution more. The factors controlling human behaviour were not amenable at present to the laws of physics and chemistry. The challenge was to the biological sciences, especially those dealing with the behaviour of organisms and their environment. Could they yield broad principles applicable to man, or must scientists allow the "law of the jungle" to take its course? As soon as man learnt to discipline himself to the fact that his environment was world-wide he could begin to direct his own evolution without the discomforts of over-population. The writing on the wall was tolerably clear; if man behaved like an animal and allowed his population to increase while each nation steadily increased the complexity and range of its environment, nature would take her course and the law of the jungle would prevail. The brain of an ant was the size of a pin-head, and it was not surprising that ants should attack or kill an individual from another colony with a different smell from their own. It was much less easy to understand why a man, with a brain of an entirely different order of complexity, should react almost equally violently to individuals with skin pigments slightly different from his own. In the ant world there was no place for small peaceful communities unless they could isolate themselves effectively from larger and more powerful neighbours; nor did there seem any lasting peace between large aggressive communities. That was the law of the jungle.

Having designed the ants, nature waited for about 150 million years before embarking on her human experiment, until man's brain had developed to control his environment and to deal rationally with the subdivision of labour between individuals and the distribution of natural resources between different groups. Different races of man could inter-breed or come to agreement about the distribution of world resources between different nations. The first policy would seem to lead to a world state with uniformity of social pattern and material interests; the second policy involved territorial limitations and economic agreements. Men really ought to be able to do something better than ants. Science could only play its full part in furthering the welfare of mankind if it were used at a very early stage of education as a means of encouraging a dispassionate but optimistic attitude towards all aspects of human affairs. To move from natural traditions and aspirations to others based on international welfare might prove less painful if we were prepared to look on man and all his problems as a phase in the evolution of the universe and to believe that he could, by means of his intellect, control and direct his own evolution and destiny.

The Presidents of the sections and the subject of their addresses were as follows: Mathematics and Physics, Prof. L. F. Bates, F.R.S.; "Visualization of magnetic processes"; Chemistry, Prof. M. Stacey, F.R.S.; "Medical aspects of complex carbohydrates"; Geology, Prof. O. M. B. Bulman, F.R.S.; "Recent developments and trends in palaeontology"; Zoology, Dr. L. Harrison Matthews, F.R.S.; "Man and the world fauna"; Geography, Prof. K. C. Edwards; "Trends in urban expansion"; Economics, Prof. J. Jewkes; "How much science?"; Engineering, Sir Ewart Smith, F.R.S.; "Critical importance of communication and transport"; Anthropology, Prof. I. A. Richmond; "Nature and scope of archaeology"; Physiology and biochemistry, Prof. A. Hemingway; "Artificial organs: biological applications"; Psychology, Prof. Magdalen Vernon; "Perception, attention and consciousness"; Botany, Dr. W. R. G. Atkins, F.R.S.; "Plants on land and in the oceans"; Mr. W. R. Day; "Pathogenic factors within the rooting space and the development of even-aged plantations"; Education, Sir James J. Robertson; "What are our schools for?"; Agriculture, Dr. H. G. Sanders; "Balance in British farming"; Assembly of corresponding societies, Countess of Albemarle; "Living with science".

Two evening discourses were delivered: Prof. Michael Swann, "The unseen pattern of growth"; Sir William Hildred, "International air transport problems."

It was announced that the appeals to industry to launch the Association's new activities, had produced a total of £269,000.

Sir George Thomson, F.R.S., Master of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, was elected President of the Association for 1960, when the annual meeting will be held at Cardiff from August 31 to September 7. The meeting in 1961 will be held at Norwich, and in 1962 at Manchester.

At the close of the meeting it was announced that the attendance of 2,903 had set a new record for a non-university town. The President, Sir James Gray, said that the Association meeting was no longer "a one week's beano and finish". During the last 16 months there had been established 20 area committees and a lecture service in which 300 lectures had been given and attended by 30,000 people. Dr. W. E. Swinton, a joint general secretary, spoke of the revolution in the affairs of the British Association which was in progress. Junior meetings—one in Nottingham had been attended by 3,600—would be extended and the extension of activities would have repercussions on television and radio.

CAMBRIAN SYSTEM RE-DATED.—Cambrian rocks have hitherto been regarded as accounting for about 200,000,000 years of the earth's history. Three scientists of Oxford University, Dr. K. I. Mayne, Dr. R. St. J. Lambert, and Dr. Derek York, after prolonged research, now state that an extra 200,000,000 years should be taken into consideration. They have redated the Cambrian system, and found that its upper layers were not laid down 450,000,000 years ago, as was previously thought, but closer to 650,000,000 years. They dated Cambrian rocks from Shap Fell, Dartmoor, and other places, by crushing and baking them and finding out how much of the radio-active potassium inside them had "decayed", as it does at a known rate to argon. One reason for the error in the previous date, they state, was that one of the Cambrian rocks sampled, the Kolm, of Sweden, had been "cooked" by lava long after it had been laid down. The Cambrian system can be regarded as the mezzanine floor of life, which probably began much more than 2,800 million years ago. But it was a primitive and jelly-like form of life and the rocks on which it left feeble impressions have been squeezed out of regular definition by massive earth-movements. It was not until Cambrian times that geologists began to find an abundance of fossils representing almost all orders, with the exception of the vertebrates. The crab-like trilobites and the net-like graptolites are among the most famous. It is thought that the Cambrian Sea encroached over much of the land. Sands followed by great thicknesses of black mud, hardened into shales and slates, were deposited in troughs. The climate was equable because limestones and sponge-like animals which favour warm conditions have been found in Greenland, Morocco, and Antarctica.

COMETS DISCOVERED.—After watching the skies for 560 nights, Mr. George Alcock, an amateur astronomer, and a schoolmaster in Northamptonshire, discovered two new comets. He has no observatory, and used a 105 mm. binocular telescope, valued at £200, in his garden. The first comet sighted is in the constellation Coronae Borealis, the second in Cancer. Both comets have been photographed by the Royal Observatory.

CONWAY ROAD BRIDGE.—The new Conway road bridge, erected at the cost of nearly £500,000, was opened by Mr. Brooke, Minister of Welsh Affairs. It replaces the suspension bridge built by Telford in 1826. Free from tolls, the new bridge will carry the Chester-Bangor trunk road (route A55) over the River Conway. It is separated from the suspension bridge on the north or estuary side of the river by about 60 yards, and has a single span of 310 feet, carried on four steel arch ribs. The total width between parapets is 31 feet 6 inches, providing for a single 22 foot carriageway, a 7 ft. 6 in. footpath on the northern side and a 2 ft. reserved strip on the south side. With the approaches to the bridge the total length of the carriageway is more than a quarter of a mile long. The bridge harmonizes with the historic background of Conway Castle and the mediæval character of the town.

COPPER BUTTERFLY REFUGE.—A party of students from universities and schools spent their vacation in clearing the Copper Field, an area of Wood Walton Fen, Huntingdonshire, of sallow and birch bushes, in an effort to restore the nature reserve to its original condition of fenland. The work concentrated on the corner called the Copper Field, the refuge of the "large copper" butterfly. The British type species of this insect (Dispar dispar) died out many years ago. Their dried bodies now fetch up to £10 each at auction. Some enthusiasts imported the progeny of the Dutch copper (Dispar batavus) a subspecies, and it is the descendants of these insects which now eat the local great water docks with a fair amount of relish. The Dutch or European coppers are in decline and it may be that Wood Walton will become the last refuge of the "large coppers."

CRATER 70 MILLION YEARS OLD.—The largest known crater in North America, $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles wide, is in north-east Saskatchewan. Estimated to be 70 million years old, it was caused by the impact of a large meteorite, in the opinion of Dr. M. J. S. Innes, of the University of Mines and Technical Surveys. He states that, depending on the velocity with which the meteorite struck the earth and whether it was of iron or stony formation, its diameter would have been between 400 ft. and 2,000 ft., and its explosive energy equal to five billion tons of T.N.T. He could think of no other logical explanation for the formation of this crater, which is in Deep Bay, at the south-east end of Reindeer Lake, about 250 miles north of the city of Prince Albert. Investigations since 1956 show that the maximum depth of water in Deep Bay is 720 ft., while the rest of Reindeer Lake seldom exceeds 200 ft. Dr. Innes considers that the lake was once shallower than it is now and that sedimentary deposits were carried away by glaciers. One way to prove whether a meteoric explosion occurred would be to drill the central feature to ascertain the existence of sediment and fragmental rock below it.

DIALECT RESEARCH.—Three papers dealing with linguistic research were read at the British Association meeting. Professor H. Orton, Professor of English Language and Mediæval English Literature, Leeds University, detailed the fieldwork on dialects carried out in 288 localities by eight trained workers. The results were to be published in a linguistic atlas of England in four major volumes. Mr. T. Hill, lecturer in the linguistic survey for Scotland, described two projects to investigate the vocabulary and pronunciation of the dialects in Scotland. Except in the Hebrides and parts of the west coast Gaelic was being fast replaced by English, but in the Lowlands English of a distinctive Scottish type was used side by side with Scots and the two related languages influenced each other greatly. In Wales, said Mr. V. H. Phillips, of the Welsh Folk Museum, dialect research was first concerned with the proposed Welsh dialect atlas, information for which was gathered by a questionnaire of about 1,000 items.

EIFFEL TOWER IN TOKYO.—Much of the central part of Tokyo has had to be rebuilt as a result of war damage. Among the landmarks of the city, which now has a larger population than London, is the Eiffel Tower. With its television antennae at the top it is 116 feet taller than its prototype in Paris, but the observation platform at 360 ft. is only a third of the way up, whereas the highest platform on the French tower is 950 ft. high. A number of marriages have been celebrated on the platform. The Tokyan tower cost £2,500,000 to construct. It is built to withstand earthquakes, typhoons and wind of gale force up to 150 m.p.h. The legs are anchored in blocks of solid concrete 65 ft. deep.

FAMILY AVERAGE OF TWO CHILDREN.—Unless there are great changes in economic and social conditions, the population of England and Wales will continue to replace itself, perhaps with a little to spare, concludes the Registrar-General who gives a comprehensive picture of fertility trends since 1920. A century ago the size of a completed family was six. For the next 50 years there was a fall of 2 per cent. each year until, by the early 1920's, the average had fallen to about two children to each family. The figures suggest some rise for recent marriages. The census of 1951 shows that families are largest in rural districts and smallest in the conurbations. Merseyside has the largest average size (2.06 children per married woman aged 16-49), and Greater London the smallest (1.53). The largest average size of family is among unskilled workers (an average of 2.64 children for each married woman aged between 45-49); clerical workers have the smallest families (1.49 children) and professional and managerial workers average 1.51. By 1951 little more than 20 per cent. of all married women under the age of 50 had not had a child. About 30 per cent. had had one child, 26 per cent. two children, 12 per cent. three, and 10 per cent. four or more. A generation of women would reproduce themselves if they were subject throughout their lives to the rates of marriage, fertility, and mortality of recent years, and produce a figure of 1.03. This assumes the maintenance of rates which have not yet been experienced throughout the lifetime of any single generation and represents a more favourable experience than that of the generations now nearing completion of their families.

FISH HELPED TO THRIVE.—Microscopic examination of a single scale from a dead salmon weighing 10 lb., found in the river Stour near Canterbury, has given a fresh impetus to the study of salmon life. The scales showed that it had spent two years in river water and two years at sea, and was ripe for spawning. Mr. I. R. H. Allan, of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, said that an apparatus had been devised to show the toxicity of any effluent and the amount of dilution required to make it safe for fish. The "guinea-pigs" in these experiments were inch-long harlequin fish, from south-east Asia; their susceptibilities were equal to those of rainbow trout, but they were more convenient to handle. Work is being done on electrical techniques for deflecting migrating fish from such hazards as turbine races and intakes, and for counting fish and detecting them by echosounding methods. Other studies are the effects of hot water discharged from power stations (roach are killed at 35 deg. centigrade) and fish diseases.

FLOAT GLASS.—Float glass, which combines the high surface finish of sheet glass with the flatness and lack of distortion of plate glass, is now being made by the Lancashire firm of Pilkington Bros., Ltd. This new product comes by drawing a continuous ribbon of liquid glass about 100 in. wide through the float bath, where it runs over a tank of molten metal while being heated from above. Its temperature here is about 1,000 deg. C. It then enters a cooling zone and emerges hard and cold enough to pass over rollers without losing its fine "fire polished" surface, which is brighter than that achieved by grinding and polishing. Mr. Alastair Pilkington had the brilliant idea of "float glass" while helping his wife to wash up. The process took seven years to develop in a plant costing £4,000,000. Applied at first for motor-car windscreens and windows, it will become available for railway coaches, buildings, shop windows and mirrors.

FORTH ROAD BRIDGE.—The technical panel appointed to consider the relative merits of the proposal for a crossing of the Forth by means of a subway or a road bridge found that the bridge scheme was to be preferred on grounds of suitability, economy, and greater freedom from hazard during construction and in use. Work on the road bridge has continued steadily during the year. The road bridge will consist of a suspension bridge with a main span of 3,300 ft. (the longest span in Europe) and the fourth largest in the world) and suspended side spans of 1,260 ft. each. At each end of the bridge massive anchorages will be provided and also reinforced concrete approach viaducts to link up with the approach roads. The bridge will have two 24 ft. carriageways capable of carrying two lines of traffic, two 9 ft. wide cycle tracks and two 6 ft. wide footpaths. The total cost of the bridge is estimated at about £16,500,000, and it is expected to be completed in 1962.

FREEZING THE BRAIN.—According to a report in the Lancet, it is possible to freeze part of the human brain without endangering life. An operation was carried out on a man of 45 who had a growth in the frontal lobe of his brain and whose condition had worsened until he was paralysed on the left side. A small tube was introduced into the tumour, and cooling was carried out for half an hour, when the temperature at the tip of the tube was minus 20 deg. centigrade, whereas two centimetres away it was 30 deg. centigrade. The patient was fully conscious within an hour and the next day was none the worse for the operation. The case was reported by Mr. G. F. Rowbotham, Dr. A. L. Haigh, and Mr. W. G. Leslie, from the Department of Neurological Surgery at the Newcastle upon Tyne General Hospital and the Department of Surgery at the University of Durham. Another case reported was that of a man of 41 who had a growth in the right frontal region. A similar operation was performed, and in a few days the patient was much better mentally.

"FRIGHTENING" WORLD POPULATION.—Dr. L. Harrison Matthews, F.R.S., director of the Zoological Society, discussing "man and the world's fauna" at the British Association meeting, asked if modern civilization was leading to a catastrophic crash of the populations of America and Europe. Man was increasingly competing for territory with the rest of the fauna. There were many causes for the frightening increase of the human population, especially in the underdeveloped parts of the world, all produced by man himself, such as the astonishing advances made in public health. But human populations were not emancipated from the Malthusian dictum that however much food is increased the population increases faster and overtakes it. If the present rate of increase were to hold there would be one person on every square yard of the earth's surface in a little more than 1,000 years. If we compared the present build-up of the human world population with the cyclic build-up of populations of small mammals our population was nearing a peak and a catastrophic crash was imminent. There were three choices: to do nothing and wait for the stress or some new virus like that of myxomatosis to do its work. Alternatively the destruction of civilisation could be left "to the trigger-happy politician with the largest stock of nuclear weapons." In a few days a third of the world population, about 1,000 million, could be eliminated, leaving a useful amount of elbow room for the survivors. Radioactive contamination was little understood and it was possible that the seeds of the needed reduction had already been sown and would bear fruit in the next 100 years. The third choice was inhibiting fertility in the male and female for a definite and limited period. Although success was close, Aldous Huxley's pill of the Brave New World had not yet been produced. No doubt that problem would be solved—the United States Population Reference Bureau predicted that the population of the world would double before the year 2000. Communist China made the greatest gains in 1958 adding about 15,000,000 people. India added about 6,000,000 and Russia about 3,600,000, while the United States had a net gain of 2,600,000. About one-third of the present world population—nearly 1,000,000,000 people—now lived within the Communist orbit. The population of the whole world was estimated at 2,795 million.

GOODWIN SANDS CHANGES.—A naval survey of the Goodwin Sands disclosed that, although they are not an immediate danger to navigation, significant changes have taken place since the Goodwins were last surveyed in 1947. The South Calliper, hitherto visible at low water, has disappeared, while three new banks have formed north of the Kellett Gut, the once navigable channel through the two main masses of the Goodwins. The Fork, the westerly neck of the North Goodwins, is becoming detached, and South Sand Head, the most southerly tip of the sands, has moved farther south since it was surveyed after a New Zealand liner had grounded nearby. There has been little alteration in the Gull Stream, the inshore route through the Downs favoured by vessels with the necessary draught because of the tidal range and protection afforded, except for a slight encroachment by the North Goodwins.

GREEK RUINS UNDER THE MAGNET.—A method of estimating the age of ancient ruins by magnetism has been applied in Greece by archaeologists and geophysicists who joined in the study of the magnetic field of the earth. An archaeologist will be able to date burnt ancient structures by a magnetometer and obtain information and the causes and effects of the earth's magnetism. This study, for which the word—archaeomagnetism—was coined, was carried out in Greece by Mr.

R. M. Cook, Reader in Classical Archaeology at Cambridge University, and Mr. J. C. Belshé, senior assistant in research in Geodesy and Geophysics at the same university. They were assisted by Mrs. Cook. They took specimens from 30 ancient structures covering a period from 2000 B.C. to the seventh century A.D. Many clays and stones heated beyond 500-600 deg. centigrade tend to get a fixed magnetism in the direction of the earth's magnetic north when they cool. The earth's magnetic field varies with time in direction in Britain about two degrees in 12 years, so that the remanent magnetization of fired clay or stone should be characteristic of a particular time in the earth's history at that place. If specimens of fired clay are obtained from structures whose dates are known from historical records or archaeological contexts, a curve can be constructed of the variation of the magnetic north to cover classical and prehistoric times. Then archaeological material, sampled and measured, should be datable to within 25 years. Mr. Cook and Mr. Belshé established a curve for the Roman period in Britain, covering four centuries, and studying their sampling they intend to prepare a "very crude" curve for Greece which will mark the changes in the declination or "dip" of the compass needle at various periods of Greek history. The chosen sample is prepared by cutting round and trimming its sides. A brass or duralumin mould is fitted round it and levelled with a spirit level. Plaster is poured in, enclosing the sides and top of the sample. The top surface is made level with the top of the mould, so that it also becomes horizontal. When the plaster has set a bearing is taken. The sample is then transported to the "astatic magnetometer" which measures the direction of ancient magnetism in it. These measurements are then compared with the bearing marked on the plaster surface.

GREENWICH TIME BALL.—The Greenwich time ball was erected on a new mast on the roof of Flamsteed House, the oldest of the Royal Observatory buildings at Greenwich. A time ball was first erected there in 1833, and in 1919 the aluminium sphere now used was fitted. It was taken down for overhaul in January, 1958, and has now been reinstated. It is not intended to resume the daily dropping of the time ball at 1 p.m. until the summer of 1960, when Flamsteed House will be opened as an annexe to the National Maritime Museum.

HIGH-SPEED COPYING.—The Patent Office has installed a machine, the Copyflo, capable of producing copies of any document or drawing on plain paper at 20 ft. per minute. An image of the document is transferred on to a magnetic drum; powdered ink is sprinkled on the drum and sticks only on the latent image; the drum revolves and transfers the powdered ink on to the paper, where it is heated so that it sets and forms a permanent record. The Patent Office will use the machine for copying patent specifications, 2,000,000 pages of which have to be copied every year. The specifications will first be photographed on microfilm, which will be fed into the machine, and full-sized copies of the original documents will emerge.

HOLLOW BRICKS.—A new type of hollow clay brick, which forms a cavity wall in one unit without ties, has been developed at the Building Research Station. It changes the British pattern of clay brick, which has existed in its present form for hundreds of years, but only a small change in technique will now be required. The new brick measures $7\frac{3}{4} \times 8\frac{1}{2} \times 2\frac{1}{2}$ inches. The brick is perforated, and lighter than the standard solid brick, volume for volume. Air spaces provide thermal insulation and assist the manufacturer in drying and firing. The design also lends itself to mechanized production. The adoption of the new process, it is claimed, would mean quicker—and cheaper—house-building. The thickness of the usual house wall built of these bricks would be 9 in. compared with the present 12 in. which allows for a two-inch cavity. It was estimated that on a group of four old people's bungalows at Aylesbury the use of the new brick would mean a saving of £100 on a £1,200 house.

HOVERCRAFT OF FOUR TONS.—The hovercraft, which has been developed by Saunders-Roe Ltd. at East Cowes under a contract placed by the National Research Development Corporation, is a vehicle for sea or land transport rather than an aircraft. It employs a fundamentally different lift principle from that of any aircraft or ship, as discovered by Mr. C. S. Cockerell, an electronics engineer, on the generation of a cushion of air under the bottom surface of sufficient pressure to support the machine so that it rides just clear of the waves or over the land. The vehicle weighs about four tons and is in oval form with a major diameter of 30 ft., a width of 24 ft. and a height of 20 ft. at the central column. A large part of this "flying saucer" forms a buoyancy tank, and an Alvis Leonides engine delivering 435 horsepower drives a four-bladed axial fan situated vertically in the central column. Air is drawn through this and expelled round the periphery, forming a cushion which supports the machine at a height of about 15 inches. Air is also bled off to horizontal nozzles which allow the machine to be moved in any direction. In this state speeds of up to 25 knots are expected. In the early experiments it hovered over the land for five hours and moved across the Solent at five knots. A little later the hovercraft crossed the Channel from Calais to Dover in 2 hours 3 minutes, and coped with a swell several times higher than its "hover height". An outstanding feature of the craft is that it can be loaded and serviced on land, thus making harbour and port facilities unnecessary. See Illustration, p. 556.

HYDROGEN-OXYGEN FUEL CELLS.—There has been a long hunt for a battery which can turn the chemical energy of simple and inexpensive materials, such as coal, into electricity. This would now seem to have been discovered. The National Research Development Corporation of Cambridge announced a battery which works by turning hydrogen and oxygen into water, and the chemical energy released in this process into electricity. This battery of hydrogen-oxygen fuel cells is stated to be capable of delivering five kilowatts at 24 volts. A cell of this type runs off pure hydrogen and oxygen which would normally be made by electrolysis during off-peak periods. It has been developed by Mr. F. T. Bacon, formerly of the Department of Chemical Engineering, Cambridge University. A single cell gives a potential of rather less than one volt. A demonstration of six cells in series was given by the Ministry of Fuel and Power at the Production Exhibition at Olympia in 1954 and it was possible with this to run a small electric motor. The object of recent development has been to carry the hydrogen-oxygen fuel cell to the point of practical use and in the view of the Corporation this stage has now been reached.

ICE IN THE WORLD.—A revision of the estimated amount of ice in the world has been made as a result of Antarctic seismic measurements during the International Geophysical Year. Dr. D. C. Martin, assistant secretary of the Royal Society, stated that in Antarctica, which accounted for 90 per cent. of the world's ice cover, new measurements had discovered ice thicknesses of up to 14,000 ft. and the new estimate of ice in the world was 4,500,000 cubic miles—an increase of about 40 per cent. over the pre-I.G.Y. figure. If this were to melt into water, he said, vast land areas would be submerged. From records of the mean sea level they already knew that the level of water in the oceans was rising as the Arctic became warmer and the glaciers receded. As the ice cover melted it lightened the load and the sea bottom began slowly to rise—for example, in shallow northern seas such as Hudson Bay and the coastal areas north of Canada and Siberia. That also raised the mean sea level. Such changes were of interest to others besides the scientist. The 6-in. rise in 100 years, which is the rise in the south of England, will necessitate higher sea walls to protect highly populated industrial areas situated below the level of ordinary spring tides.

KARIBA DAM COMPLETED.—After disastrous floods, 100 ft. higher than normal, had hampered the work the hydroelectric dam on the Zambezi in the Kariba gorge took final shape and is expected to be in operation in 1960. Its estimated cost is £113,000,000. The dam, situated below the Victoria Falls, is 420 ft. high and 1,900 ft. long. Its width, at the bottom of the gorge, has been compared by engineers to the length of Westminster Bridge. Its power at the beginning of operations will be equal to that of the Battersea Power Station, and will rise to four times that amount when in full working order. On the higher reaches of the Zambezi a reservoir, 2,000 sq. miles in extent—the largest man-made lake in the world—is gradually forming which, it is estimated, would be large enough to cover England and Wales to a depth of 3 ft. 6 in. The construction of this lake means the disappearance of large tracts of tribal lands, and the expulsion of many animals and birds. The danger to the native fauna was foreseen, and as the lake expanded, rescue operations on a large scale were carried out to save some of the thousands of animals (waterbucks, zebras, baboons, elephants) trapped by the rising waters. It is estimated that a total of 635 islands, formed by the rising waters, will have to be dealt with by 1964. It was already known that lion and elephant could swim up to two miles, and that elephants often walked under water with only the tips of their trunks above the surface, and it has now been discovered that baboons and monkeys can dive and swim under water and that guinea hens can swim like ducks.

Kew Gardens After 200 Years.—The Queen was present at Kew to mark the bicentenary of the Royal Botanic Gardens, and its contribution to the advancement of botanical science. One of the projects put in hand to mark the anniversary was the restoration of the palm house, at a cost of £100,000. Not one of the delicate plants was lost during the work, although the glass was out for two winters. Since the war a new Australian House has been built, the orangery renovated and a clematis wall erected. The Jodrell Laboratory is mainly concerned with the structure of plants, and experiments are made there to find out, for example, how atmospheric pollution can be lessened so that living plants do not suffer. In the Museum of Economic Botany estimates are made of the economic value of plants, such as bananas, cocoa and rubber, and the museum is also a quarantine station in the distribution of living plants from one part of the world to another. The Herbarium contains dried and pickled plants in 6,000,000 sheets, from all over the world. Properly preserved they keep their botanical characters for centuries, and form the basis for identification and research. Every year between 50,000 and 80,000 specimens are added to the collection. Since the war two dozen improved types of cocoa from tropical America have been propagated at Kew and sent to countries in the Old World. Plants nurtured at Kew and taken to Malaya started the immense rubber industry of the country.

LIGHT THAT NEVER FAILS.—A light that never fails has been developed after three years research by Mr. J. Kay, an engraver, of Darwen, working in association with Brandhurst & Co., manufacturing chemists, of High Wycombe. The light is provided by isotope-activated krypton gas supplied by the Atomic Energy Research Establishment, Harwell. The function of the radioactive gas is to make other substances luminescent, and the plastic used in the proposed signs provides sufficient protection for health purposes. The power unit weighs 1½ oz., and the lamp has no wires, batteries nor bulbs. It never dims and does not have to be renewed. It gives a green luminous glow which throws a beam strong enough to read a newspaper by, but its luminous strength may be increased through further development. Its main use at present seems likely to be in factories, mines and ships, while a full version may be used as a marker buoy for shipping.

LINER UNDER ATOMIC ENERGY.—The world's first atomic-powered passenger-cargo ship was launched by Mrs. Eisenhower, wife of the President, and named Savannah. Built at a cost of $41 million (about £14,500,000), the 21,000-ton vessel will be equipped with all modern safety devices, including elaborate protection against radiation. Her reactor will have a double shield, composed of 2,168 tons of lead, concrete, plastic, and water; round this will be a shell of steel to serve as a trap for radioactive material if there should be an explosion or if the ship comes into collision with another. She will have a double bottom to avert damage to her reactor if she goes aground, and will have special tanks for storing radioactive waste for as long as 100 days so that it can be disposed of safely after a voyage. The reactor, capable of developing 22,000 horsepower, is lodged deep amidships in a containment vessel 50.5 ft. long and 35 ft. in diameter. Carrying nine tons of atomic fuel the Savannah may operate for three and a half years on one fuel loading. She will carry a crew of 110, 60 passengers and 10,000 tons of cargo. Television cameras enable passengers, without danger, to look into the interior of the reactor while the ship is operating.

LONDON 100 MILES WIDE.—A revision of the regional plan for London is required to provide outlets to reduce pressure on the green belt, otherwise London may become a solid urban concentration 100 miles wide. Mr. A. G. Powell, research officer, Ministry of Housing and Local Government (London Region), told the British Association. The geographic and economic attractions of the metropolis were too strong to be halted by industrial and planning controls. London had expanded in response to the export drive, the welfare state, and the development of air transport. Increased pressure on land had been caused by the increase of new offices in central London. The London region now extended for nearly 50 miles to Luton, Brighton, Reading, and Southend. Within it there was a complex pattern of a daily interchange of workers on which was superimposed an increasing daily flow of workers to the congested centre of London. Over 400,000 fewer people were living in the urban area within 12 miles of the centre than in 1951, but in a great ring round London, which extended to Reading, Luton, Southend, and Gillingham, population had increased by 660,000. Except in the planned schemes, employment had not moved in proportion to population. Most of the increase in employment occurred in the built-up area of London in which population was falling. Over 20,000 new jobs a year had been created in the nine square miles of central London. However tightly planning controls operate further economic expansion in the London region and south-east England is inevitable.

LUNAR CRATERS.—Professor Z. Kopal, of Manchester University, has put forward a new theory of the origin of lunar craters. Instead of impacts on the moon by meteorites, or of volcanic action, he argues that collisions with comets might account for the largest craters—such as the one 80 miles across, on which the recent Russian observations were made. Whereas Mr. Kozyrev's observations in the Crimea had shown hot carbon molecules to be present at intervals above the central peak of the crater Alphonsus, it is now known that cometary heads represent loose conglomerates of mainly frozen hydrocarbons, with an admixture of unstable chemical compounds which on impact would behave like high explosives. The impact on the moon of a solid meteorite big enough to account for the largest craters, would cause earthquake waves up to 1,000 times more severe than any recorded on the earth. Prof. Kopal questions how many steep mountains or ridges on the moon could have survived the sudden and devastating disturbances needed to account for the large number of lunar craters. The head of a comet, being not a single mass but a swarm of particles, would make less of a dent in the moon's surface and would vaporize completely, with possibly a further release of energy from chemical explosion. The Russian report of a volcanic eruption near Alphonsus has stimulated fresh experiments on its origin years ago. Dr. A. G. Gaydon and Mr. R. C. M. Learner have shown photographs of crater-like formations produced by gas effusing through a light powder under vacuum. In their experiments the crater wall was built up by a continuous fountain of falling dust, as at Pompeii, rather than a flow of lava. A flow of lava would be expected to build a high mountain whereas a fall of dust could form a shallow crater of large diameter. Other astronomers say that no eruption was observed, but only a small reddish cloud in motion over the surface, while a spectrogram exposed a few minutes earlier showed that the cloud was partly composed of carbon compounds in a gaseous state. Examination of the region by Dr. G. Kuiper with the 82 in. telescope of the McDonald Observatory, Texas, failed to show any structural change in the surface features; nor was there any trace of a reddish staining. The whole phenomenon was over in a few minutes. It has been suggested, too, that the gas cloud was a result of the explosive impact of a cometary or meteoric body. A crater might have been formed, but unless it were over a quarter of a mile in diameter it would be too small to appear on any photograph.

LYNX REMAINS IN DEVON.—Excavations in a limestone quarry cave at Paignton revealed the remains of two lynx believed to be 20,000 years old. Dr. Anthony Sutcliffe, of the British Museum (Natural History), said that the bone deposit of the cave was exhausted and only its clay content remained. Human remains of a later period than the lynx bones were also uncovered by the excavators on land adjoining Paignton Zoo. These were the teeth and bones of an elderly person and a child found at a higher level than the lynx. Dr. Sutcliffe said that the lynx was a magnificent find. Only 12 finds of lynx remains have been made in the British Isles before—at Kent's Cavern, Torquay, in the Mendips, and in Derbyshire, Durham, Sutherland, and Ireland. The cave was discovered two and a half years ago by Mr. Leslie Neale, Paignton Zoo's lion and tiger keeper, and lynx remains were found in 1958. The skull of a lynx of the northern species was found 20 ft inside the cave entrance.

MARS MAY IMPORT BACTERIA.—The biology of Mars was one of the main themes at the International Congress at Westminster. The green areas of the planet have long served as an argument for some form of vegetation there. But, even if Mars bears no life now, some lowly terrestrial organisms might be induced to grow there, according to experiments by Captain I. Davis and Colonel J. D. Fulton of the United States School of Aviation Medicine. They put various micro-organisms into a sealed "Mars jar" containing a layer of red sandstone lava, of similar colour to the Martian surface, surmounted by an atmosphere of pure nitrogen, presumed to resemble that of Mars, while the extremely low temperature of the Martian nights was also imitated. Two strains of bacteria, which need no oxygen on the earth, lived and multiplied in these conditions. Two lessons were drawn: first, that the surface of Mars could be contaminated with organisms carried there by the first space vessel, and secondly, that suitable organisms might be adapted to grow on Mars to serve as food for a future human colony there. They might well change their colour on the way there, for Dr. J. Eugster reported that two golden barley seeds, hit by cosmic radiation at a high altitude in Switzerland, underwent mutations which changed their grain colour.

MARS: PROOF OF PLANT LIFE.—Recent observations have been close to being final proof of the existence of plant life on Mars. Observations on the light and dark areas of the planet were made by Dr. William Sinton at Mount Wilson. The dark areas have been assumed to be living vegetation. The spectrum which Dr. Sinton obtained shows a band of spectral lines at a wavelength of 6.7 microns. He confirmed by measuring the spectra of terrestrial objects, such as plant and even filter paper, that these spectral lines are a characteristic of organic molecules found in terrestrial living things. The particular spectral lines are characteristic of chemicals in which hydrogen and carbon atoms are linked together in the neighbourhood of oxygen atoms. Dr. Sinton said the wavelength was identical with that found reflecting infra-red radiation from algae. This view is supported by observation of a recent dust storm on the planet, which was studied at the Yerkes Observatory. It covered the surface of Mars with red dust. At the end of a month, however, the patches of presumed vegetation began to break through the dust. This, it is assumed, indicates that the plant life is able to shake off the dust or that it can regenerate itself on top.—Dr. L. Shklovsky, a Russian scientist, advanced the theory that the two moons of Mars, Phobos and Deimos, are probably satellites sent out by intelligent beings 2,000 or 3,000 million years ago. The origin of Phobos and Deimos could not be explained by any method in nature. Deimos is five miles in diameter and Phobos ten miles. The latter is 5,800 miles from the planet and takes seven hours 39 minutes to go round it. Deimos is 24,600 miles up, in an orbit lasting one day, six hours, and eighteen minutes. Phobos in the last few decades has deviated from its orbit by two and a half degrees and got closer to Mars. Dr. Shklovsky believes that Phobos was hollow inside, and, as no natural body can be hollow inside, it must be an artificial satellite. Although the two moons might weigh a hundred million tons, he says, their construction presented no insoluble engineering problems for intelligent beings.

MERIDIAN 180 MARKED BY PLAQUE.—Sir Ronald Garvey, the retiring Governor of Fiji, has presented to the islands a bronze plaque marking the 180th meridian, which passes through Tavuni. The plaque could not have been erected anywhere else in British territory. Fiji, exactly half-way round the world from Greenwich, is the place where, contrary to Kipling, east and west do meet. When travelling round the world became more common and the inconvenience of the time difference of 24 hours became apparent, mariners chose the 180th meridian to put things right; a day being put forward if going west, backward if going east. The only people who suffered from this new arrangement were the people of Fiji, some of whom found themselves in one day, some in another. A Fiji ordinance reads: "Time in this Colony shall be noted as if the whole Colony were situate to the west of the meridian of 180 deg. from Greenwich." The international date line has now been moved to the east and lies over the sea between Tonga and Samoa.

METEORITES IN BRITISH MUSEUM.—A substantial part of Dr. H. H. Nininger's collection of meteorites, consisting largely of falls hitherto unrepresented in British collections, has been purchased for the British Museum (Natural History) through a gift of £50,000 from the Nuffield Foundation. The British Museum's collection, a total of 1,034, is the largest in the world, dating back to 1776, when a specimen of the stony-iron found at Krasnojarsk, Siberia, was presented to the Russian Academy of Sciences. The scientific aspect of the Nuffield gift is of importance. Meteorites constitute the only extra-terrestrial material available for detailed study, and an exact knowledge of their composition and structure is important for the cosmogony of the solar system. Even to commercial affairs they have a relevance; the General Electric Research Laboratories at Schenectady gained from the study of certain meteorites valuable help in making true diamonds.

METRIC SYSTEM FOR JAPAN.—Inches, feet, yards, ounces, and lbs., with their Japanese equivalents, have been replaced by the metric system in Japan, under a new law. The metric system was made obligatory by a law passed in 1921, but the period of grace for its compulsory use was extended until December 31, 1958.

MIDGES ON THE DEFENSIVE.—The Scottish man-biting midge, which can be a plague in some areas, is on the defensive. For the last few years the midge has been the subject of intensive research by scientists, encouraged by forestry workers, farm hands, anglers and holidaymakers. They have developed a repellent cream for the face and hands, and have also been gathering information about the midge, including its weaknesses. Dr. D. S. Kettle, of Edinburgh University, stated that likely midge breeding grounds in bog land could now be identified and that 100 per cent. control of midges in a local area seemed possible for at least three years by spreading D.D.T. insecticide over the breeding ground. The midge was a world problem and scientists in Scotland who led the world in midge research were sending information to many countries, including several behind the iron curtain. Thirty types of midge had been identified in Scotland.

"MISSING LINK" 600,000 YEARS OLD.—An important discovery of human-like remains and crude tools has been made in the Olduvai Gorge in Tanganyika by Dr. L. S. B. Leakey and his wife. Scientists had been trying for many years to find the connecting link between the South African "ape men" and true men, he says, and now they have the link. The Olduvai skull represents the oldest stone toolmaker found anywhere. Dr. Leakey and his wife were crawling on their hands and knees in the gorge when his wife called him to see her find. Carefully they excavated the pieces of the skull, cleaning fragments with a toothbrush and dental pick. When the size of the teeth and the depth of the palate were measured he felt certain it was the missing link between the South African "ape men", Australopithecus and Paranthropus and true man. The skull was that of a youth who died between 16 and 18 years old. He lived mainly on vegetables and nuts, competing with contemporaneous giant baboons and giant pigs as big as rhinoceros for food. Dr. Leakey estimates the age of the skull at 600,000 years. He has named the species Zinjanthropus Boisei. The prefix Zinj is the ancient name for East Africa and Boisei is after Dr. Leakey's financial backer in the search, Mr. Charles Boise, of London. The nickname given is "Nutcracker Man" because of the tremendously developed teeth. The tools found are stated to be the crudest objects which could qualify for the name. They are little more than chipped pebbles, used for the disruption of the hides of dead animals as a preparation for skinning them. The fossil rich Olduvai Gorge was discovered in 1907 by a German butterfly collector. Dr. Leakey's first visit in 1931 was prefaced by three weeks' road building through the bush, and it then took six days to reach Olduvai from Nairobi. In the same place he discovered the bones of an ostrich, bigger than a giraffe, which was a contemporary of "Nutcracker Man."

MITHRAS CANISTER.—The silver canister and strainer of the third century A.D., found in Walbrook, where excavations revealed the remains of a Roman Temple of Mithras, has been declared to be treasure trove. The canister, which is 80 per cent. pure silver, is richly ornamented with hunting scenes on its side and lid, with a plain silver strainer which fits neatly into it and is symmetrically dotted with small holes on the underside. It was used for liquids in sacrificial rites. Honey was probably an ingredient. The British Museum estimated the fair market value of the canister at £3,000. The Coroner's inquest nominated the finder of the canister as Prof. W. F. Grimes, hon. director of the Roman and Medieval London Excavation Council, on the understanding that he would give the sum awarded for it to the Council. Under the charter of Charles II the Corporation of London has the right to claim possession of treasure trove found within its boundaries from the Crown. The canister has now been placed in the Guildhall Museum.

MOLYBDENUM CASTING.—Government scientists in the United States produced the first casting of molybdenum, the white metal resembling iron which has excellent strength at high temperatures. The experiment is described as a major metallurgical break-through, of great importance to America's space and missile programmes. The advance probably lies in ability to cast molybdenum and its alloys in complex shapes. Molybdenum has been cast before in ingots of substantial weight. Its melting point is 2,620 deg. C. For strength at high temperatures in relation to weight it is a most promising metal. It reacts more readily with oxygen than would be permissible in some uses. In a rocket motor, only a comparatively short life is required, and alloys with increased resistance to oxydization have been produced.

NEW ATOMIC CLOCK MORE ACCURATE.—The most accurate standard of time in the world, an improved atomic clock, was shown at the National Physical Laboratory by Dr. Louis Essen. His new apparatus was two years under construction and stands 14 ft. high. Like its predecessor, with which the times set by the earth and by atoms were first compared, it makes use of a natural vibration of caesium atoms. It has been operated experimentally with an accuracy of two parts in 100,000 million—an accuracy five times better than that given by Dr. Essen's original apparatus. Checks on the time-keeping of the earth have shown that a progressive slowing up, which had been proceeding from the summer of 1955 to the summer of 1958—amounting to the addition of a thousandth of a second to the length of the day—seems now to have come to an end.

NONSUCH PALACE DISCOVERIES.—A successful recovery has been made of the foundations and ground plan of a large part of the eastern half of Henry VIII's Nonsuch Palace at Ewell, Surrey, which was built by Henry VIII and demolished by Barbara Villiers in 1675 for the sale of the materials. Parts of a cobbled courtyard, a gatehouse and a kitchen were found. The remains of fine quality carved and gilded slate flowers which covered the timber work of the palace, were recovered from the rubble. A quantity of thirteenth-century stonework, carved and decorated, most of which came from Merton Priory, five miles away, was unearthed, as well as foundations of the chancel of Cuddington Church, which, with its surrounding village, was demolished. From the rubble filling of a pit came seventeenth-century pottery and glass, consisting chiefly of wine bottles (two with engraved labels), flasks, tumblers, wine glasses and smaller scent containers, together with an ormer shell used for mixing cosmetics, on which traces of rouge are still visible.

NORTH POLE ONCE IN THE PACIFIC.—Dr. Takeshi Nagata, leader of the Japanese Antarctic expedition in the International Geophysical Year, stated that its findings led to the conclusion that between 500 million and 1,000 million years ago the North Pole was located in what is now the middle of the Pacific Ocean. The findings were based on measurements of terrestrial magnetism in rock specimens taken from three places on Ongul Island, where the expedition was based. Dr. Nagata's Antarctic studies supported the theory that there had been a shift of continental land masses, and that in the era from 500 million to 1,000 million years ago the North Pole had been located at approximately three degrees north and 127 degrees west.

ORDNANCE SCALE TOO LARGE.—The tellurometer, an instrument for measuring distance by electronic means, is stated by the Ordnance Survey to be reliable and accurate. It has been used to check the scale of the primary triangulation at several places and has confirmed that the scale everywhere is slightly too large. This scale error arises from the fact that the new triangulation was scaled to fit the old triangulation as closely as possible to avoid large changes in the graticules of the survey's maps and plans. The mean scale error is small, about one in 100,000, and the maximum error so far found is about one in 30,000. These errors have small importance for practical users of maps.

OYSTER PEST FROM AMERICA.—A survey of the damage done on English oyster beds by the American whelk tingle, Urosalpinx cinerea, has been made by Mr. D. A. Hancock, at the Burnham-on-Crouch laboratory of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Five years ago he reported on the destruction of oyster spat (spawn) by this tingle which drills or bores, and since then its density has greatly increased. During each spring and summer large numbers, including a high percentage of females, migrate into the intertidal zone, and there is a reverse migration later. They feed on oyster spat, and each tingle can be expected to consume about 40 spat during a normal feeding season, and the feeding rate increases with temperature. Of the spawning from May to July, or even from April to November, only a small percentage of eggs fail to develop normally. Embryos hatch as fully formed juveniles, capable of attacking small oyster spat immediately. The survey was designed to control the tingles, and dredges and bag traps were of little use. Curved roofing tiles caught many tingles and reduced the population, but spawn could be taken most successfully by dredging.

OYSTERS AND ULTRA-VIOLET RAYS.—At West Mersea, Essex, Mr. A. E. P. Woolf, an oyster merchant, installed an ultra-violet ray cleansing tank to prevent the pollution of oysters intended for the market. Built from plans designed by the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries laboratory at Burnham-on-Crouch, the apparatus consists of two concrete pens capable of taking 5,000 oysters each, a pump and an ultra-violet ray lamp. Water is pumped from the pens into a tank divided into two, the partition forming a miniature weir over which is suspended the lamp. The treated water falls down a pipe—to be oxygenated—and then goes back to the pens to be recirculated. Tests have shown that sewage can be purified in six hours by this method. The apparatus has to be working for eight hours after each fresh batch of oysters is put in, and the shellfish must remain in the pens for 48 hours. The oysters cleanse themselves with the purified water, so that when taken out they are germ free. The sequence worked out by Mr. Woolf is to collect the oysters—both native and Portuguese—put them in storage pits until they can be graded, counted, and washed, and then into a cleansing tank for 48 hours. By this time the other pen is ready to be emptied of cleansed oysters.

PENICILLIN: GREAT DISCOVERY.—A research team working at the Beecham laboratories under the guidance of Prof. E. B. Chain, F.R.S., made a major discovery in antibiotics by isolating the basic molecule of penicillin. The new compound is called 6 amino penicillanic acid and it has been made by growing a culture of a penicillin mould in a medium which is not provided with chemicals necessary for the production of the variable parts of the penicillin molecule which confer specific properties on the different varieties of the antibiotic. Three urgent problems for which the new penicillin suggests solution are: The widespread existence in hospitals of micro-organisms resistant to the known penicillins—a matter of acute concern; finding a weapon to combat organisms causing intestinal disorders, typhoid, and other diseases; the development of new penicillins which could be used to treat patients allergic to existing ones.

POISON AND 700 LEGS.—An animal with 700 legs has been found in Barro Colorado Island, Panama, by Mr. H. F. Loomis, an American scientist. It is a member of the millipede or "thousand-legs", class of invertebrates, so misnamed because no species yet known has a thousand legs. It is a wormlike creature, living under rotting logs or stones. Its body consists of 175 segments, strung one after another. Each segment has a certain independence. The head segment is richly endowed with nerves, and is probably the site of the consciousness of the creature, and the forerunner of the brain at higher stages of evolution. Each segment has four legs and is more or less capable of acting independently. Mr. Loomis states that millipedes, unlike centipedes, live entirely on vegetable material. Their favourite food is decaying vegetable matter, while centipedes favour small insects and lower forms of animal life. In millipedes there is a poison gland in most segments, from which a few of the "bugs" are able to shoot a caustic substance. They are able to co-ordinate the action of all these glands, so that a fanlike spray of poison comes from the whole body. Mr. Loomis once got in the way of such a spray; he was temporarily blinded in one eye and one side of his face was temporarily paralyzed.

POWER FROM SMALL ATOMIC DEVICE.—An atomic generator weighing only 5 lb. was demonstrated at the White House, Washington, and hailed by scientific experts as a significant breakthrough in the production of electric power from heat. Mr. McCone, of the Atomic Energy Commission, explained that this thermo-electric generator, fuelled by radio-isotopes, has an efficiency 20 times as great as any known before in the transformation of heat into electricity. Its first use will probably be as the power source for broadcasting units and for instruments carried in American space missiles. Experts foreshadowed that the device would provide a use for millions of gallons of radioactive atomic waste now stored underground in Nevada. The generator produces five watts of electric energy and can operate indefinitely, though with a progressive loss of about one-half of its power potential every 138 days. The source of power is the radio-isotope known as polonium 210. Scientists present noted that over a period of 276 days 1,450 lb. of batteries would be needed to produce the energy of which the new generator is capable. The Atlas satellite which broadcast President Eisenhower's Christmas message carried 20 lb. of batteries, which lasted for 18 days. This new atomic generator, 4½ in. wide and 5½ in. high, would have powered the satellite's broadcasts for more than a year. Officials said that the weight of the device could be cut to about 3 lb.

RADIATION: SUPPOSED MENACE.—The supposed menace of radioactive fall-out from nuclear test explosions was greatly discounted by Professor W. V. Mayneord, Dr. R. C. Turner, and Dr. J. M. Radley at the British Association meeting. Professor Mayneord is a member of the Medical Research Council Committee on the hazard to man of nuclear and allied radiations and Professor of Physics in the British Post-graduate Medical Federation. Dr. Turner and Dr. Radley are physicists who work under him at the Institute of Cancer Research. They spent two years in examining thousands of bones, human and animal tissues, and food. Their main points are that a typical high-carbohydrate British diet contains radium and thorium equivalent to 300 times the present intake of strontium-90 from nuclear explosions; that the amounts of radium and thorium eaten by three or four members of a single family could vary by even a thousand times according to individual tastes; that most of the radioactive material which goes into the body comes out again within 48 hours; and that they find no evidence that it accumulates with age. Where then, they ask, is the menace of strontium-90? If the present level of strontium-90 in food represents a radiation hazard then the whole process of eating food must be regarded as highly dangerous, they say. The mystery lies in how the radium and thorium in the body is kept so low. There must be a mechanism which maintains a state of radioactive balance from early life onwards. Four ounces of brazil nuts contain three times as much radium and thorium as the entire bone and soft tissues of a normal adult; between brazil nuts and fruit and vegetables whose radium and thorium content can hardly be measured the range of activity is more than 20,000 to one; an anti-nausea preparation for pregnant women contains 50,000 times as much radioactive material as the intake of strontium-90 from food; there are variations of as much as 20 to one even in a sample of 70 human bones; the amounts in the bones of stillborn children differ little from adults; the soft tissues of the body contribute one-quarter of the body's total of radium and thorium; and herbivorous animals, headed by Welsh sheep and Sahara camels, have up to 60 times as much in their bones as man.

REASONS WHY WILD BIRDS DIE.—Mr. I. F. Keymer, of the Ministry of Agriculture, has made a survey of the reasons why wild birds die. More birds die in Britain than exist here in an average March. Mr. Keymer collected more than 500 dead birds of seventy-four different species, mainly in southern and eastern England, and found that ninety-eight had died a violent death, 188 had succumbed to some form of disease, and 165 had been poisoned. Violent deaths were due mainly to shooting, road accidents, and animal predators. The most important diseases were nephritis and parasitic and bacterial infections. Of the poisons, dieldrin, a poison used for dressing seed corn, headed the list with 209 deaths, including fifty-nine wood-pigeons and twenty-four pheasants. It was noticed that bird deaths occurred only where the corn was not sown deep. British naturalists have long been concerned about the possible effects on wild life of insecticides and weed-killers. In the United States an alarming account has been published by Professor George Wallace, of the Michigan State University, of the virtual extermination of a large population of American robins as a result of spraying DDT to control elm-bark beetles and mosquitoes. (The American robin is actually a thrush, and looks like a blackbird with a red breast.) Within three years a population of 370 adult robins on 185 acres at East Lansing had fallen to fifteen, and in 1958, only four were seen. The British Trust for Ornithology has set up a group to investigate the effect on birds of toxic chemicals in agriculture.

RHINOCEROS HIDE.—Research at St. Bartholomew's Hospital medical school has shown that the skin of the rhinoceros, the second largest land animal in the world, is not, according to Professor A. J. E. Cave, an inert and lifeless outer wrapping. It is like thin sheet steel, and flayed off it weighs almost a ton and cannot be folded. Professor Cave calls it a "sensitive excretory organ of typically mammalian constitution though specialized in certain particulars in conformity with the animal's mode of life." In the Garamba Park, in North East Africa, the animal lies about under trees at midday and browses only after dark. Professor Cave got some skin from the white species (ceratotherium) which appeared to be dead and was a dull, wrinkled, sometimes tuberculated, hairless armour plating, resembling oak bark rather than mammalian tissue. The tough epidermis was only about a millimetre thick but the skin below, the dermis, had large sweat glands, the function of which appeared to complement normal excretion. The conclusion was that a beast as heavily armoured and insulated as a white rhino had to have some means of lowering its temperature in a hurry after exertion, otherwise it would explode. It did this by perspiring convulsively and very extensively.

ROMAN CIRCUS OF VARIANO.—The remains of a large circus, the circus of Variano, believed to have been started during the reign of the Emperor Heliogabalus (A.D. 212–228) were discovered during repairs to a military barracks near the church of the Holy Cross of Jerusalem in Rome. Professor Giulio Jacopi, superintendent of Roman Antiquities, stated that more than 20 ft. of the original seatings and stairways, in brick, were unearthed. Some of the vaults and part of the stairways were intact, with the treads of the steps undamaged. He believes that the circus was originally about 550 yards long, 130 yards wide, and about 33 feet high. The structure must have been covered with marble, but no trace of marble has been found. The name of Variano is stated in ancient writings to have belonged to a family related to Emperor Heliogabalus.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY.—On June 26 the Queen and President Eisenhower entered the 2,300-mile St. Lawrence Seaway, the great engineering project which will carry ships of 20,000 tons from the Atlantic to the Great Lakes of North America, and jointly declared it open. (See WHITAKER'S ALMANACK for 1958.) The Queen journeyed the whole length of the Seaway as far as Chicago, where she arrived on July 6; and thence continued her tour of 15,000 miles from the Yukon to Newfoundland.

SEINE ESTUARY BRIDGED.—Tancarville road bridge, which spans the estuary of the Seine twenty miles from Le Havre, was opened for traffic on July 11. Though not so large as the San Francisco and New York bridges, Tancarville, a mile long and half a mile in suspension, ranks as the seventh largest in the world. The pylons, 400 ft. high, are the loftiest yet built of concrete for suspension bridges. The undertaking has used 58,000 cubic metres of concrete and 15,000 metric tons of steel. The graceful lines of this enormous structure—raised near the ruins of the famous castle of the Counts of Tancarville—are in harmony with the surrounding landscape. The weight of the cables is twice the weight of the Eiffel Tower; uncoiled they would stretch for 15,000 miles, nearly twice the diameter of the earth. To anchor the cables in the Vernier marshland on the Seine, a triangular block of concrete was constructed, as large as the Arc de Triomphe. The roadway is 13 yards wide and can take 1,500 vehicles an hour.

Linking the two parts of Normandy, the bridge will cut the mileage to the west and the south of France by half.

SELF-SUPPORTING DOMES.—Mr. Richard Buckminster Fuller, the American inventor, has been responsible for notable designs of many kinds, including a streamlined three-wheel motor car, a die-stamped metal bathroom complete with equipments, a hexagonal prefabricated house suspended from a central mast, and, lastly, a self-supporting dome. In these self-supporting domes, based on geodesic methods, the structure is a frame of metal, wood, or other material, and the covering is a skin, usually of plastic, stretched over it like a bathing-cap. Several of these domes have been constructed. The Ford dome, designed in 1953, covered a rotunda of 93 ft. span. It was erected in a month from 8½ tons only of aluminium, whereas, it is claimed, a steel dome of the same size would have weighed 160 tons. Mr. Fuller's dome for the Milan Triennale was built from sheets of packaging cardboard, scored, folded and stapled. When called upon by the United States Marine Corps to produce a portable all-purpose type, which would supersede tents, semi-permanent structures, and permanent structures, he invented a dome of a paper-board type, 36 ft. in diameter, which could be transported whole by helicopter and thrown away when unwanted. A 31-ft. dome has been put on the summit of Mount Washington, New Hampshire, where some of the highest land wind velocities occur, and no other type of structure has been able to stand up. At the trade fair at Rabul was a nylon-covered 100 ft. dome, transported in one aircraft, and erected by unskilled labour in two days. American industry is beginning to make use of Mr. Fuller's geodesic structures. There is such a dome at Honolulu, designed in aluminium, 145 ft. across without interior supports, which holds 2,000 people, and was built in two days. At Baton Rouge, Louisiana, is a dome 384 ft. across, believed to be the largest free-span building in the world; but this will have to take second place to an aluminium dome at Montreal, 525 feet in diameter, which is designed to cover a business centre containing 65 shops, exhibition halls, an auditorium, a nursery, and parking for 2,700 cars.

SHETLANDS SILVER HOARD.—The hoard of articles discovered by Professor A. C. O'Dell in St. Ninian's Island, Shetlands, was analysed in the British Museum, under the direction of Dr. Plenderleith. The surprising discovery was made that all these objects, dating from the eighth century, which were supposed to be of bronze, were of silver, in many cases silver-gilt, and with inlays of blue or brown glass and in one case of red enamel. The silver was a base silver, with a heavy proportion of copper, which had produced the green corrosion. Delicate treatment was required to clean, repair and consolidate the objects. The hanging bowl required eighteen separate operations, and even then the cleaned metal of this and other objects was found to contain unstable minerals so that they had to be put in hermetically sealed cases containing silica elements to extract the humidity from the air. All the objects were made in Scotland, although the designs have affinities to English and Irish work. The spoon, with the little dog on the pricker licking the bowl, was never hung, has the rings awkwardly set and would, if used, have distorted the bowl. The silver bowl is the only example extant. The horse-shoe shaped objects are strap-ends. They might have been fixed to a silk belt of a wealthy chieftain, or attached to a religious vestment. On each face of one of these strap-ends there is an inscription in Latin. On one side it reads: "IN NOMINE DEI SUMMI" ("In the name of God the Highest"), a common Celtic formula. The inscription on the other side has possible versions: "RES ADKILIS (PRES)B-(YTER)IS S(AN)CTIO" ("The property of Adkil the holy priest") or "RESAD FILI SPIRITUS S(AN)CTIO" ("— of the Son and Holy Spirit"). In each case the final "O" is considered to be an ornamental filler. (See WHITAKER'S ALMANACK, 1959.)

SHIP PROPULSION BY EXHAUST GAS.—The Morar, a ship which looks like an ordinary ore carrier, which has been built on the Clyde, is propelled by free piston engines. This machinery, though invented more than 20 years ago, was so radical a departure from the traditional steam turbines and diesels that industry declined to accept it. Only in recent years has it been installed, mainly in France, in power stations, railway locomotives, and small coastal ships. The merit of the design is said to lie in its simplicity. It is a twin-cylinder horizontally opposed diesel, with no crankshaft, in which the pistons, oscillating freely back and forth, supply compressed exhaust gas to drive a turbine. Boilers and heat exchangers are dispensed with; the gasifiers are so simple that one can be stripped down and reassembled in an hour. The result is a small, lightweight engine with exceptional flexibility and ease of maintenance. The Morar's machinery consists of three gasifiers supplying 2,500 s.h.p. which will drive the 9,250-ton ship at 11 knots. Even with one gasifier out of action she can make more than eight knots. Noise and vibration have been reduced and fuel consumption, at 49 lb./s.h.p./hour, is less than with a steam turbine but more than with a diesel.

STONEHENGE 3,670 YEARS OLD.—New evidence about the date of Stonehenge, discovered from radio-carbon tests of red deer antler tips unearthed on the site, suggests that the trilithon stones were erected 3,670 years ago—a date already estimated by Professor Stuart Piggott and Professor R. J. C. Atkinson. Professor Piggott stated that several large pieces of red deer antler, used as picks or levers, were found when excavations unearthed a ramp descending to a depth of over 6 ft. below the modern turf level, and leading towards the remaining upright of the Great Trilithon, Stone 56. According to tests, the age of the antler tips was 3,670 years, with a margin of 150 years either way, thus giving a date of between 1860 and 1560 B.C. On archaeological grounds, Professor Piggott and Professor Atkinson date the erection of these trilithons to the beginning of the Wessex culture, 1600 to 1550 B.C. The tests therefore broadly confirmed their views about the date of this part of the monument. The Ministry of Works is to carry out further work at Stonehenge. A lintel in the outer circle is to be removed, the uprights made vertical, and the lintel replaced. The surviving upright stone of one of five trilithons forming the "horseshoe" within the outer circle is to be straightened. The other upright stone and the lintel lie in pieces. A print of 1574 shows that the fall must have occurred before that date. An archaeological investigation will be made at the bases of these stones.

"STREET OF THE DEAD" AT IONA.—One result of the summer excavations on the island of Iona was the discovery of the outline of St. Columba's original monastery, which was founded by the saint in A.D. 563. The enclosure was defined by a ditch, forming a rough rhomboid, 1,200 ft. by 500 ft., the eastern side of which runs through the present abbey. Within this area a small cell, believed to have been used by St. Columba for sleeping, was uncovered. Fragmentary foundations of other cells were found on the west side of the cloister; and in a field south of the abbey were revealed traces of larger buildings defined by large postholes and long "sleeper-beam" trenches which would have held a split tree-trunk as a sill for vertical wooden members. Another discovery was the "street of the dead" (Sraid nam marbh), a highway 7 ft. wide constructed entirely of red granite boulders, which ran inland from a landing-place on the east side of Iona to the Nunnery (founded circa A.D. 1200), and thence to the Releig Orain (St. Oran's cemetery), a chapel and royal burial ground which may date back to A.D. 860. From the Releig Orain, said to contain the graves of 48 Scottish, two Irish, one French, and two Norwegian kings, a length of the road, about 200 yards, was found running up to the buried gateway of the Benedictine precinct. A date not earlier than the thirteenth century, and not later than the sixteenth, seems probable for this road, which was last recorded as being visible in 1703.

TELESCOPE TO COST £660,000.—Approval has now been given for work on the Isaac Newton telescope, which was suspended because of financial stringency. This, said Lord Selkirk, the First Lord of the Admiralty, would give Britain the opportunity of regaining a leading international position in astronomy and astrophysics. The telescope, which will be erected in the grounds of the Royal Greenwich Observatory at Herstmonceux Castle in Sussex, is a project sponsored by the Royal Society at the instance of the Royal Astronomical Society. The estimated cost is £660,000, divided equally between the Admiralty and the Treasury. The telescope will be the largest in the world outside the United States and two and three-quarter times as big as the present telescope at Herstmonceux. It will have a 98 in. aperture, weigh approximately 100 tons, and take five or six years to install. A glassed-in visitors' gallery of the same type as that installed in the 200-in. telescope on Mount Palomar (the largest telescope in the world) will be provided.

TELEVISION AND HOME LIFE.—Dr. W. A. Belson, formerly psychologist in the B.B.C. research department, explained to the British Association the effect of television on family behaviour. Television either produced a distinct disruption of family affairs during the evening, or it brought the family together in a warm, cooperative atmosphere. He sampled 400 adult viewers in London and questioned adults from 150 viewer homes. Very few viewers said that its influence on the family had been bad; about half of them said that the total effect had been good for family life, and the rest said it had been neither good nor bad. Talk during programmes tended to be brief. The break for advertisements was the time for talk, but it stopped when the programme started again. Many families hurried to get through meals in time for viewing, and in many cases meals were eaten while watching television. Frequently people carried on with something else while viewing, reading, knitting, sewing, or ironing. While in some homes there was a fairly strict enforcement of a reasonable bed time, in others there was not and it was quite usual for children to plead to stay up to view and to be allowed to do so. In spite of elements of discord, television was markedly an occasion for family gatherings, some of them compact and cosy. In some homes the wife was left to finish various jobs while the family went in to view. This seemed to be a point of friction. Apart from chores and talking, the hardest bit of family activities appeared to be the provision by the family of its own entertainment. In homes where the wife was left to finish the chores it was quite possible that she would have been left to finish them even if there were no television. Silent circles around the set would often mean that father was at home instead of being at the "pub". "Shush-ing" and friction in the viewing room might for many have replaced outright discord and conflict.

TELEVISION FROM THE SIGNAL BOX.—A closed circuit television system operating from the main signal box at King's Cross station, London, which will provide key station officials with information on the running of main line trains into the terminus, was put into operation. Something similar is used for relaying information on an American Air Force station in Britain, at a stockbroker's office and on a South African racecourse, but British Railways are the first railway to use it. The system is installed by Decca Radar Ltd. and is known as Deccafex. British Railways, it has been admitted, are under criticism because they do not give information to the public at the railway stations. King's Cross station covers 16½ acres and has a staff of a thousand. It is hoped that the new system will get information over the large area involved to those in supervisory positions without expecting them to stand at the end of a telephone line all the time.

THIRTY THOUSAND SUMS A SECOND.—One of the largest and fastest electronic computing machines in the world known as Ace (Automatic Computing Engine) has been installed at the National Physical Laboratory, Teddington. Very fast computers of this type are required for many problems, of which design calculations for high-speed aircraft and nuclear reactors are typical examples. Besides performing additions and subtractions at a rate of 30,000 a second Ace can multiply at a rate of 2,000 sums a second and divide at a rate of 600 sums a second. The cost of the machine was about £250,000. Perhaps the most interesting mechanical assemblies in Ace are the four magnetic drums, which rotate so accurately at 12,000 revolutions a minute that arrival at a given point of a magnetic spot one hundredth of an inch long, travelling at 200 miles an hour, is timed to 9 millionth of a second. These drums form part of the number store, or memory, of the machine, and an idea of its speed can be gained from the fact that they are the slowest part of the number store.

TORTOISE 200-YEAR-OLD.—Sir James Harford, on retiring from his position as Governor of St. Helena, reported on the history and condition of Jonathan, the 200-year-old giant tortoise, which has long been, after the house where Napoleon lived, the principal attraction of the island. He refuses to believe the legend that Jonathan and Napoleon were friends, as the ex-Emperor never set foot in Plantation House, the Governor's home, where the tortoise had a fenced paddock. Jonathan came to St. Helena on a slow boat from Seychelles or Mauritius. Today he tips the scale at several hundredweight, and from outstretched neck to rear end of his shell measures five feet. He lives on grass and bananas, skin and all. At night he retires to a clump of pampas grass, to appear next morning between seven and eight. Jonathan is not too friendly. He can be ridden by adults and children, but this sometimes leads him to buck like a bronco in slow motion. He also has a habit of settling down like a car whose four tyres have been simultaneously deflated, on the laws during a croquet match.

Repeated buffets near the rear end of the shell persuade him to move on—a few steps, when he sinks down again.

TRAFALGAR SQUARE 100,000 YEARS AGO.—The presence of the remains of mammals no longer living in Britain, including elephant, hippopotamus and lion, in the Trafalgar Square area, has been known for 200 years. During 1957 further animal remains, associated with fragments of plants, were found at depths of 15 ft. to 30 ft. during excavations for Uganda House, on the south side of the Square. The animals represented are the hippopotamus, the straight-tusked elephant, the rhinoceros, the large wild ox, red deer, fallow deer, lion and bear. They are isolated bones swept down by the river. The fossilized dung of a carnivorous animal suggests that the hyena may also have been present. Shells of sixty species of land and river molluscs, remains of insects, some retaining their bright colours, and stems and seeds of plants no longer native in Britain, were also found. The plant remains obtained from Trafalgar Square show that the deposit dates from the last Interglacial Period, about 100,000 years ago.

TRAWSFYNYDD NUCLEAR STATION.—Work began in July on the £65 million nuclear power station at Trawsfynydd, the first in Wales. Designed by Mr. Basil Spence and fitted into its surroundings by a landscape architect, it will be open in 1964. It will supply 500 megawatts into the national grid. The construction work will employ between 2,500 and 3,000 men, and once the building is finished the number will drop to about 350. The Trawsfynydd station will work in conjunction with a pumped storage hydro-electric station at Blaenau Ffestiniog, supplying current at night, when demand is low, to pump Blaenau's water back into its reservoir for use during the day. Trawsfynydd Lake, which was created to supply water to the hydro-electric station at Maentwrog, will also provide 35 million gallons of water an hour to cool the nuclear station's steam condensers. This will raise the temperature of the lake, which, it has been suggested, will encourage sub-tropical flora and fauna.

VERULAMUM: SHOP CELLAR FINDS.—During the summer, excavations were carried on in the central part of the Roman city of Verulamium on either side of Bluehouse Hill. On the Watling Street frontage timber-framed shops, which were burnt down about A.D. 160, and later rebuilt in stone, were uncovered. One of these shops contained a cellar, which was walled with planks nailed to close-set uprights of wood of about 1 ft. section and also seems to have had a wooden floor. On the floor were many iron tools including a plane, and also a bronze statuette about 8 in. high of a goddess, nude except for an elaborate crown of fruits and a robe loosely knotted around the thighs and billowing out behind. Her left hand grasps a pomegranate. She is probably Ceres. Elsewhere two large town houses were uncovered, one containing a second-century mosaic and much coloured wall plaster, some of it painted with birds and human masks, the other a late fourth-century building also containing mosaics. Evidence for the occupation of Verulamium well into the fifth century is provided by the history of this site, for after the abandonment and collapse of the house it was occupied by a large rectangular structure with buttresses, perhaps a barn, and then by a pipe line of hollow timbers joined by iron collars. This water main cuts through the foundations of barn and house, and suggests that piped water was available in the city at a date contemporary with or later than that of the visit of St. Germanus in A.D. 429.

WILD LIFE ENDANGERED.—The disaster to big game and other animals threatened by the lake of the Kariba dam drew attention to the fate of wild life in other parts of the world, and to the fear among naturalists that many species of fauna will shortly become extinct. Mr. Richard Fitter gave a list of threatened birds and animals thus endangered. The Carolina parakeet, once widespread in the eastern half of the United States, has disappeared; and the American bison, whose last 15,000,000 were killed in twelve years, survives only in private zoos and the Yellowstone National Park. There are now only 250 European bison left in the world, including 95 in Poland, and a smaller number in the Duke of Bedford's collection at Woburn. The auroch, whose vast herds were on the plains of the Orange Free State in the last century, and Steller's sea cow, have disappeared, and in the list of threatened animals compiled by the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, are the Indian lion, the three Asiatic rhinos, and the Bactrian camel. In Hawaii 16 birds are definitely, and 10 probably extinct, and 13 more are on the danger list. In this connection it is interesting to note that New Zealand's flightless takahē (notornis), long believed to be extinct, was rediscovered a few years ago, and three specimens are still alive.

XI-ZERO: NEW PARTICLE.—After the examination of 70,000 photographs of atomic particles in a tank of liquid oxygen, scientists of the University of California found the particle Xi-zero, which was deduced by mathematical calculation by Dr. K. Nishijima, a Japanese physicist, and Dr. Murray Gell-Mann, of the California Institute of Technology. The Xi-zero particle left no tracks of its own to be photographed, because it has no electrical charge, but its presence was made evident in the picture by changes in the path and nature of other particles. It is calculated that Xi-zero weighs about 2.570 times as much as an electron, and has a lifetime of one ten-billionth of a second. The photograph in which Xi-zero was detected showed a K particle's track which had come to a sudden end. It was assumed which at this point the K interacted to produce two neutral particles. These left no trace but at some distance away from where the K track ended two V-shaped tracks appeared, slightly askew.

YARD AND POUND RE-MEASURED.—Six standards laboratories, in Great Britain, Canada, New Zealand, the United States, South Africa, and Australia, agreed to adopt new definitions for an international yard and an international pound. All non-metric calibrations carried out by the laboratories in science or technology will now be made in terms of the new definitions, which conform to the recommendations of the Board of Trade Departmental Committee on Weights and Measures Legislation. The international yard will be fixed at 0.9144 of a metre and the pound at 0.45359237 of a kilogram. (The metric system is in tune with the motion of the earth, a gram being equal to the weight in vacuo of a cubic centimetre of pure water at 4 deg. C. and a metre to 1/10,000,000 of a meridional quadrant of the earth.) These new scientific standards will have no relevance to the imperial obligatory standard measures used in trade in Britain. Their importance is to abolish the minute discrepancies in various national definitions of the length of a yard. With the increasing necessity for greater accuracy in scientific usage of the yard as a measurement in the Commonwealth and the United States, the new definitions will assist calibration in precision engineering and ensure conformity between the now differing national practices. The new scientific yard will be slightly longer than the imperial standard yard. The No. 1 Standard Yard, which was cast in bronze in 1845 and is kept in the vaults of the standard weights and measures department of the Board of Trade, is shrinking. Something of the sort was thought likely in 1932 and, in 1947, after comparisons with copies of the imperial standard and other standards, it was observed to be shortening at the rate of more than one-millionth of an inch a year. The National Physical Laboratory ascribes this change to a rearrangement of the molecules within the bar. No metal is entirely stable.

NATIONAL NATURE RESERVES

Ten new nature reserves were declared by the Nature Conservancy (see p. 413) in the year ended September 30, 1959, and additions to existing reserves were also made. Permits are required for access to the reserves marked * and for access to some parts of reserves marked †. New nature reserves are:—

Breconshire.—Craig-y-Cilau (157 acres, overlooking Usk Valley). Probably the best-known of the botanically interesting Carboniferous Limestone outcrops in Breconshire. Notable for the variety of rare or local trees which grow there, including the Large and Small-leaved Limes and four species of Sorbus, all endemic to Britain and two not known outside Breconshire. One of these is the rare Lesser Whitebeam (Sorbus minima).

Caernarvonshire.—Coed Dolgarrog† (170 acres). This Reserve is an excellent example of an Oak Wood on the drier north-eastern side of Snowdonia; many of the trees are intermediate in kind between the Sessile and Pedunculate Oak. It is of particular interest ecologically on account of the variety of underlying rocks and the clarity with which their effects on the vegetation are displayed. Also included within the Reserve are the Arddale Alder Woodlands.

Coed Gorswen† (33 acres).—The sub-soil of Coed Gorswen is a glacial drift with boulders and has been woodland for a very long time. The Oaks here consist of a heterogeneous population of intermediate forms between the Sessile and Pedunculate Oak. Other trees present in some quantity include Elm, Ash and Alder. The ground flora is typical of rather base-rich soils and of a similar type to that found in the Oak woods of the Midland Plain.

Carmarthenshire.—Allt Rhyd-y-groest† (46 acres). The Reserve overlies shales of Silurian Age and extends between 500 and 1,000 feet on the west side of the steep flanks of the Doethie Valley. The woodlands are dominated by the Sessile Oak; a number of the trees are well-grown and display a vigour which is not often seen in equivalent woods elsewhere in Wales. The drier, more eroded slopes are clothed in Sweet Vernal-grass together with mosses at the lower levels, and Sheep's Fescue higher up the slope.

Merionethshire.—*Coed Camlyn (57 acres, ½ mile south of Maentwrog). A good example of a Sessile Oak wood under rather high rainfall (estimated 60"–70" per year) with a characteristic "moist" ground flora. The woods are situated on a stabilized scree-slope with local rock outcrops, but the long continuous slope is not rocky in general character. Sessile Oak is the dominant tree and at the base of the slope it averages about 60 feet in height; higher up the height diminishes, being only 20 to 30 feet at the upper limit of the wood. At this level, where crag outcrops occur, the tree height in some places does not exceed 8 to 10 feet.

The Rhinogs (991 acres).—The Harlech Dome and its borders display the thickest succession of Cambrian rocks to be seen in Britain. It forms a region of desolate and almost uninhabited moorland with high, rugged block-like mountains where the Rhinog Grits break the surface. The two principal peaks are Rhinog Fawr (2,362 feet) and Rhinog Fach (2,330 feet); the Reserve covers two blocks of these uplands, lying on each side of Bwlch Drws Ardudwy about five miles east of Harlech. The terrain is rugged and wild in the extreme, with a considerable amount of exposed rock in the form of steep crags, broken slopes and block scree.

Pembrokeshire.—Skomer (722 acres).—The island is the landward edge of the ridge of varied igneous rocks of Ordovician age, jutting west from the mainland through Skomer to form Grassholm. Each year great numbers of sea-birds breed on Skomer, as well as a strong colony of the Atlantic Grey Seal. Probably the most notable breeding species is the Manx Shearwater, a bird scarcely found on the mainland, but nesting in tens of thousands on Skomer and Skokholm. The Puffin colony is, next to that of St. Kilda, probably the largest in the British Isles. Guillemots, razor-bills and several species of gull also nest. Apart from the sea-birds and seals the island is well-known for the "Skomer Vole"; this differs from the common bank vole in its larger size, extreme tameness and brighter colour.

SCOTLAND

Aberdeenshire.—Sands of Forvie (1,774 acres). The Reserve consists of a broad foreshore backed by a line of dunes, behind which are slacks and more stable dunes passing inland to dune heath and permanent rough pastures. Birds breeding within the area include Eider, Shoveller, Shelduck, Red Grouse, Little, Sandwich, Arctic and Common Terns and Fulmar. Among the dunes there are important prehistoric sites which have yielded stone implements and pottery. These sites are of the Late Bronze Age and Early Iron Age and comprise stone circles, a flat ring cairn and kitchen middens.

Kirkcudbright.—Kirkconnell Flow (383 acres, 4 miles South of Dumfries).—The chief importance of this Reserve lies in its variety of vegetation types, including Scots pine woods, growing in a variety of conditions, birch scrub, small remnant areas of raised bog and a range of aquatic habitats. Although pine and birch woods are prominent in a number of Highland Reserves, Kirkconnell Flow is the only Reserve in Lowland Scotland in which they occur. There is a considerable zoological interest, particularly in the invertebrate animals such as insects and spiders.

Shetland.—Haaf Gruney (44 acres).—A low, green, fertile islet, with a flora resembling that of similar areas of Serpentine rock on Unst. Chromate was at one time mined and Storm Petrels breed in the debris from the shafts. Other nesting birds include the Black Guillemot and Fulmar. There are no wild mammals.

Brief details are given below of all national nature reserves declared to September 30, 1959.

*Bedfordshire.—Knocking Hoe (22 acres).—Small relic of a particular type of close-grazed chalk downland turf.

*Berkshire.—Cothill (4 acres).—Shows succession from open water through various swamp associations to woodland of alder, birch, ash, etc.

*Cheshire.—Wybunbury Moss (27 acres, 3½ miles S. of Crewe).—Example of "Schwingmoor" bog.

Devonshire.—Yarner Wood (360 acres).—Woodland. Axmouth-Lyme Regis Undercliffs† (794 acres, between Seaton and Lyme Regis).—Of geological interest.

*Dorset.—Arne (9 acres, 2½ miles east of Wareham).—Shows transition from dry woodland to salt marsh. Hartland Moor (224 acres, 1½ miles south-east of Wareham).—Dorset Heath and other rare bog plants. Morden Bog (367 acres, near Wareham).—Southern heathland.

*Essex.—Hales Wood (20 acres, 2½ miles north-east of Saffron Walden).—Example of oak-ash woodland on chalky boulder clay.

Hampshire.—Old Winchester Hill (140 acres, 2½ miles south of West Meon, between Petersfield and Winchester).—Rough chalk grassland with yew and other chalk-loving trees.

Hertfordshire.—Tring Reservoirs† (49 acres, 1 mile north of Tring).—Important sites for the observation of breeding and migratory birds. Also a habitat for rare plants.

Huntingdonshire.—Monks' Wood† (387 acres, some 5 miles north-east of Huntingdon).—Example of woodlands on Oxford clay. Rare plants and insects. *Woodwalton Fen (514 acres, 10 miles south-east of Peterborough).—Rich flora and fauna. *Holme Fen (640 acres).—Adjoins the site of Whittlesey Mere, drained in 1851. Raised-bog flora with uncommon plants and insects.

*Kent.—Blean Woods (81 acres).—Sessile oak with hazel and hornbeam, coppice, chestnut and birch, and a variety of unusual plants. Important for the presence of the Heath Fritillary butterfly. *Ham Street Woods (240 acres, 6 miles south of Ashford). *High Halstow (131 acres).—Includes the largest heronry in England. Swanscombe Skull Site (Geological Reserve) (5 acres, 4 miles east of Dartford).—In 1935-36 parts of a human skull, thought to be closely ancestral to modern man and the earliest known in Europe, were discovered.

Lancashire.—North Fen (5 acres, 4 miles east of Coniston).—Vegetational succession of open water, rich in mineral salts, to fen, carr and bog. Mainly woodland with signs of sphagnum bog development. Bletham Bog (5 acres, 3½ miles south of Ambleside).—Example of development of sphagnum bog from wet willow woodland. *Roudsea Wood (287 acres, about 10 miles west of Grange-over-Sands).—Yew, oak and ash woodlands. *Rusland Moss (30 acres).—A raised bog, only 20 feet above sea level, which originated in a lake; it retains most of the characteristic bog plants and animals.

Norfolk.—Bure Marshes (1,019 acres, 9 miles north of Norwich).—Habitat of Broadland mammals (including the otter and coypu), insects and plants. Hickling Broad† (1,204 acres, 10 miles north-west of Great Yarmouth).—The rich flora supports some notable insects, including the Swallowtail Butterfly, Harriers, Bearded Tits and Bitterns breed there together with ducks, waders and other interesting birds. Scolt Head (1,821 acres, 3 miles north of Burnham Market).—Famous for its bird life and of interest for study of coastal evolution, etc. Winterton Dunes (259 acres, 8 miles north of Great Yarmouth).—A wide range of heath, bog and dune habitats.

Oxfordshire.—Aslon Rowant (70 acres).—Displays stages in ecological succession from previously open chalk grassland to scrub and woodland. Wychwood (647 acres, 7 miles west of Woodstock).—Mixed woodland, chiefly oak standards and high scrub, on a wide range of soils.

Soke of Peterborough.—Castor Hanglands† (218 acres, 4½ miles north-west of Peterborough).—Heath and woodland on Oolitic Limestone and calcareous clays, with a wide range of plant life.

Somerset.—Bridgwater Bay† (6,076 acres, 12 miles south of Weston-super-Mare).—Protected area for wildfowl. *Rodney Stoke (86 acres, 2 miles south-east of Cheddar).—Example of a Mendip Ashwood. Fauna includes Badger, Buzzard and many species of Mollusc.

Suffolk.—Cavenham Heath (208 acres). Orfordness-Havergate† (514 acres, 1½ miles south of Orford).—Famous in post-war years as the site to which the Avocet has returned. *Thetford Heath (225 acres, 2½ miles south of Thetford).—Breckland birds are well-represented. Of outstanding interest are the fossil "stone stripes". Westleton Heath (117 acres, 2 miles south of Dunwich).—A good example of characteristic East Suffolk heathlands, most of which have been reclaimed. Interesting bird life.

Sussex.—Kingley Vale (230 acres).—Displays all stages of yew wood development. Lullington Heath (155 acres, 3½ miles north-west of Scaford).—Unploughed chalk heath with interesting flora.

Westmorland.—Moor House† (10,000 acres, bounded on the north and east by the Tees).—Includes a Field Station for research on bog growth, peat erosion, effects of grazing and burning, etc.

Wiltshire.—Fyfield Down (612 acres, 3 miles west of Marlborough).—High chalk downland rich in Sarsen stones.

Worcestershire.—Wren's Nest (74 acres).—A classical exposure of Upper Silurian rocks. The Wenlock Limestone has yielded an extensive fossil fauna.

Yorkshire.—Ling Gill (12 acres).—Small wooded ravine cut into the limestone; the flora is very rich.

WALES

Anglesey.—Newborough Warren and Ynys Llanddwyn† (1,392 acres, 6 miles west of Caernarvon).

Brecon.—Craig Cerrig Gleistad (698 acres, 6 miles south-west of Brecon).—An Old Red Sandstone crag; cliffs and gullies include uncommon plants and birds, including arctic-alpine plants. Craig-y-Cilau (157 acres). See above.

Caernarvonshire.—Coed Dolgarrog† (170 acres). See above. *Coed Tremadoc (49 acres, 1½ miles north-east of Portmadoc).—Survival of oak woodland, formerly found on cliff and rock faces in Wales. Complex vegetation. Cwm Idwal (984 acres, 6 miles west of Capel Curig).—Wide variety of volcanic rocks with an interesting flora.

Cardiganshire.—Coed Rheidol (80 acres, 10 miles east of Aberystwyth).—Examples of moist, mossy Sessile Oak Woodlands with rich associated flora and fauna. *Cors Tregaron (1,842 acres, 2 miles south-east of Aberystwyth).—Actively growing raised bog and a large area of peat moss.

Carmarthenshire.—Allt Rhyd-y-Groes† See above.

Glamorgan.—Gower Coast Reserve (116 acres). Magnificent stretch of limestone cliffs; rich flora and interesting bird life.

Merionethshire.—Cader Idris (969 acres, about 4 miles south-west of Dolgelley). Variety of Ordo-vician volcanic lavas with intrusive igneous rocks interbedded with fossiliferous mudstones and slates. Coed Camlyn (57 acres).—See above. Monja Harlech (445 acres).—Extensive system of acidic and lime-rich dunes, estuarine salt-marshes, freshwater swamps and pools, of great biological interest. The Rhinogs (991 acres).—See above.

Pembrokeshire.—Skomer (722 acres).—See above.

SCOTLAND

Aberdeenshire.—Sands of Forvie (1,774 acres).—See above.

Bute.—Glen Diomhan (24 acres in Arran).—A steep-sided post-glacial gorge between Neall nan Damh (1,870 feet) on the west and Ben Bhiorach (1,572 feet) on the east.

Dumfriesshire.—*Caerlaverock (6,226 acres).—Salt marsh and foreshore or mud between the River Nith and the Lochar Water. Noted winter haunt for wildfowl, particularly Pinkfooted and Barnacle Geese. Tynron Juniper Wood (12 acres). Dense growth of juniper up to about 10 feet high, unmatched in South of Scotland.

Fife.—Isle of May (140 acres, at the mouth of the Firth of Forth). 218 species of birds have been observed here. A Bird Observatory and Field Station was set up in 1947. *Morton Lochs (59 acres, on Tentsmuir).—Artificial lochs on a main migration route of wildfowl and waders. Tentsmuir Point (92 acres).—Area for the study of coastal accretion and plant colonization.

Inverness-shire.—Cairngorms (39,689 acres).—Flora includes the native Scots pine and birchwoods, moorland vegetation and arctic-alpine plants. *Rhum (26,400 acres, 7 miles south of Skye).—Small mountains of exceptional geological interest. Interesting fauna. Loch Druidnberg, South Uist (2,577 acres).—The most important surviving ancestral breeding ground in Britain of the native greylag goose.

Kirkcudbright.—Kirkconnell Flow (383 acres). See above. Silverflowe (472 acres, 12 miles N.N.W. of New Galloway).—Seven raised bogs, undrained and virtually undisturbed.

Perthshire.—Rannoch Moor (3,485 acres). Exemplifies shallow, high-altitude blanket bog.

Ross-shire.—Beinn Eighe (10,450 acres, 24 miles from Kyle of Lochalsh).—Remnant of Caledonian pinewood. North Rona and Sula Sgeir (320 acres, 47 miles north-west off Cape Wrath).—Home of the Atlantic Grey Seal and believed to hold about half the world's population of this seal. Rassall Ashwood (202 acres, near the head of Loch Kishorn, Wester Ross).—Example of ashwood growing on limestone pavement.

Shetland.—Haaf Grimey (44 acres).—See above. Hermaness (2,383 acres in the north-west of Unst).—Important breeding station of the Great Skua, Arctic Skua, Red-throated Diver, Eider Duck and Arctic Tern. Large gannetry and other seabird colonies. Noss (774 acres).—Mainly rough moorland. On the cliffs there are important seabird colonies, and on the moorland Great and Arctic Skuas occur.

Stirlingshire.—Clairinsh (15 acres).—Island in southern part of Loch Lomond; one of the few oak woods remaining in Scotland in which mixed-age composition has been largely retained and regeneration has continued naturally.

Sutherland.—Inchnadamph (3,200 acres).—Includes the Karst type of limestone country with sink holes, underground streams and caves.

Saint Kilda.—St. Kilda Reserve (2,107 acres, 45 miles west of the Outer Hebrides).—Seabird colonies, including Gannets, Fulmars and Puffins.

THE NOBEL PRIZES

The Nobel Prizes are awarded each year from the income of a trust fund established by the Swedish scientist Alfred Nobel, the inventor of dynamite, who died on December 10, 1896, leaving a fortune of £1,750,000. They are awarded to those who have contributed most to the common good in the domain of (a) Physics; (b) Chemistry; (c) Physiology or Medicine; (d) Literature; (e) Peace. The first awards were made in 1901 on the fifth anniversary of Nobel's death. The awarding authorities are the Swedish Academy of Science—(a) Physics; (b) Chemistry; the Royal Caroline Institute, Stockholm—(c) Physiology or Medicine; the Swedish Academy—(d) Literature; a committee of five persons elected by the Norwegian Storting—(e) Peace. The Trust is administered by the Board of Directors of the Nobel Foundation ("Nobelstiftelsens Styrelse"), Stockholm. The Board consists of four members and two deputy members appointed by the awarding authorities; the Swedish Government appoints a chairman and a vice-chairman.

The nationality of prize-winners is indicated as follows: (a) Great Britain; (b) U.S.A.; (c) France; (d) Sweden; (e) Belgium; (f) U.S.S.R.; (g) Germany; (h) Netherlands; (i) Switzerland; (k) Denmark; (l) Norway; (m) Spain; (n) Poland; (o) Austria; (p) Italy; (q) India; (r) Hungary; (s) Canada; (t) Canada; (u) Chile; (v) Argentine; (w) Japan; (x) Portugal; (y) Irish Free State; (z) Republic of Ireland; (aa) South Africa; (bb) Iceland; (cc) China. The distribution by nationalities is shown at foot of table.

For prizewinners for the years 1901-1942, see earlier editions of WHITAKER'S ALMANACK.

LITERATURE OF THE YEAR

Book Production 1958-59

DURING 1958 British publishers issued a total of 22,143 titles, of which 16,172 were new books and 5,971 were reprints or new editions. These figures were the highest on record, the total being 1,424 more than the 1957 figure (20,719) which reached the 20,000 mark for the first time in the history of British publishing. The increase was distributed over most of the main categories of books, but by far the greatest increase was in fiction. The downward trend in the output of fiction, which had become marked in recent years, was arrested and reversed in 1957; the 1958 fiction total (4,166) was more than 400 up on the previous year's. (Nevertheless, the current output of fiction remains well below the pre-war level; in 1937 the figure was 5,099.) A notable feature of the book production of 1958 was that whereas the output of new books was 9 per cent higher than in 1957, the increase in the production of reprints and new editions was less than 1 per cent. That this should be so in what has with good reason been termed the Reprint Age was doubtless due to the fact that today's costs of book manufacture prohibit the issue of a reprint except in a large edition.

This new high record of 22,143 titles is regarded by most people in the book trade itself to be a somewhat alarming phenomenon when considered in relation to the size of the book-buying public. In 1958 publishers' receipts amounted to £63,600,000 (of which £23,800,000 came from overseas), a record figure higher by £3,000,000 than the 1957 total. The Publishers Association's annual report for 1958-59 expressed the view that "as the average sale per title drops, as it is bound to do unless the public can be induced to spend far more money on books than it does at present, the need to charge still higher retail prices is intensified. The law of diminishing returns then begins to operate." Seen against this uneasy economic background the fortunes of the unestablished creative writer who does not deliberately aim at the popular market become more adverse, and the sponsorship of the experimental "uncommercial" book, upon the fostering of which the development of literature has always depended, more uncertain. Fortunately, there are compensatory factors. The literary taste of the general public is indisputably of a higher level than at any previous age and with the increasing spread of higher education the number of readers eager to discover the best books available to them continually grows. This is borne out by the huge sales, often in paperback editions, of books which only a generation ago would have been considered likely to command only a select readership.

Obscene Publications

The Obscene Publications Bill, details of which are given on pages 352 and 356, received the Royal Assent on July 29. This was the result of five years' work by the committee formed under the auspices of the Society of Authors at the end of 1954, with Sir Alan Herbert as chairman. In the final stages the promoters of the measure in Parliament had a hard struggle to get the Government to accept a provision to which authors attached the greatest importance, namely the admission of expert evidence regarding the literary, artistic, scientific or other merits of a work. The Government maintained that it was enough that there should be the new defence that a work was for the public good on the grounds that it was in the interests of science, literature, art or learning, or of other objects of general concern. The promoters' wishes, however, were carried in committee. Fears were expressed about the Government's provision that the giving or lending of obscene matter should be an offence under the Act, on the grounds that this might infringe the rights of the owners of private libraries. It was introduced to give protection to children and was incorporated into the Bill. The opposition felt that this left the Act open to narrow interpretation by the courts, as the Obscene Publications Act of 1858 had in the past been narrowly interpreted. On the whole, however, the Bill as it was passed is considered to have immeasurably improved the position of reputable publishers and authors and of genuine literature.

Problems of Foreign Trade

The Government announced the steps it proposed to take to remedy the situation whereby countries crying out for British books are unable to get them, while attractive, inexpensive books in the English language are pouring in from elsewhere. It is estimated, for example, that the Soviet Union alone produced 30 million books, many of them in English, for Asian and African countries during 1958. The White Paper, Overseas Information Services, was published by the Government in March, 1959, and was followed in June by a further report dealing specifically with the book problem. Most welcome to the book trade was the announcement of the Government's intention to enter into negotiations with the Governments of other countries in order to ease the currency restrictions which have handicapped British publishers for far too long. From the general point of view, great interest was taken in the proposal to subsidise low-priced paperback editions of selected titles. This, it was stated, would call for substantial expenditure by the Government. In September, Mr. A. L. P. Norrington, President of Trinity College, Oxford, was appointed chairman of the Advisory Committee on Book Title Selection.

The New Testament

The completion of a completely new translation of the New Testament from the original Greek into current English was announced at the beginning of 1959. The translation, which has been undertaken with the authority of all the major churches in Britain, except the Roman Catholic Church, will be available early in 1961, from the Oxford and Cambridge university presses. This is the first stage of the work of translating the whole Bible. The object is "to provide a Bible in the English language of today, free from the archaic language of the Authorised Version which, it is thought, encourages in many people the feeling that the Scriptures have little relevance to our age".

The Printing Dispute

The dispute in the printing industry resulted in the closing down of book printing all over the country for a period of seven weeks. The stoppage was particularly unhappily timed from the point of view of publishers of educational books who regard July and August as their peak periods of work in preparation for the beginning of school and academic years in the autumn. In all branches of publishing books have had to be postponed, and an increase in printing costs was one immediate result of the settlement.

Items of Interest

A petition for an extension of copyright in the works of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas was signed by half a million people and presented to Parliament. The President of the Board of Trade said that he did not believe that such legislation would be acceptable or desirable. Copyright in the words ends in 1967, 50 years after the death of W. S. Gilbert.

The public libraries of Great Britain and Northern Ireland issued during the year 1957-58 a total of 431,863,000 books, an increase over the previous year by 12,435,000.

The first International Congress of Booksellers was held in London in June 1959. The Congress passed a resolution laying down certain principles regarding the bookseller and his position in modern society—that a book was first an instrument of human communication, a vessel of the spirit, and only second was it merchandise; that the bookseller lived by the market but for the spirit, and that "without the traditional bookshop cultural life is unimaginable".

Prizes for Literature

The Nobel Prize for Literature in 1958 was given to the Russian writer Boris Pasternak for his achievements in the field of modern lyric poetry and of the great Russian epic tradition. The Swedish Academy's secretary compared "Dr. Zhivago" with the works of Tolstoy and said that it was "a great achievement to have been able to complete in difficult circumstances a work of such dignity, high above all political party frontiers".

The Hawthornden Prize, which is given for a work of imaginative literature by an author under the age of 42, was given to Emyr Humphreys for "A Toy Epic".

COPYRIGHT

The Government Department dealing with Copyright is the Industrial Property Department, Board of Trade, 25 Southampton Bldgs., W.C.2.

Subject to the provisions of the Copyright Act, 1956, copyright subsists automatically without registration in every original literary, dramatic, musical and artistic work and continues to subsist until the end of the period of fifty years from the end of the calendar year in which the author died and shall then expire. Protection is conferred not only against reproduction but also against the public performance of a work without permission. Copyright may also subsist in sound recordings, cinematograph films and television and sound broadcasts. Libraries entitled to receive free copies of books published in the United Kingdom, are the British Museum, the Bodleian Library, Oxford, University Library, Cambridge, the National Library of Wales, the National Library of Scotland and Trinity College, Dublin.

Voluntary Registration at Stationers' Hall.—Compulsory registration at Stationers' Hall terminated on Dec. 31, 1923, but in the following year the Stationers' Company established a new Register in which Books and Fine Arts can be registered. A copy has to be filed at Stationers' Hall and certified copies of the entries are issued, the fees being 10s. for a Book, or a Fine Art; certified copies 10s. in either case. The fee for a search is 5s.

It had been specially written for the city and was given by the City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra under Meredith Davies.

DRAMATIC SUMMARY, 1958-1959

Among the notable theatrical events of the year was the opening of the Mermade, a new theatre on the banks of the Thames in the City of London. Planned on novel lines and brought into existence by the enthusiasm of that versatile actor, Bernard Miles, its first production, originally intended for a short run, but so successful that it played for several months, was a musical version of a comedy by Fielding, re-named Lock Up Your Daughters. Another theatre was restored to the West End when the Queen's was reopened after having been almost entirely rebuilt because of serious war damage. This also began well with a "recital" by Sir John Gielgud of a number of famous Shakespearean speeches under the title of Ages of Man, which was followed by The Aspern Papers, an adaptation by Sir Michael Redgrave of a novel by Henry James in which Sir Michael played the lead. The Old Vic varied its Shakespeare revivals by productions of some of the classics of Ibsen, Molière, Shelley and Congreve. Promising works were shown by two new authors, Willis Hall and Arnold Wisker; H. E. Bates, writer of many novels, turned one of his latest into a play; and Noel Coward, Clemence Dane, Tennessee Williams, Lionel Hale, Graham Green and Margaret and Hugh Williams were among well-known dramatists represented in the year's productions.

The following is a list of productions between Oct. 1, 1958, and Sept. 30, 1959:—

ADELPHI, Strand, W.C.2.—(1959) June 13. The French Mistress, by Sonnie Hale (Richard Bird, Hugh Wakefield, Marie-Claire Verlene and Rosamond Burne). Aug. 4. A Raisin In The Sun, by Lorraine Hansberry (Farle Hyman, Juanita Moore and Olga James).

THE FILMS, 1958-1959

Many countries were represented among the film productions shown in the West End during the year, the longest run being recorded by an American musical, Gigi, a version of one of Colette's romances, with which a new house, the Columbia, was inaugurated. British studios presented a number of successes, one of the most striking being Room At The Top, which received the British Film Academy's principal award for 1958, and another, The Horse's Mouth, was selected for the Royal Film Performance. Other British productions included The Boy And The Bridge, The Reluctant Debutante, The Mouse That Roared, Separate Tables and The Inn Of The Sixth Happiness. The knighthood conferred on Sir Alec Guinness was warmly welcomed both by the profession and the public.

The following is a list of the principal films shown publicly in London from Oct. 1, 1958, to Sept. 30, 1959:—

Independent Television Authority

14 Princes Gate, S.W.7

Set up under the Television Act, 1954, the Authority is responsible for the provision of television services and for the control and development of independent television in Great Britain; it owns and operates television stations, transmitting programmes provided by programme companies (see below) under contract to the Authority. Independent television is financed from advertising revenue and draws no income from licence fees or from other public funds. The Authority regulates the system under which the programme companies sell time for advertisements and has wide responsibilities for securing proper standards in the programmes. Independent television broadcasting was inaugurated on September 22, 1955, by a programme broadcast from the Authority's station at Croydon.

WIRELESS DEVELOPMENT AND BROADCASTING, 1958-59

INTERNATIONAL TELEVISION LINKS

On September 22, a fortnight's conference opened at Church House, Westminster, when one hundred representatives from Western Europe discussed the improvement of international television links. The conference was divided into three sections, which discussed respectively programmes, legal problems and technical progress. The programme section was concerned with the development of Eurovision, including arrangements for the televising of the Olympic Games from Rome in August, 1960. The legal section dealt with problems of copyright, contract and kindred matters, and the technical committee handled the exchange of sound recordings, development of stereophonic broadcasting, radio interference and the allocation of wavelengths.

B.B.C. SATELLITE STATIONS

The Postmaster-General, in a written parliamentary answer on June 24, described the B.B.C.'s new plan to extend and improve the coverage of television and v.h.f. sound services by building a series of low power satellite stations. The building programme, which would take three years to complete, was calculated to increase the B.B.C.'s television coverage from 98.7 per cent. to 99.2 per cent. of the population and the availability of the three sound services on v.h.f. from 96.4 per cent. to 97.6 per cent. During the three years in question, 14 television and 20 v.h.f. sound stations would be built, though more stations were envisaged later. Most of the stations would be designed to work unattended, each transmitter picking up signals from an existing B.B.C. station and re-transmitting them on a different channel for local reception. The first group of satellite stations would be in the following areas: Television and v.h.f.—Berwick-on-Tweed, Fort William, Galashiels, Llandrindod Wells, Loch Leven, Oban, Oxford and West Cornwall. Television only—Barrow and Lancaster, Enniskillen, Ipswich, Pembroke and Milford Haven, Sheffield, and Skegness. V.h.f. sound only—Les Platon (Channel Islands) and Londonderry.

MORE SCHOOL TELEVISION

The B.B.C. announced, on July 6, that from September, 1960, it would double its existing expenditure of £200,000 a year on school television. The service, which had been previously regarded as experimental, had been proved to be a success and would henceforward be considered permanent and greatly expanded. Viewing time would be almost quadrupled, with two programmes of 20 minutes each and two repeats daily. New items would include a series for sixth forms in grammar schools, incorporating programmes on nuclear energy and the exploration of outer space and also science for secondary modern and primary schools. At the same time the Education Advisory Council of Associated-Rediffusion also said that discussions were taking place with the intention of widening the scope of the company's school programmes.

I.T.A.'S EXPANSION PLANS

The Annual Report of the Independent Television Authority, published on October 29, 1958, expressed hopes that by the end of 1960, 95 per cent. of the United Kingdom would be covered by I.T.A., that permitted hours of television would be increased and that a third television service would be introduced. The report showed that at that time 75 per cent. of the population were within the range of I.T.A. transmitting stations, that further areas in central southern England, north-east England, East Anglia, south-east England and Northern Ireland would be covered by the end of 1959 and that plans were also under preparation to cover south-west England, north-east Scotland and the neighbourhood of Carlisle. Other statements in the report were that by the time of its publication, I.T.A. programmes were available to over 21,000,000 in 6,250,000 homes, that the time spent in watching the two services in these homes was divided between I.T.A. and B.B.C. in a ratio of 70:30 and that the average size of the audience watching I.T.A. programmes each evening was 7,000,000.

More detailed plans for expansion were announced during the same month. It was stated that three new areas, south-west England, north-east Scotland and the Solway, would be provided with independent television service in 1960, or at the latest in the winter of 1960-61. The south-west England area would cover about a million people in Devon and Cornwall and the I.T.A. hoped to build two Band 3 stations, one in Devon and one in Cornwall, to transmit the same programmes. The north-east Scotland station would cater for about 600,000 to 700,000 people living in a triangular area between Fraserburgh, the Moray Firth and Forfar. The Solway service would provide for about 450,000 people on both sides of the Border around the Solway Firth, Dumfries (except the extreme north), Kirkcudbright (except the extreme north) and Wigtown (except the extreme west). The station would be on the English side of the Border. Satellite stations would also be provided in other parts of the country, and the first had been approved and would be opened near Dover in the winter of 1959-60. Other satellite stations were being considered for the Berwick area, West Wales, Inverness, the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, and there might eventually be small satellites along the west coast of Scotland. The I.T.A. programme also provided for the improvement of two existing stations. A higher and more powerful aerial would replace the present temporary station at Croydon and a tall mast would be substituted for the present tower at Lichfield. These improvements were expected to add about 800,000 viewers to the London area and a similar number to the Midlands.

NEW B.B.C. STATIONS

New v.h.f. sound broadcasting stations at Llanddona, in Anglesey, and at Llangollen, near Wrexham, were brought into service on December 20, 1958. Llanddona was intended to serve Anglesey, the northern half of Caernarvonshire and the coastal areas of Denbighshire. The area served by Llangollen included the rest of Denbighshire, Flint and parts of Merioneth and Montgomeryshire, besides being well received in parts of Lancashire and in most of Cheshire and Shropshire. A further new high-power v.h.f. transmitter at Wenvoe, South Wales, came into operation on March 1, to broadcast the Third Programme and Network Three to listeners in South Wales and the west of England.

During the year, the B.B.C.'s most northerly television transmitter in the country, at Thrumster, near Wick, Caithness, began operating, being at first upon a temporary basis.

POSSIBILITIES OF THIRD TELEVISION PROGRAMME

Mr. Marples, the Postmaster-General, speaking in Manchester on March 12, said that the Government would not authorise a third television pro-gamme until a decision had been made about the line definition system to be adopted permanently in Britain. The principal definition systems in use were the 405-line system in Britain, 525 lines in America, 625 lines in most of Europe and 817 lines in France. Mr. Marples said that he himself was inclined to favour the 625-line system, but that if a new definition system were adopted in Britain it would delay the introduction of a third television programme. The four vacant television channels in Band 3 would have to be used to duplicate transmissions on the old and new definitions until all sets were converted to the new system. Mr. Marples also said that a colour television service in Britain was still a long way off.

Later in March, the Television Advisory Committee informed the Postmaster-General that they were not yet able to report on definition standards and colour, but the chairman, Sir Charles Daniel, said that the committee had an immediate minimum recommendation to make. This was that the British delegation to the international assembly at Los Angeles should be empowered to say that in the interests of frequency planning the United Kingdom would adopt an eight megacycles channel in Bands 4 and 5 if Europe generally adopted it, and that if the United Kingdom should decide to adopt 625-line standards in line bands a six megacycles video band width would be used.

OPENING OF PARLIAMENT TELEvised

On October 28, 1958, the State Opening of Parliament was televised for the first time. Both the royal procession from Buckingham Palace to the House of Lords and the Queen's reading of her Speech were seen and heard, not only by viewers in this country, but by several millions in Europe. The ceremony was relayed through the Eurovision network to Belgium, Denmark, France, West Germany, the Netherlands, Italy and Switzerland. Reception in most of those countries was good, and it was reported that most of the 2,000,000 sets in West Germany and the 1,000,000 sets in Italy were tuned in to the programme and that 250,000 French people were estimated to have watched it.

MORE MONEY FOR B.B.C.

The Postmaster-General, in a written reply to a parliamentary question on July 1, said that the Government had agreed to a 5 per cent. increase in the B.B.C.'s share of the licence revenue. Mr. Marples said that under the agreement with the B.B.C., the proportion of net licence revenue (i.e., gross revenue less Post Office expenses of administering the licensing system and interference investigation) to be made available to the B.B.C. had been fixed at 87½ per cent. for the three years 1957-58 to 1959-60. The B.B.C. had represented that this proportion would not be adequate for 1959-60 and for that year the Government had agreed to make available 92½ per cent., which was estimated to provide an additional £1,650,000.

STEREOPHONIC SOUND TESTS

The B.B.C. has continued experiments with stereophonic broadcasting and in November, 1958, again demonstrated it experimentally, including the first presentation in Britain of a radio drama in stereophonic sound. The B.B.C. felt, however, that the existing system, demanding two separate transmission channels and duplicate receivers in listeners' homes, would be impracticable for a regular broadcasting service. They aim, therefore, to develop a new system, using a single transmitter broadcast sound which can be heard on a conventional receiver and expanded into stereophony by the addition of a second sound reproducing unit, which, when commercially developed, might be expected to cost £10 or £12. The B.B.C. has examined three single channel stereophonic systems and decided to co-operate with E.M.I. in developing the latter's Percival system.

TEST MATCH TELEVISION

The M.C.C. announced on May 5 that a contract had been signed between the M.C.C. and the B.B.C. permitting unlimited television of Test matches by the latter during the ensuing three years. The contract covered last season's matches against India and the series against South Africa in 1960 and against Australia in 1961. The B.B.C. had also acquired the exclusive rights for the touring side's matches for 1959-60-61. The B.B.C. stated that the agreement would allow greater flexibility of transmission times, but did not necessarily mean any overall increase in the number of hours of television of Test cricket.

SUNDAY TELEVISION CHANGES

The Assistant Postmaster General said in the House of Commons on July 8 that restrictions on television broadcasts before a p.m. on Sundays would be lifted. Previously, Sunday broadcasts before that hour had been confined to outside events, religious programmes and programmes in Welsh. Permission was now being given to transmit any type of programme, but there must be no increase in the allotted time of 50 hours a week together with 350 hours of outside broadcasting yearly.

NEW B.B.C. DIRECTOR-GENERAL

On July 20, the appointment was announced of Mr. Hugh Carleton Greene as Director-General of the B.B.C. to succeed Sir Ian Jacob on the latter's retirement at the end of 1959. Mr. Greene, who was born in 1910, has been connected with broadcasting since 1940, when he joined the B.B.C., and served as German editor in the European Service until the end of the war. From 1946 to 1948 he was in charge of broadcasting in the British zone of Germany and subsequently returned to the B.B.C. as head of the East European Service. He held a number of other posts in the Corporation and was chairman of a commission of inquiry into the future of broadcasting in Rhodesia and Nyasaland. From 1956 to 1958 he was Director of Administration to the B.B.C. and in 1958 became Director of News and Current Affairs.

VIEWING FIGURES

A report issued by the B.B.C. in January said that in the previous two years the number of people with television sets in their homes had risen from about one-half to two-thirds of the population, or 24,500,000 out of an adult population of 37,800,000 as against 19,000,000 in December, 1956. There were still 7,500,000 adults who received only B.B.C. television, but 17,000,000 were able to see both B.B.C. and I.T.V. programmes. The average amount of evening viewing in the last quarter of 1958 was 12½ hours a week compared with 11½ hours during the last quarter of 1957. A further statement in July, covering the months of April, May and June, 1959, showed that during those months the average viewer had devoted 9½ hours a week to watching television in the evenings compared with 10½ hours in the corresponding period of 1958, a reduction which was doubtless due to the better weather. The percentage of the adult population viewing during the evening had, however, risen from 18.9 to 20.5, and the television public had increased by 16 per cent.

ART AND OTHER EXHIBITIONS, 1958-1959

RUSSIAN ART

The now customary Winter Exhibition at the Royal Academy was devoted to Russian painting and was indeed the first such representative survey to be seen in Western Europe. The exhibition, though a smaller one than usual, and containing only 122 items, ranged widely, from a collection of many fine icons of the thirteenth to seventeenth centuries to a number of examples of the work of contemporary Russian painters. The exhibition was representative not only of all periods, but of all parts of Russia, including the Ukraine and the Baltic States, and although very many of the paintings were lent by the Tretyakov Gallery in Moscow, a number of provincial museums and art galleries were also represented. The two rooms of mediæval icons contained specimens of the famous Novgorod School, including a thirteenth-century Descent into Hell, a fourteenth-century Death of the Virgin and a late fifteenth-century St. George and the Dragon, and, from the Moscow School, The Evangelist Mark, of the early fifteenth century. From the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, such well-known painters as Vereshchagin, Surikov and Serov, were represented and there were five works by Ilya Repin, including a large portrait of Tolstoy. Four rooms were occupied by examples of Soviet art, most of them large canvases, among them being the well-known Defence of Petrograd by Deineka.

SIR WINSTON'S PAINTINGS

Somewhat later in the year, on March 11, the Royal Academy presented, in the Diploma Gallery, an exhibition of paintings by Sir Winston Churchill which had a very wide appeal. Sixty-one works were shown, of which thirty-five had recently been exhibited in America and parts of the Commonwealth. They ranged in time from scenes on the Western Front during the First World War to paintings executed during the last two years. A number of the works, such as the Battlescape, the Black Swans at Chertwell, and The Loup River, Alpes Maritimes, were already well-known to the public, but many others had not previously been shown. The exhibition was particularly remarkable for the wide variety of subjects, and for Sir Winston's vigorous sense of colour, especially in the large number of scenes of the Mediterranean. The exhibition was such a public success that it was kept open for two months beyond the originally arranged final date of May 31 and was not eventually closed until August Bank Holiday. During the five months it was visited by over 141,000 people—a figure only exceeded at the Royal Academy for a "one-man show" in 1952, when 222,000 visitors saw the Leonardo da Vinci exhibition.

ANTIQUE DEALERS' FAIR

The nineteenth annual Antique Dealers' Fair and Exhibition was held at Grosvenor House, Park Lane, during June. Works of art and fine craftsmanship of all ages were shown on some ninety stands, subject to the usual proviso that nothing made after 1830 should be included. The many hundreds of exhibits ranged from a porcelain saucer-dish of the Sung Dynasty to a Regency rosewood bookcase. Some outstanding items were the first commissioned portrait painted by Constable, a William and Mary scarlet lacquer bureau-cabinet, a veneered and inlaid Louis XV table de lit and a set of nineteen drawings by E. F. Burney designed to illustrate a book on space-travel (circa 1815). Her Majesty the Queen and other members of the Royal Family lent a number of exhibits and these included a blue enamel and ormolu Directoire striking clock from the sitting room of Queen Elizabeth the Queen Mother at Clarence House.

CAMBRIDGE TREASURES

Following upon a number of successful exhibitions at Goldsmith's Hall in recent years, a splendid collection of Cambridge Treasures was on view there from March 17 to April 18. As in previous exhibitions, there was a fine collection of plate, containing about 120 examples from the fourteenth to the early nineteenth century and an excellent representation of the work of the modern silversmith. Among the old plate may be mentioned a small fourteenth-century beaker (the earliest known piece of plate in Cambridge) thought to have been given to Trinity Hall by the founder, Bishop Bateman, a collection of plate bequeathed to Christ's College by Lady Margaret Beaufort, a number of pieces given by Archbishop Matthew Parker, an ostrich-egg cup of 1592 from Corpus Christi College and the Vice-Chancellor's cup, given by Queen Elizabeth's favourite, the Earl of Essex, in 1598.

The plate was, however, only one feature of this exceptional exhibition. Manuscripts included a sheet of the Codex Bezae, probably from fifteenth-century Sicily, sixth-century Italian and eleventh-century Anglo-Saxon copies of the Gospels (two more gifts of Matthew Parker) and a twelfth-century English Bestiary. From the collection of Samuel Pepys, left to Magdalene College, were shown a page of his diary in his own shorthand, a folio music book, including his own song Beauty, Retire, the illustrated roll of Henry VIII's Navy by Anthony Anthony, a map showing the progress of the Armada up the Channel and a printed almanack containing the signature "F. Drak". There were first editions of Chaucer, Spenser and George Herbert, and a corrected proof of Lycidas with, next to it, a first edition of the poem, with corrections believed to be in Milton's own hand. In one case were to be seen the manuscripts of Gray's Elegy, Keats' Ode to the Nightingale, Tennyson's Maud, Housman's In Summer Time on Bredon and Rupert Brooke's The Soldier, and among many letters was Byron's first letter, written probably to his aunt. In addition to these many treasures was a varied selection from the Fitzwilliam Museum, of furniture, antiquities, miniatures and Old Masters' paintings and drawings, and a representative collection of portraits of Cambridge men and women.

THE ACADEMY SUMMER EXHIBITION

As in the previous year, works of differing styles and of more traditional and more modern tendency were grouped together in the 1959 Academy Summer Exhibition. A particularly striking work was the large mural An Artist's Progress, by Gilbert Spencer, commissioned for the Royal Academy Restaurant. Two other very large paintings were exhibited by Carol Weight, Entry into Jerusalem and Crucifixion. Sir Winston Churchill and Augustus John each sent two works, the latter's portrait Dorelia being particularly well received. Other portraits of note were Bryan Kneale's study of Charles Laughton, Peggy Ashcroft as Imogen, by the late Anthony Devas, a self-portrait by R. O. Dunlop, Sir Gerald Kelly's last portrait of Vaughan Williams and Robert Buhler's study of Ruskin Spear, while the last-named artist's caustically humorous Strawberry Mousse was also a picture of the year. Dame Laura Knight contributed six paintings, including the charming picture, Kitty and her Pals, of a horse with two donkeys, and mention should be made of two works by Charles Cundall, one of sailing boats on the Thames and one of Henley Regatta.

COMMEMORATIVE EXHIBITIONS

1959 was a notable year for bicentenaries and tricentenaries and a number of commemorative exhibitions were held. At the National Maritime Museum, Greenwich, two galleries were devoted to a display entitled "The Year of Victories, 1759", which was opened by Admiral Lord Cunningham of Hyndhope on May 6, and remained on view for the rest of the year. The first gallery illustrated the organization of the Navy two hundred years ago and the exhibits included models and plans of ships, mainly from contemporary official records. The second room dealt with the various individual victories of the year, and notably with Quebec. Here was exhibited a manuscript chart, about 10 feet across, prepared by Capt. Cook from French charts, his own surveys and information from brother officers, and there were also displayed log-books, contemporary models of the flat-bottomed landing craft specially built for the occasion, and prints and portraits, including one of Patrick Gibson, who helped to carry Wolfe's body from the Heights of Abraham and who died in 1831 at the age of 111.

The bicentenary of Handel's death and the tercentenary of Purcell's birth were jointly commemorated by many concerts during the year, and the British Museum took the opportunity to stage an exhibition, open from May until August, of 250 items relating to the two composers, including manuscript and engraved music, prints, books and drawings, all from the Museum's own collections, except for two portraits lent by the National Portrait Gallery. Handel manuscripts ranged from a copy of about 1700 of Six Sonatas for Two Oboes and Bass, said to have been composed when he was ten, and a piece of church music written at Halle between 1701 and 1703 to the autograph score of the Messiah itself. Among relics of Purcell were the autograph manuscript of In the Midst of Life and of My Heart is Inditing, the anthem written for the coronation of James II in 1685.

May, 1759, was also the probable date of the establishment of Josiah Wedgwood's pottery at Ivy House, Burslem, and an exhibition was held at the Victoria and Albert Museum during the summer illustrative of two hundred years of Wedgwood pottery. The exhibition was drawn partly from the Museum's own collection and partly from other sources, including the royal collection at Windsor. The exhibits were divided into two historical sections and one showing examples of present-day Wedgwood ware, one historical section being largely devoted to early ornamental pieces including examples of the famous black basalt, and plaques and medallions, many designed by Flaxman and William Hackwood; the other contained specimens of household pottery, among them the cream-coloured earthenware known as "Queen's Ware", because of an order from Queen Charlotte in 1765. The exhibition also contained documents and portraits, including those of the first Josiah Wedgwood and his wife, both by Reynolds.

THE ROMANTIC MOVEMENT

A large exhibition, "The Romantic Movement," was staged at the Tate Gallery from July to September, with a subsidiary section, displaying water-colours, drawings and books, on view simultaneously at the Art Council's Gallery in St. James's Square. In all, there were nearly a thousand exhibits and a large part of the Tate Gallery had been temporarily re-organized to house them, twelve large galleries being devoted to different aspects of romantic art—the pastoral, heroism and liberty, nationalism and the cult of the hero, images of power, and others. In addition there were selected water-colours and pieces of sculpture and a small section of toys and transparencies. While the core of the exhibition covered the years between 1780 and 1848, the first room contained Rubens' Hero and Leander, Claude's Perseus or the Origin of Coral, a Salvator Rosa, lent from America, and a Giorgione, and the last room had works by Van Gogh, Cézanne, Rouault and Rodin. One gallery contained sixteen paintings, all by Constable, and there were no fewer than nineteen Turners, including his Evening Star, the Burning of the Houses of Parliament, lent from Cleveland, Ohio, Norham Castle and Hannibal crossing the Alps. The Louvre lent the famous Delacroix, Massacre at Chios and the same artist's Lion Hunt came to the exhibition from Boston.

RETROSPECT OF SPORT 1958-59

OLYMPIC GAMES

The Modern Olympic Games were revived in 1896 and meetings have been held as follows:—

I 1896 Athens	VII 1920 Antwerp	XII 1940 Tokio, Helsinki
II 1900 Paris	VIII 1924 Paris	XIII 1944 London
III 1904 St. Louis	IX 1928 Amsterdam	XIV 1948 London
IV 1908 London	X 1932 Los Angeles	XV 1952 Helsinki
V 1912 Stockholm	XI 1936 Berlin	XVI 1956 Melbourne
VI 1916 Berlin

 The Games of 1916 were allotted to Berlin, but were not held owing to the war. The Games of 1940 were allotted first to Tokio, then in 1938 to Helsinki, but also were not held owing to the war. The Games of 1944 were awarded to London in 1939, but again were not held owing to the war. It is a rule of the Olympic Charter that the cancellation of any Meeting must not alter the numbered sequence. The venue of each Olympic Meeting is fixed some time ahead by the International Olympic Committee who have awarded the 1960 Games to Rome.

The 1960 Games will take place in Rome from Wednesday, August 31 to Saturday, September 10, and the programme will cover the following sports—Athletics, Basketball, Boxing, Canoeing, Cycling, Fencing, Football, Gymnastics, Hockey, Modern Pentathlon, Rowing, Shooting, Swimming, Water Polo, Weightlifting, Wrestling and Yachting.

Olympic Entries and Qualifying Standards (1960)

Entries for the Track and Field Events, though limited to 3 per nation, are likely to reach new record heights in 1960. In anticipation of the difficulty of staging competitions with unlimited entries, the I.A.A.F. have laid down standards. A country will be permitted to enter 1 man per event, no matter how low the standard of the prospective competitor. If the country wishes to enter 2 or 3 competitors, each must have reached the following qualifying standards between Oct. 1, 1959 and Aug. 25, 1960 for the particular event under consideration.

THE DERBY, 1949-1959

For particulars of the Derby from 1780-1948 see 1921-49 editions.

The Distance of the Derby course at Epsom is $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile. Lord Egremont won Derby in 1782, 1804, 5, 7, 26 (also, 5 Oaks); Duke of Grafton, 1802, 9, 10, 15 (also, 9 Oaks); Mr. Bowes, 1835, 43, 52, 3; Sir J. Hawley, Teddington (1851), Beadsman (1858), Musjid (1859), and Blue Gown (1868), the 1st Duke of Westminster, Bend Or (1880), Shotover (1882), Ormonde (1886), and Flying Fox (1899). Lady James Douglas was the first lady to win the Derby—War Substitute at Newmarket (1918); at Epsom, Mrs. G. B. Miller (1937). First winner was Sir Charles Bunbury's Diomed in 1780. From 1940 to 1945 a substitute Derby was run at Newmarket. By winning his 5th Derby, the late Aga Khan equalled Lord Egremont's record. He also won 2 Oaks.

CRICKET

Cricket is played under the "Laws of Cricket" and is governed by the Committee of the Marylebone Cricket Club (1787), Lord's, N.W.1. Pres.—H. S. Altham, C.B.E., D.S.O., M.C. Sec., Maj. R. Aird. Asst. Secs.—J. G. Dunbar; S. C. Griffith.

County Championships

The first County Championship was in 1873 when Gloucestershire and Nottinghamshire finished equal on points. Yorkshire have won 23 times; Surrey 16; Notts 8; Lancs 8; Middlesex 5; Kent 4; Gloucester 2; Derby 2; Warwick 2; Glamorgan 1; Notts and Lancs tied in 1879 and 1882, and Notts, Lancs and Surrey were all equal in 1889. Middlesex and Yorkshire tied in 1949 and Lancashire and Surrey tied in 1950.

Laws, etc., 1959

Test Selectors for 1959: G. O. Allen (Chairman); W. Woolley; D. J. Insole; H. Sutcliffe.

County Cricket Reforms.—The alterations in conditions in the County Cricket Championship, adopted experimentally in 1957, with certain modifications, made in 1958, to the rule governing bonus for faster scoring on first innings, were continued for 1959. The chief points are:

1. On-side fieldsers to be limited to five, only two of them to be behind the popping crease.
2. First innings points to be reduced from four to two, with the allocation of a bonus of two points for faster scoring.
3. The size of boundaries to be standardized.
4. Counties to be limited in the number of overseas cricketers on their staff.

Declarations.—An amendment to Law 15 was adopted in 1958 giving the Captain of a batting side power to declare at any time during a match irrespective of its duration.

1959. Cricket Feats

Firsts.—1,000 runs—M. R. Hallam (Leicestershire). 100 wickets—H. L. Jackson (Derbyshire). 1,000 runs and 100 wickets—G. E. Tribe (Northamptonshire). 2,000 runs—M. J. K. Smith (Warwickshire). 200 wickets—None. 3,000 runs—M. J. K. Smith scored 3,245 runs in season, the first player to top 3,000 since 1949.

All Round.—T. E. Bailey (Essex) scored 2,011 runs and took 100 wickets. No player had made 2,000 runs and taken 100 wickets in season since 1937.

High Scores.—Somerset, 562 v. Notts; Kent, 560 (for 6) v. Essex; Worcestershire, 493 v. Essex; England, 483 (for 8) v. India (Third Test, Leeds); Nottinghamshire 460 (for 6) v. Yorks.

Low Scores.—Yorkshire, 35 v. Gloucestershire; Somerset, 59 v. Warwickshire.

Fastest Century.—J. M. Parks (Sussex). 100 runs in 61 minutes v. Lancashire.

YACHTING

THE AMERICA'S CUP

The New York Yacht Club accepted the Royal Yacht Squadron's challenge for a series of match races for the America's Cup in 1958. The races took place off Newport, Rhode Island, from Sept. 20–26, 1958, between two yachts of the 12-metre class, the British Sceptre and the American Columbia. The Columbia won all four completed races.

History.—The America's Cup, originally a British trophy, was won outright by the U.S. schooner America at Cowes on August 22, 1851, and every contest since has been won by the U.S.A. There have been 17 unsuccessful attempts to take the cup out of the United States—15 by Britain and 2 by Canada. There have been 17 contests and 54 races, 48 of the races being won by the U.S.A.

Shamrock I lost to Columbia, 1899; Shamrock II lost to Columbia, 1901; Shamrock III lost to Reliance 1903; Shamrock IV lost to Resolute, 1920; Shamrock V lost to Enterprise, 1930; Endeavour lost to Rainbow, 1934; Endeavour II lost to Ranger, 1937; Sceptre lost to Columbia, 1958.

HOMES OF SPORT

RACING

The two most famous homes of British flat racing are Newmarket and Epsom. The former, the home of the Jockey Club and the headquarters of British racing since the days of Charles II, who paid frequent visits there, is the scene of two of the "Classics", the 2,000 and 1,000 Guineas, and of many other important races, including the Cesarewitch and the Cambridgeshire, the "Autumn Double". At Epsom, with the exception of the war years, the Derby has been run since 1780 and the Oaks since 1779. The Coronation Cup also takes place during the Derby meeting. There are many trainers' establishments at both Newmarket and Epsom. The fifth classic race, the St. Leger, is run at Doncaster in September.

Two events of long-standing social, as well as racing, significance are the Royal Ascot meeting in June and the Goodwood meeting at the end of July. The latter is the only occasion during the year at which racing takes place at Goodwood, but there are a number of meetings on Ascot Heath, including that at which the very valuable King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Stakes, an important feature in the present-day racing programme, is run.

Courses near London include Alexandra Park (Wood Green), Hurst Park (near Hampton Court), Kempton Park (Sunbury-on-Thames), Sandown Park (Esher) and Windsor. Among important courses in other parts of the country may be mentioned Lincoln and Manchester, the scenes of the first and last big flat races of the season, the Lincolnshire and Manchester November Handicap, respectively, and York and Chester, the homes of the Ebor Handicap and Chester Cup. Steeplechasing and hurdling under National Hunt rules also take place during the winter at many centres of flat racing.

The Grand National steeplechase is run over a distance of 4 m. 856 yds., with 30 fences, at Aintree near Liverpool. Other very important races under National Hunt rules, including the Cheltenham Gold Cup and the Champion Hurdle, take place at the National Hunt meeting at Cheltenham, while the King George VI Steeplechase at Kempton Park on Boxing Day has in recent years been very popular.

CRICKET

Test matches are now played on six English grounds—Lord's, The Oval, Trent Bridge (Nottingham), Old Trafford (Manchester), Headingley (Leeds) and Edgbaston (Birmingham). In the normal course, five Test Matches are played against visiting teams to England and take place at Lord's, the Oval and three out of the other four test-match grounds, one dropping out each season in turn.

Lord's, the headquarters of Cricket and of the M.C.C., is the third ground of the name. Thomas Lord founded his first ground in 1787, and after two moves, established it on the present site at St. John's Wood in 1824. Middlesex play almost all their home matches at Lord's, as do Surrey at the Oval at Kennington, which has been the home of Surrey cricket since 1846.

In addition to the grounds already mentioned, others of great historic interest and current importance include, in the South, the Sussex county ground at Hove and the St. Lawrence ground at Canterbury, and in the North, Bramall Lane (Sheffield) and the ground at Scarborough, where the annual end-of-season Festival has taken place since last century.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL

The F.A. Cup Final has been held at Wembley Stadium since 1923, on the famous occasion when the crowd invaded the ground. Since then admission to the Cup Final has been by ticket only, but the Stadium can accommodate about 100,000 spectators. Many international matches and the F.A. Amateur Cup Final also take place at Wembley.

Wembley is, however, surpassed in capacity by Hampden Park, Glasgow, where the record for paying spectators is 149,547. England v. Scotland matches take place at Wembley and Hampden Park in alternate years.

London teams, with their grounds, currently playing in First Division football are as follows: Arsenal (Highbury), Chelsea (Stamford Bridge), Fulham (Craven Cottage), Tottenham Hotspur (White Hart Lane) and West Ham United (Upton Park).

RUGBY FOOTBALL

The three most famous centres of Rugby Union Football in the United Kingdom, scenes of many international matches, are Twickenham, the headquarters of the Rugby Union, Cardiff Arms Park and Murrayfield (Edinburgh). The University match and the games for the Services Championship are also played at Twickenham, where, in addition, most of the "Harlequins' home matches" take place. Of other famous London clubs, Blackheath play at the Rectory Field, Blackheath, Richmond and London Scottish share the Richmond Athletic Ground and the London Welsh occupy the nearby Old Deer Park. Rosslyn Park, who for many years played at the latter, now have a ground of their own at Roehampton. The Wasps' ground is at Sudbury.

GOLF

The links at St. Andrews, the home of the Royal and Ancient Golf Club and the traditional centre of golf, remain the most famous in the world. Other great Scottish courses are at Muirfield, Prestwick and Troon.

The last Ryder Cup match in this country was played at Lindrick and the Professional Match Championship has many times taken place at Walton Heath in Surrey. Except for Sandwich, however, most of the major championship courses are now either in Scotland or in Lancashire or Cheshire (e.g. Hoylake, Formby, Birkdale and Royal Lytham and St. Annes). Other famous golfing centres are Rye, Burnham and Westward Ho! and in Wales, Harlech and Porthcawl.

ATHLETICS

While the number of running tracks in this country is slowly increasing and well-attended meetings are held in many centres, most of the international matches and events such as the A.A.A. Championships and the University Sports take place at the White City Stadium at Shepherd's Bush. The 1958 Empire Games were held at Cardiff and the 1948 Olympic Games at Wembley.

LAWN TENNIS

The All-England Lawn Tennis Championships have been played at Wimbledon since their inception in 1877, first on the former ground at Worple Road and more recently on the present courts of the All-England Lawn Tennis Club in Church Road. Bournemouth is the venue of the British Hard Court Championships, and in recent years one of the leading Professional Tournaments in this country, the Slazenger Championship, has taken place at Devonshire Park, Eastbourne.

TENNIS, RACKETS, ETC.

The chief centre for tennis and rackets may be said to be Queen's Club in West Kensington. A number of other tennis courts are still in use, notably at Lord's, where the M.C.C. Gold and Silver Prizes are important events, Hampton Court (built by Henry VIII in 1530), Oxford, Cambridge, Can-ford School, Leamington and Manchester. Many of the leading squash rackets matches take place in the courts belonging to West End Clubs.

ROWING

Most of the leading rowing events of the year are contested on the River Thames. The Henley Regatta continues to attract the foremost oarsmen from all over the world. Apart from the Boat Race, several other important races take place either from Putney to Mortlake or in the reverse direction, including the Thames Head of the River Race and the Wingfield Sculls. The course for Doggett's Coat and Badge, instituted in 1715, possibly the oldest sporting event still regularly contested, is from London Bridge to Chelsea. The rowing events in the 1958 Empire Games took place on Lake Padarn in Wales.

YACHTING

Cowes, the headquarters of the Royal Yacht Squadron and of the Royal London Yacht Club and the scene of the great Cowes Week at the beginning of August, is still the most famous name in British yachting, but there are many other centres of the sport. Among others on or near Spithead and the Solent are Bembridge, Ryde, Yarmouth, Southampton and Hamble and, elsewhere, Burnham-on-Crouch, Poole Harbour, Weymouth, Plymouth, Falmouth and the Clyde.

POLO

In recent years, the polo grounds at Cowdray Park, Midhurst, and at Windsor have become the two most important centres of the sport in this country, though a number of other grounds exist, among which those at Woolmers Park, Hertfordshire and Cirencester may be mentioned.

OTHER SPORTS

The National Rifle Association's annual meeting at its headquarters at Bisley Camp, near Brookwood, Surrey, is the chief event in the rifle-shooting programme. Since the closing of Harringay Arena, many big boxing programmes have been staged at the Empire Pool, Wembley, and well-known provincial centres of the sport are the Liverpool Stadium and the Granby Halls, Leicester. The Greyhound Derby is run at the White City and the Waterloo Cup, the most important coursing prize, at Altcar, Lancashire.

BUCHAN'S WEATHER PERIODS OR RECURRENCES OF WEATHER

Dr. Alexander Buchan, F.R.S., Secretary of the Scottish Meteorological Society, published in 1867 a paper in the Journal of that Society entitled "Interruptions in the regular rise and fall of temperature in the course of the year." Buchan gave six cold periods and three warm periods, based on his examination of the mean daily temperature as recorded at stations in Scotland covering long periods. The cold periods were February 7-14, April 11-14, May 9-14, June 29-July 4, August 6-11, November 6-13, and the warm periods July 12-15, August 12-15, and December 3-14. This early work aroused considerable interest later. It should be noted, however, that Buchan claimed no more than the existence of tendencies for short spells of relatively cold or warm weather to occur at certain times of the year.

In recent years these smaller fluctuations of weather super-imposed on the normal seasonal changes have been examined from the aspect of tendencies to stormy or anticyclonic spells over the British Isles and have been referred to as "singularities." Stormy periods are relatively warm in winter and cool in summer. The following tendencies have been given:—Jan. 5-17 stormy; Jan. 18-24 anticyclonic; Jan. 24-Feb. 1 stormy; Feb. 8-16 anticyclonic; Feb. 21-25 cold; Feb. 26-Mar. 9 stormy; Mar. 12-19 anticyclonic; Mar. 24-31 stormy; April 10-15 stormy; April 23-26 unsettled; June 1-21 summer monsoon; July 10-24 warm; Aug. 20-30 stormy; September 1-17 anticyclonic; Sept. 17-24 stormy; Sept. 24-Oct. 4 anticyclonic; Oct. 5-12 stormy; Oct. 16-20 anticyclonic; Oct. 24-Nov. 13 stormy; Nov. 15-21 anticyclonic; Nov. 24-Dec. 14 stormy; Dec. 18-24 anticyclonic; Dec. 25-Jan. 1 stormy.

It is interesting to compare these generalized statements with the daily values given for Greenwich. The cold or warm spells rarely cover precisely the periods given for the Buchan Spells, but cold or warm spells can be found fairly near to some of these dates.

WIND FORCE MEASURES

The Beaufort Scale of wind force has been accepted internationally and is used in communicating weather conditions. Devised originally by Admiral Sir Francis Beaufort in 1805, it now consists of these numbers 0-17, each representing certain strength or velocity of wind.

Scale No.	Wind Force	M.p.h.	Knots	Scale No.	Wind Force	M.p.h.	Knots
0	Calm	1	1	9	Strong gale	47-54	41-47

BROADCAST RECEIVING LICENCES

Sound.—Broadcast Receiving Licences (excluding television) may be obtained at most Post Offices at a charge of £1.

Television.—Broadcast Receiving Licences (including television) are obtainable at most Post Offices for £4 (issue fee £3, plus £1 duty). In Scotland licences are obtainable at most Post Offices in areas conveniently situated for television reception. Elsewhere licences are only available at Head Post Offices. If application is made at any other office which conducts wireless licence business, arrangements can be made for a licence to be issued at a Head Post Office and forwarded by post to the applicant. If the applicant holds an unexpired (£1) sound licence it should be surrendered when the television licence is applied for and the price of the television licence will be abated at the rate of 11.8d. for each month of the unexpired portion of the surrendered (£1) licence.

Blind Persons.—Blind persons who produce the required certificates of registration may obtain free sound licences or concessionary television licences for £3 (issue fee £2 plus £1 duty) in the United Kingdom and the Isle of Man and for £2 in the Channel Islands.

Licensing requirements.—One licence (which must be a television licence if a television set is used anywhere in the household) covers any number of sets in a single household; but lodgers, paying guests and occupiers of flats (even if not self-contained) count as separate householders and require separate licences. Licences are required both for self-contained sets and for loudspeakers worked by wire extensions from main receiving sets outside the household concerned. Licences are also required by those using apparatus which is rented or hired. A separate licence is necessary for a wireless receiving set fitted in a motor-car.

Period of Validity.—An initial licence (either sound or television) is dated to expire twelve months from the last day of the month preceding that of issue. Thereafter all renewal licences are dated to expire one year after the licence they supersede.

PARCELS

Should be marked "Parcel Post," and must be handed across the counter; postage must be prepaid by stamps, affixed by the sender. On Sundays parcels are not accepted or (except during Christmas) delivered. The name and address of sender should be inside and (not too prominent) on the outside of every parcel, and preferably be to the left of and at right angles to the name and address of the addressee.

A rural postman will accept any packets he can conveniently carry, except overseas parcels or overseas letters intended for insurance: but if on foot or cycle not more, without notice, than 15 lb. from one person. He may weigh parcels on request. Mail-drivers need not accept between regular stopping points.

Parcels to or from Irish Republic, Channel Is. or I. of Man are liable to customs duty: except in last case, the sender must declare contents when posting. Addressee must pay clearance fees (1s. or 2s.) if any duty be payable. Senders can undertake to pay customs charges of Irish Republic and some overseas countries (a deposit is required). The sender of a parcel from the Channel Islands may also pay the customs charges etc., at the time of posting.

AIR MAIL SERVICES

For mode of packing, prohibitions, limits of size, &c., see Post Office Guide.

Normal regulations as to make-up and acceptance of various categories of postal packets and parcels apply equally to air mail items. A blue air-mail label, obtainable free from post offices, must be affixed to each air mail item except letters, letter packets and postcards for Europe. Air mail labels should not be fixed to these latter items or delay will result. Special air-mail rates apply to correspondence for members of H.M. Forces overseas (see leaflet PL89).

AIR LETTERS, postage 6d., written on special Air Letter forms may be sent to all countries. The special forms may be obtained at post offices.

SECOND CLASS MAIL. Printed papers, Commercial Papers, Samples, Small Packets may be sent by air to countries outside Europe at the rates shown in col. 4 below. Minimum charges: Commercial Papers, 6d.; Small Packets, 10d. NEWSPAPERS. Publications registered at the G.P.O. as newspapers may be sent at the reduced rates indicated in the footnote below. There is no Second Class air mail service to Europe.

European Countries

Letters, letter packets and postcards for all European countries, prepaid at the ordinary international postage rates, are in general despatched daily by air or surface transport, whichever offers earlier delivery. The rates are:—

Letters, 6d. for the first ounce,
4d. for each additional ounce.

Postcards, 4d.

For Gibraltar and Malta the rates are:

Letters, 3d. for the first ounce,
1½d. for each additional ounce.

Postcards, 2½d.

Air mail labels should not be used.

Air Parcel Post to Europe. Rates are included in the Overseas Parcel Post tables, see pp. 1174-7.

Countries Outside Europe

Rates for letters, postcards and second class mail appear below; for air parcel rates, see pp. 1174-7.

COUNTRIES OUTSIDE EUROPE

For air mail services to Europe, see above; Air Parcel Rates, pp. 1174-7. For details of insurance and times of posting at London Chief Office and of transmission to principal cities, see G.P.O. Air Mail Leaflet from Post Offices (free).

EXPORT RESTRICTIONS.—Under Board of Trade regulations many kinds of goods, including certain foodstuffs, may be sent abroad (including Irish Republic) only under the authority of an export licence. Enquiries in the matter should be addressed to the Controller, Export Licensing Branch, Board of Trade, Gavrelle House, 14, Bunhill Row, London, E.C.1.

Under the Defence (Finance) Regulations, senders of trade letter packets or parcels exceeding £500 in value to most foreign countries, including the U.S.A., and also to Canada (including Newfoundland), must furnish with the parcel a currency declaration (form C.D.3) which, together with explanatory notices, may be obtained from banks.

Senders of private gift packets or parcels exceeding £25 in value must furnish with the packet or parcel a currency declaration C.D.3.

PROHIBITED AND DUTIABLE ARTICLES.—Among prohibitions are offensive or dangerous things; packets likely to impede the P.O. sorters, and certain kinds of advertisement. To Channel Islands, and I. of Man dutiable articles must be sent in Parcels. Abroad generally they may be sent in Parcels, in Insured Boxes and Small Packets (to those countries which accept them) or (where the "Green Label" system applies) in Letters and in some cases sample packets.

CERTIFICATE OF POSTING.—Given as a matter of course for registered and insured items. May also be obtained for ordinary parcels (no charge) and other unregistered packets (fee, 1d.).

UNPAID PACKETS, except Business Reply packets and redirected parcels are charged double postage on delivery; UNDERPAID PACKETS, double the deficiency.

UNDELIVERABLE POSTAL PACKETS.—Inland packets chargeable with a postage of 3d. or more, undelivered, are returned to sender without charge, if his address is found either outside or inside. If the sender's address is not available, letters containing nothing of value are destroyed; packets containing anything of value, and parcels, if not applied for, are generally disposed of after 3 months, or if perishable are dealt with as requisite. Packets chargeable with postage not exceeding 2½d. are returned to sender only on payment of a second postage, and if name, address and request for return appear on outside; those without such request are disposed of. British packets undelivered abroad are returned to sender here on payment of charges due; printed papers of no value only if request for return appears outside in a language known in the country of destination. Magazine Post packets are charged with return Postage, when return is requested. Parcels further incur other charges unless abandonment is requested at the time of posting.

REPLY COUPONS, for the purpose of prepaying replies to letters, are exchangeable abroad for stamps representing the minimum letter postage rate from the country concerned to the U.K. Price (valid in all countries of the Universal Postal Union), 1s.; (valid within the Commonwealth and Irish Republic only), 5d. Sold at chief offices.

POSTE RESTANTE (solely for the accommodation of travellers, and for three months only in any one town).—A packet may be addressed as a rule to any Post Office except Town Sub-Offices, and should have the words "Poste Restante" or "to be called for" in the address. If addressed to initials, fictitious names or Christian name only, it is treated as undeliverable. Applicants must furnish sufficient particulars to ensure delivery to the proper owner. Redirection from a Poste Restante is not undertaken for more than 14 days unless longer (up to 3 months) is applied for. Letters at a seaport for an expected ship are kept 2 months; otherwise letters are kept for 2 weeks—or for 1 month if originating from abroad—at the end of which time they are treated as undeliverable, unless bearing a request for return at or before the end of the period.

REDIRECTION.—(1) By agent of addressee: Packets other than parcels and business reply may be reposted free not later than the day after delivery (not counting Sundays and public holidays) if unopened and not tampered with, and if original addressee's name is unobscured. Parcels may be re-directed free of charge, within the same time limits, only if the original and the corrected addresses are both within the same Town Delivery Area (or within the London Postal Area). Registered packets, which must be taken to a Post Office, are re-registered free only up to day after delivery. (a) By the Post Office (not undertaken when other persons remain at the address). Requests for re-direction of letters, &c., should be on printed forms, obtainable from the postmaster, and must be signed by the persons to whom the letters are to be addressed. Redirection is free for 3 months (except for parcels re-directed to a different Town Delivery Area, see above); thereafter for each different surname and each new address costs 5s. for 12 months, and 10s. for each subsequent year. Separate forms must be filled in for the forwarding of telegrams.

REGISTRATION, INLAND.—All kinds of postal packets intended for registration should be marked "Registered" in bottom left-hand corner, and must be handed to an officer of the Post Office, and a receipt taken. The packets must be made up in a reasonably strong cover appropriate to their contents. Parcels (or the string with which they are tied) and letters must be fastened with adhesive (if tape is used it must be transparent and each piece must be signed or distinctively marked), or sealed with wax, lead, &c. Minimum fee 1s. exclusive of postage. Advice of delivery, a further 3d. The latest time for registering is usually half an hour before the latest time for posting ordinary packets. Compulsory registration is applied to (a) any packet apparently meant for registration and wrongly posted (1s. less any prepaid excess postage); (b) packets found open (or undeliverable) and containing any bank or currency note, coin, jewellery, stamps, uncrossed bearer cheques, uncrossed postal orders without payee's name, &c., in each case 10s. or more in value (1s.).

COMPENSATION, INLAND.—Subject to certain prescribed regulations which are fully set forth in the Post Office Guide, the Post Office pays compensation for (i) loss of or damage to registered letters and parcels, (ii) though not as a legal right, for loss of or damage to unregistered parcels and for unregistered packets conveyed by Express Messenger all the way. The onus of making up properly any packet sent by post and of packing adequately any article or articles enclosed therein lies on the sender, and the Post Office does not accept any responsibility for loss arising from faulty or inadequate packing. No compensation is paid for consequential injury or damage arising in respect of anything sent by post. Registered letters and parcels (including items sent to the Irish Republic): The fees for registration are 1s. covering compensation up to £10; 2s. 1d., £20; and 3d. for each additional £20 up to the maximum of 2s. 8d. for £400. (No legal right to compensation exists in respect of registered letters and parcels sent to and from Irish Republic.) Unregistered parcels and unregistered packets conveyed by Express Messenger all the way: Maximum compensation £5 (£4 for unregistered parcels sent to or received from Irish Republic).

Compensation in respect of money of any kind (coin, notes, orders, cheques, stamps, etc.) is only given if the money is sent by registered letter post in one of the special envelopes sold officially (see p. 1170) and, in the case of paper money, if particulars (for identification) are kept; the maximum compensation for coin, which must be packed so as not to move about, is £5. Compensation for eggs, fish, poultry, game and rabbits, meat, fruit and vegetables is paid only if sent by parcel post; and for fragile articles only if they have been adequately packed and the cover is conspicuously marked "Fragile, with care." No compensation is paid for deterioration due to delay of perishable articles or for damage to exceptionally fragile articles, liquids or semi-liquids sent by letter or parcel post to or from Irish Republic whether registered or not.

REGISTRATION, BRITISH COMMONWEALTH AND FOREIGN (except for parcels and a magazine post packet for Canada, including Newfoundland), is in force to all countries with the exception of Chagos Islands, North Korea and North Viet-Nam. Valuable articles may not be sent in unregistered letters. Fee, 1s. 6d. If claimed within a year, compensation (in the U.K., £2 18s.) is paid to the sender for entire loss of registered packets while in the custody of a country in the Universal Postal Union, subject to certain conditions.

INSURANCE, BRITISH COMMONWEALTH AND FOREIGN, may be effected on packets to many countries at the following rates:—1s. 2d. for £12; 2d. each further £12 up to 6s. 8d. for £400 (lower maxima in many countries). For H.M. Ships abroad and also members of H.M. Army and Air Force overseas using closed Forces addresses (e.g. British Forces Post Office followed by a number) only parcels are insurable, up to £50. Packets containing no articles (besides correspondence) but valuable papers (banknotes, &c.) or valuable documents (plans, &c.) can be insured as letters; other valuable articles should be sent as insured parcels, or as "insured boxes."

COMPENSATION up to a maximum of 93s. may be given for loss or damage in the U.K. to uninsured parcels to or from most Commonwealth and Foreign Countries, if certificate of posting is produced.

No compensation will be paid for any loss or damage due to the act of the Queen's Enemies.

INSURED BOX POST.—Jewellery and precious articles (not letters or paper valuables) may be sent in insured boxes to certain countries. Customs declarations must be filled in.

CASH ON DELIVERY SERVICE, INLAND (not to or from Irish Republic, nor to H.M. Ships).—A sum (Trade Charge) up to £40 can, under certain conditions, be collected from addressee and remitted to sender of a parcel or registered letter posted at a Money Order Office, or of goods consigned by railway. Fees (extra to usual postal or rail charges): For Trade Charge up to £1, 1s. 2d.; £2, 1s. 6d.; £5, 1s. 6d.; and for each further £5 or part thereof, 2d. An additional charge of 6d. is made on consignments sent by rail.

CASH ON DELIVERY, BRITISH COMMONWEALTH AND FOREIGN.—Applicable to parcels only, but not to all countries, nor to H.M. Naval and Military Forces and R.A.F. serving overseas. Fees for collection: 4½d. for Trade Charge (amount to be collected) not exceeding £1, with 2½d. extra for each additional £1 of Trade Charge up to the maximum, which is usually £40 (fee 8s. 6d.), but in some countries less. Addressee has also to pay on delivery, besides Customs, if any, a further fee (4d. in U.K.) not prepayable. If Trade Charge cannot be collected, the rules for undeliverable parcels apply.

EXPRESS and SPECIAL SERVICES (INLAND).—In general: the express services are limited to the hours of telegraph business, but the times vary according to the service used and local conditions. No. (4) (below) is available on Sundays only. Waiting fees: 10 minutes free, each further 10 minutes or less, 4d.—(1) All the way, by P.O. messenger, of packets, conspicuously marked "Express" above the address, handed over the counter. Inclusive charge, 1s. per mile, or part of a mile, with 3d. on each separate packet after the first. Live animals, liquids, and money may be delivered by this service. (2) After transmission by post, on addressee's application (1s. per mile, or part of a mile, and 2d. for every ten or less additional packets). (3) After transmission by post, at sender's request "Special Delivery" from the ordinary delivery office, if messengers are available (1s. 4d. postage). Packets must be marked "Express," and letters bear a broad blue or black vertical line back and front. (4) Special delivery on Sundays of postal packets (except parcels) handed in on Saturdays. Limited inter-city services, for London, Belfast, and certain provincial cities (except that the service is not in operation from Southampton to Belfast) are available only: (1) Sundays: reciprocally between certain towns as shown in the Post Office Guide; (2) Good Friday: to London only from towns in (1). Delivery is made from offices only during periods when they are open for telegraphic business. The handing-in offices in London are:—The London Chief Office, King Edward St., E.C.1., W. and S.W. District Offices, and (Branch Offices) Camberwell Green, Clapham Common, Hammer-smith Broadway, Holloway, Leicester Square, Stratford, and Swiss Cottage. Packets, marked "Express: Sunday Delivery," must be handed in in time to catch preceding night mails (in London 4.15 p.m.—6.30 p.m. for provincial towns). The latest time of posting to Belfast should be ascertained at selected office of posting. Fee is 3s. 6d. in addition to postage. Not available for parcels. (5) ("Railfax.") Postal packets not liable to registration are despatched by rail, met, and specially delivered in Britain, Douglas (I.O.M.), Northern Ireland, Jersey and Guernsey. Inclusive charges, 2 oz., 6s.; 1 lb. (maximum) 7s. 6d.; but packets from Jersey and Guernsey to Britain, Douglas or N. Ireland may not exceed 2 oz. (6) A Railway Parcel is similarly accelerated at the cost of a telegram, of railway charges, and of Service (1) at both ends of its journey.

RAILWAY LETTERS, &c.—A letter, not liable to registration, may be handed in at the parcel or booking office of a railway station, at any time when the station is open to the public, for conveyance by the next available train. A railway letter may either be addressed to be called for at a station, or to the residence of the addressee in which case it is posted at the station named in the address. The service is available between any two stations in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, between Great Britain and Jersey, Guernsey and Douglas (I.O.M.), and from Great Britain and Northern Ireland to the Irish Republic. It is not available at or to stations of the London Transport Executive. Fees (besides postage): at stations in Great Britain, Jersey, Guernsey and Douglas (I.O.M.), 2 oz., 1s. 6d.; 4 oz., 1s. 8d.; 1 lb. (maximum), 2s. 7d.; at stations in Northern Ireland, 2 oz. (maximum), 7d. The maximum weight for letters to the Irish Republic is 2 oz. Except on Sundays, or in Irish Republic, the letter can be delivered Express under Service (3), or directly from the station (Service (1)) by wiring for messenger to meet it. For other combinations of rail and express, see preceding paragraph, Services (5) and (6).

AIRWAY LETTERS.—On certain internal air routes operated by the British European Airways Corporation, letters may be handed in at the airport or town terminal for conveyance by the next available direct air service to be transferred to the post at the distant town terminal or to be called for at the airport or town terminal. Fees (besides postage): \approx 0z., 11d.; 4 0z., 1s. 6d.; 1 lb. (maximum), 2s. 4d. The conditions on which this service operates are, in general, similar to those applying to the Railway Letter Service. The service is not available to the Irish Republic or to any country overseas. Full information can be obtained from any office of B.E.A.C.

INTERNATIONAL EXPRESS SERVICE.—Delivery by special messenger of correspondence (including parcels) to or from certain countries. In some cases the service is restricted to certain towns. 1s. is paid by the sender, the rest, if any, by addressee, according to the local regulations. (See P. O. Guide.)

POST CARDS.—Minimum size $4 \times 2\frac{1}{2}$ in., maximum $5\frac{1}{2} \times 4\frac{1}{2}$ in. The left-hand half of the address side may be used for correspondence, inland or abroad. Plain cards, if as stiff as official cards and not under $\frac{1}{16}$ th inch thick, may also be used both inland and abroad.

Reply Post Cards for abroad must have the heading Carte Postale avec réponse payée on first part, and on the second part (valid only to country of origin) Carte Postale—Réponse.

BUSINESS REPLY SERVICE (Inland, excluding Irish Republic). This service enables a person or firm to receive cards, letters, etc. from clients without prepayment of postage, the postage together with a fee of 1d. being paid by the addressee on each card or letter delivered.

A licence to use the service must be obtained from the Post Office.

PRINTED PAPER POST (including former BOOK POST).—For certain printed or written matter (p. 1165).

By this post may be sent books and other works of a literary character, with or without written dedications, and in the inland service any other written, typed or printed matter not being in the nature of a letter, drawings, paintings, photographic prints, engravings, maps, &c., together with normal non-fragile binding and anything necessary for safe transmission. Commercial printed forms, legal documents, printers' copy and proofs, examination papers, answers and corrections, the writing on which refers solely to the subject matter of the document, Christmas and picture cards with date, names and addresses of sender and addressee, and with conventional formulas not exceeding 5 words or initials, are also admitted, and circulars (if in characters resembling typewriting, only under special conditions). To overseas, only printed matter in general is admitted as Printed Papers: items written or drawn, such as receipts, invoices and statements of account, admissible in the inland printed post service, go only as Commercial Papers, and there are other differences. Written chess-moves, and puzzle-solutions, also blank stationery, are inadmissible. Printed papers being subject to examination in the post, the cover, if any, must be capable of easy removal and replacement for purposes of examination, i.e. without breaking, tearing, ungumming, or cutting. (For full conditions see the Post Office Guide or free leaflet P. 386.)

ARTICLES FOR THE BLIND (Inland, including Irish Republic). Books, papers, literature and specified articles specially adapted for the use of the blind are admissible subject to certain conditions. A packet should bear on the outside the indication "Articles for the Blind" and the name and address of the sender. Packets must be capable of easy examination in the post. Rate:—2 lb., $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; 5 lb., 1d.; 8 lb., $1\frac{1}{2}$ d.; 11 lb., 2d.; 15 lb., $2\frac{1}{2}$ d. Limits: weight, 15 lb.; size, as for letters.

BLIND LITERATURE, COMMONWEALTH AND FOREIGN (In other respects treated as Printed Papers).—Papers, periodicals and books, if printed in special type (also plates for embossing blind literature, and voice recordings and special paper intended solely for the use of the blind) subject to certain conditions of posting, marked outside "Blind Literature", with name and address of sender. Packets must be capable of easy examination in the post. They may be sent post free by surface route to all parts.

SAMPLE POST (not to Irish Republic).—Restricted to bona-fide Trade Samples, without saleable value; but keys sent unaccompanied, printers' blocks, fresh cut flowers, and certain scientific specimens can be sent abroad by Sample Post. Packets must be capable of easy examination in the post. (See p. 1165.)

SMALL PACKETS POST (Commonwealth & Foreign).—For small articles of merchandise by Printed Paper mails. Registration is allowed; no insurance. Available only to certain countries. A green Customs label must be affixed and, in certain cases, Customs declarations prepared. (See p. 1165.)

NEWSPAPER POST (INLAND).—For newspapers "registered at the G.P.O." (p. 1165).

The cover, if any, must be open at both ends and easily removable, and copies should be folded so that title is readily inspected. No writing or additional printing is permitted, other than the words "with compliments", name and address of sender, request for return if undelivered and a reference to a page.

Newspapers not "registered at G.P.O." or supplements to registered newspapers apart from their ordinary publications should be sent at printed paper rate.

STAMPS, ENVELOPES, POST CARDS, &c.

Stamps of reigns before that of King George V are no longer valid.

POSTAGE STAMPS (used also for receipts, telegrams, and certain Inland Revenue duties) are sold for the respective values of $\frac{1}{2}$ d., 1d., $1\frac{1}{2}$ d., 2d., $2\frac{1}{2}$ d., 3d., 4d., $4\frac{1}{2}$ d., 5d., 6d., 7d., 8d., 9d., 10d., 11d., 1s., 1s. 3d., 1s. 6d., 2s. 6d., 5s., 10s., and £1. Books containing 6 3d., 6 $1\frac{1}{2}$ d., 6 1d. and 6 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. stamps, 3s., or containing 18 3d. stamps, 4s. 6d., or containing 12 3d. and 6 each of $1\frac{1}{2}$ d., 1d. and $\frac{1}{2}$ d. stamps, 5s. Embossed or impressed postage stamps cut out of envelopes, post cards, letter cards, a r letter forms, newspaper-wrappers, or telegram forms, may be used as adhesive stamps in payment of postage or telegrams provided they are not imperfect, mutilated, or defaced in any way.

MONEY ORDERS

Advice of Payment: 6d. inland (and to Irish Republic), 3d. for foreign and colonial orders (to certain countries). Payment may be stopped (see 9d.); or deferred up to 10 days in case of Ordinary Inland Money Orders. Inland orders (including those for Irish Republic) may be crossed for payment through a bank.

Inland Ordinary Money Orders (and to Irish Republic).

The poundage charged is, for sums not exceeding £10, 1s. 0d.; and for each additional £10, 2d., to £50 (maximum), 1s. 8d. No order may contain a fractional part of 1d. The rules and regulations are on the forms issued. No poundage is charged for M.O. in payment of many Revenues (e.g., Income Tax) if demand note is produced.

Inland Telegraph Money Orders (and to Irish Republic).

Money may be transmitted by this means from most Money Order offices which despatch telegrams, and paid at most of those which also deliver telegrams, and at some other offices. On Sundays, Christmas Day and Good Friday and in Scotland on New Year's Day, Inland telegraph money orders for amounts not exceeding £5 are issued at all Money Order Offices which transact telegraph business at the times when these offices are open for telegraph counter business and sums up to £5 are payable at, or in the delivery areas of, London Chief Office, the District Offices, and some Branch Offices in London, and all head and many of the more important other offices outside London.

Poundage at the same rate as for Ordinary Inland Money Orders, plus supplementary fee of 6d., and cost of official Telegram of Advice, 3s. 0d. for Inland Orders and 3s. 6d. for Irish Republic Orders.

Ordinary Money Orders for Abroad.

Poundage, up to £2, 2s.; £5, 3s.; £10, 4s., and thereafter 2s. per £10 or part thereof. Limits of amount vary according to destination but in any case may not exceed £40; validity, normally 12 months.

At present, not more than £10 per day per remitter can be sent to Canada or any other country outside the Scheduled Territories (formerly known as the Sterling Area), and then only when the purpose of the remittance is declared on a special form and permission has previously been granted by the Accountant General's Department, G.P.O. (Postal Remittance Branch I).

Telegraph Money Orders for Abroad.

Only to certain countries, e.g., Australia, Canada, India, New Zealand, S. Africa, U.S.A. Poundage as in last paragraph, plus cost of official Telegram of Advice (at Letter Telegram rate, if desired, to certain countries) plus a supplementary fee. For restrictions, see the preceding paragraph.

POSTAL ORDERS

Postal Orders (British pattern) are issued and paid at nearly all post offices in the United Kingdom during the ordinary hours of business on weekdays. They are also issued and paid in most countries within the Commonwealth. Transmission of postal orders to Canada or any other country outside the Scheduled Territories (formerly known as the Sterling Area) is prohibited except to members of H.M. Forces under special arrangements, particulars of which may be obtained at any Post Office transacting Postal Order business. They are paid (but not issued) in Irish Republic. They are printed with a counterfoil, for every multiple of 6d. up to 5s., for 6s., and by 1s. steps up to £1 1s. then for £2 and every multiple of £1 up to £5. Adhesive, unmarked current British Postage Stamps not exceeding two in number, if affixed in the 2 spaces provided, increase the value of an Order by not more than 5d. (orders up to 4s. 6d.) or 11d. (orders of 5s. and upwards). Poundage: 6d. and 1s., 2d.; 1s. 6d. to £1 1s., 3d.; £2 to £5, 6d.

The name of payee must be inserted. If not presented within six months of the last day of the month of issue, Orders must be sent to the local Head Postmaster, or in London to the District Postmaster, for verification, and commission equal to the original poundage will be charged.

INLAND TELEGRAMS

Telegrams are accepted during counter business hours at any post office or railway station at which telegraph business is transacted. They may also be handed with the necessary payment to messengers delivering telegrams or express letters. Telegrams may be tendered by telephone at all times. Rate, 12 words or less 3s. 0d. (to Irish Republic 12 words or less 3s. 6d.), each further word 3d. Standard Greetings and Birthday Greetings telegrams on appropriately designed forms in decorative envelopes cost 3s. 6d. for 12 words or less, each extra word 3d. Wedding or Birthday Greetings telegrams on a large de luxe folded card with matching envelope cost 5s. 0d. for 12 words or less, each extra word 3d. Greetings telegrams may be tendered by telephone or handed in any day prior to day of delivery. Priority rate (not available to or from Irish Republic) 1s. extra. A redirection charge of 3s. 0d. per telegram is made if the original and new addresses are in the same place, delivery area or London Postal District. In all other cases the charge is at the ordinary inland rate. Telegrams, except Press telegrams, handed in on Sundays and (exc. Scotland) Good Friday or Christmas Day are charged 1s. 6d. extra. Replies may be prepaid up to 12s.; the reply vouchers may be used in payment or part payment of any Post Office telegram or any telegraph or telephone account rendered by the Post Office, or its value refunded to sender of original telegram. Receipt for charges free on request. Certified copy 1s. 6d., sometimes more. There is no charge for delivery in the United Kingdom. In the Irish Republic delivery is free to addresses within 1 mile of the delivery office; beyond that any necessary charge will be collected on delivery.

TELEGRAPH OFFICES ALWAYS OPEN IN LONDON:—Chief Office (King Edward Street, E.C.1), Leicester Sq., Charing Cross Road, W.C.2.

COMMONWEALTH AND FOREIGN TELEGRAMS

The charges for ordinary or FULL RATE telegrams from the United Kingdom to places abroad are shown below and on pp. 1174-7. The minimum charge for an ordinary telegram is as for 5 words. To any place in the British Commonwealth the full rate does not exceed 1s. 10d. per word. Urgent telegrams may be sent at double the ordinary rate.

For telegrams of a social character the GLT (Commonwealth Social Telegram) service is available to Commonwealth countries. The charge is 9s. 2d. for 11 words or less (including the indicator =GLT=), and 11d. for each word after 11 except to Canada, Cyprus, the British West Indies, Bermuda, British Guiana, and British Honduras to which lower charges apply.

Most countries admit Letter Telegrams at half the full rate but there is a minimum charge as for 22 words. Letter Telegrams, which must be written in plain language, are subject to delay in transmission in favour of ordinary telegrams.

Phototelegrams, i.e. pictures, photographs, drawings, plans, printed, typed or written documents may be telegraphed in Facsimile to many European and extra-European countries. Full particulars of all telegraph charges and services available to any country will be given on enquiry at any Postal Telegraph or Post Office Cable & Wireless Office.

RADIOTELEGRAMS

Radiotelegrams for transmission to ships at sea in any part of the world may be handed in at any Postal Telegraph Office or dictated over the telephone. The standard rate of charge for messages sent to ships through coast stations in the British Isles is 1s. 6d. a word; there is a reduced rate of 9d. a word for messages to ships regularly engaged on short voyages to or from ports in the British Isles. The address should contain (1) the name and/or rank of the addressee, (2) the name of the ship, and (3) either the name of a British coast station if the sender knows that the ship is within range of that station, or, if the sender does not know the name of the appropriate coast station, standard rate messages should be addressed to Portsmouth Radio or "Wireless", and reduced rate messages to Wick Radio.

Radiotelegrams may be sent to service personnel on board H.M. Ships in foreign waters at a charge of 11d. a word and in the Home Fleet at a charge of 6d. a word. The address should contain (1) the name of the addressee and his rank or rating, (2) the word "Warship" (or "Submarine") (3) the name of the ship (or identifying letters and number) and (4) the word "Admiraltyradio" (or, in the case of the Home Fleet, the words "Homewaters Admiraltyradio").

Radiotelegrams may also be sent to R.A.F. vessels at a reduced rate of 6d. per word. Such radiotelegrams should be addressed in the same way as for commercial vessels and in addition should include the words R.A.F. Vessel before the name of the ship.

INLAND TELEPHONES

The quarterly rental for single exclusive lines for residential subscribers is £3; if over 3 miles from the exchange, an extra 10s. a quarter is payable in respect of each furlong or part thereof beyond the 3 miles. Shared service, in which two subscribers use one line but enjoy nearly all the facilities of exclusive line service, is offered under certain conditions. For this service a rebate of 10s. 0d. is allowed from the normal quarterly rental for a single exclusive line. Calls to exchanges within the local call area are charged 3d. (4d. from a call office). Trunk call charges (viz., to exchanges outside the local call area) vary with distance but do not exceed 3s. 6d. by day (for 3 minutes) and 2s. 6d. during the cheap rate period which is 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. weeknights and 2 p.m. Sundays to 6 a.m. Mondays (7s. 6d. and 3s. 3d. to Irish Republic). Call office charge 3d. extra. Personal calls (to specified person) 1s. 6d. extra (cheap rate period 9d.); if the person cannot be found nothing further is charged. Where subscriber trunk dialling facilities are provided local and dialled trunk calls are charged in 2d. units (3d. from a call office); the length of time per unit depends on the distance of the call, from 3 minutes for local calls to 12 seconds for distances over 50 miles (the time allowance is increased during the cheap rate period). For fuller information see Preface to Telephone Directory.

TELEX SERVICE

Annual rental of teleprinter, associated equipment and line to Telex exchange is £160 per annum in most cases. Where nearest Telex exchange is more than 30 miles distant an additional rental based on the excess mileage applies. Charges for inland calls between exchanges 35 miles or more apart are about half equivalent charges for daytime telephone calls. International calls to European countries are about two-thirds of equivalent charges for telephone calls; to United States of America and to South Africa charges are the same as for telephone calls, i.e. £1 per minute (minimum three minutes). Automatic equipment allowing messages to be sent at the maximum speed of 66 words per minute can be rented in addition. Descriptive booklet available from all Telephone Managers; for local address see telephone directory.

OVERSEAS TELEPHONES

The caller should ask for CONTINENTAL or INTERNATIONAL Service. Callers in London with Dial Telephones with letters should dial "CON" or "INT." The charges shown on p. 1176 are minimum rates for a call of three minutes duration, each further minute or part thereof costing one-third of this charge. Transferred charge calls are possible with certain countries. Details of countries and rates will be advised by the Continental and International Exchange.

A. Continental Service.

The rates quoted are for calls from all places in Great Britain, Northern Ireland, the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands to the first zone of the country concerned. For Personal Calls an additional charge equivalent to one minute's conversation is made.

B. International Service.

Minimum rates, the same from all parts of Great Britain, Northern Ireland, the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands are shown below. Hours of Service to most countries are limited. A person to person call may be booked without extra charge; if it fails (or call is cancelled) a Report Charge is made (4s. to 6s.) but not if call matures. On Radio Services a time allowance is made for interruption by adverse conditions. A limited duration facility (minimum 3 mins.) is available enabling connection to be terminated after a specified period of effective conversation. A reduced rate (10 p.m. to 10 a.m. on weekdays and all day on Sundays) is available on services with Canada, U.S.A., Cuba and Mexico. Reduced Sunday rates apply also in certain other services.

C. Long Range Ships' Service.

A Long Range Service is available to certain British and foreign ships. Minimum charge for 3 minutes to ships in Northern waters within limits, 35° W., 35° E. and 35° N. and in the Mediterranean Sea is 36s.; beyond these limits it is 60s.

D. Medium Range Ships' Service

A medium-range radiotelephone service is also available between telephone subscribers in Great Britain and Ireland, and suitably equipped trawlers, coasting vessels and other small ships. The service is available continuously through the Radio Stations listed below and normally provides satisfactory communications over sea-ranges up to about 150 miles from these coast stations.

Cullercoats Radio	Whitley Bay 23479
Humber Radio	Maplethorpe 3147
Ifracombe Radio	Ifracombe 845
Land's End Radio	St. Just 23
Niton Radio	Niton 495
North Foreland Radio	Thanet 21303
Oban Radio	Oban 2059
Portpatrick Radio	Portpatrick 311
Seaforth Radio	Liverpool/Waterloo 3636
Stonehaven Radio	Stonehaven 19
Wick Radio	Wick 9

The inclusive charge for a call is 10s. 6d. for three minutes (minimum) and 3s. 6d. for each additional minute or part of a minute. Subscribers should book their call through their local telephone exchange, stating the name of the ship and, whenever possible, the name and telephone number of the coast station with which the ship is expected to be in contact. Calls to ships cannot be accepted from telephone call boxes or from subscribers' telephones fitted with coin-collecting boxes.

The service is also available for calls to and from H.M. Ships in home waters (excluding H.M. Ships proceeding to and from foreign naval stations).

The conditions of service and charges are the same as those which apply to the service with small ships, but as H.M. Ships do not normally keep watch for radiotelephone calls from the shore, a subscriber should not attempt to book a call to one of H.M. Ships unless prior arrangements have been made with the person concerned on board ship. The subscriber must also state either the name of the coast station through which the call is to be set up, or the approximate position of the ship at the time the call is required.

E. Short-range Ships' Service

A short-range VHF radiotelephone service can now be provided between telephone subscribers (but not from coin-box telephones) in the United Kingdom and suitably equipped ships. This service is continuously available and normally provides satisfactory communication over sea-ranges up to about 40 miles from the following coast stations:

Clyde Radio (Rothesay, Bute)...Greenock 22255
 Niton Radio (Ventnor, Isle of Wight).....Niton 495
 North Foreland Radio (Broadstairs, Kent).....Thanet 21303

To obtain service over this system subscribers should ask their local operator for VHF Radiotelephone Service and when connected to the coast station operator, should state the name of the ship required, and the name of the person on board with whom conversation is required.

Charges for calls originating within approximately 35 miles of the telephone exchange serving the appropriate coast station are 7s. for a minimum period of three minutes and 2s. 4d. for each additional minute or part thereof. Charges for calls originating outside this approximate area are 9s. for a minimum period of three minutes and for each additional minute or part thereof 3s. The fixed time, transfer charge, and personal call services are not available.

If completion of the call is not possible owing to adverse VHF radio conditions, endeavour will be made to complete the call on the medium-range service, providing the ship is suitably equipped, and the caller is willing to pay the charges appropriate to the medium-range service.

GENERAL SUNDAY AND HOLIDAY ARRANGEMENTS

(For Express services see p. 1169)

ON SUNDAY THROUGHOUT THE U.K. no Parcel Post, non-telegraphic Money Order, Postal Order business is transacted, nor is there a delivery of letters, &c. There is a collection for night despatch in most places. IN LONDON, the Chief Office and Leicester Square Branch Office are open always, and some other offices are open from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. for stamps, telephone, telegrams, and with some exceptions telegraph money orders up to £5 and savings bank demand withdrawals; and National Savings Stamps encashment up to £3. OUTSIDE LONDON, most Head Offices and some country telegraph Sub-offices open 9-10.30 a.m. (Scotland 9-10 a.m.) for stamps, telegrams, registration and with some exceptions telegraph money orders up to £5 and Savings Bank demand withdrawals; and National Savings Stamps encashment up to £3; but all town Sub-offices, and most non-telegraph country offices, are closed.

Christmas Day, Boxing Day and Good Friday

London: One delivery of letters and parcels on Christmas Day; none on Boxing Day and Good Friday. Most offices are closed on Christmas Day. Selected offices open from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. for all classes of business on Boxing Day and for "Sunday" business on Good Friday.

Outside London: In Scotland, normal weekday deliveries; offices open as usual on Boxing Day and Good Friday; on Christmas Day some town sub-offices are shut, and after 2 p.m. many chief offices are open only for telegraph business. In England, Wales and Northern Ireland one delivery of letters and parcels on Christmas Day and Good Friday; none on Boxing Day; most offices are closed on Christmas Day; head offices and some country telegraph sub-offices are open from 9 a.m. to 10.30 a.m. for all classes of business on Boxing Day and for "Sunday" business on Good Friday.

Other Public Holidays

In Scotland on New Year's Day office hours and classes of business are as on Sundays; no delivery of letters and parcels. Post Office counter services and postal deliveries on other public holidays in the U.K. vary in accordance with local conditions—details may be obtained from the local Head Postmaster.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

The Weights and Measures Act of 1878, superseding all previous laws, enacts the legal measures for Great Britain, basing them upon the Standard Yard and the Standard Pound, in the custody of the Standards Department of the Board of Trade.

The YARD and the POUND are the only two independent standards for weights and measures. The GALLON, the capacity standard, wet or dry, is based upon the Pound. The Act of 1878 defines the Gallon as the volume of ten standard pounds of distilled water weighed in air against brass weights, both water and air at the temperature of 62° Fahrenheit, with the barometer at 30 inches.

New definitions for an international yard and pound were adopted on Jan. 1, 1959. (See p. 1114.)

Apothecaries' Weight.

Measures of Weight.

20 grains = 1 scruple (℥i).

3 scruples = 1 drachm (℥i).

8 drachms = 1 ounce.

Measures of Capacity.

60 minims (min.) = 1 fluid drachm.

8 fluid drachms = 1 fluid ounce.

20 fluid ounces = 1 pint.

8 pints = 1 GALLON.

The Apothecaries' grain is the Avoirdupois grain, and the Apothecaries' ounce is the Troy ounce, of 480 grains. The Apothecaries' drachm is not the same as the Avoirdupois dram, and is spelled differently. A fluid ounce of distilled water at a temperature of 62° Fahrenheit is equal in weight to the Avoirdupois ounce (437.5 grains). A fluid drachm (54.6875 grains) is equal in weight to TWO Avoirdupois drams.

Approximate Equivalents:—

1 "table-spoon" = $\frac{1}{2}$ fluid oz.; 1 "dessert-spoon" = $\frac{1}{4}$ fluid oz.; 1 "tea-spoon" = $\frac{1}{8}$ fluid oz.

Avoirdupois Weight.

7000 grains (gr.) = 1 pound (lb.).

16 drams (dr.) = 1 ounce.

16 ounces = 1 POUND.

14 pounds = 1 stone.

28 pounds = 1 quarter (of a cwt.).

100 pounds = 1 cental.

4 quarters (112 lb.) = 1 hundredweight (cwt.).

20 hundredweight (2,240 lb.) = 1 ton.

Troy Weight.

24 grains = 1 pennyweight (dwt.).

20 dwt. = 1 ounce.

For gold and silver the ounce, divided decimally, and not into grains, is the sole unit of weight. The Troy ounce is the same as the Apothecaries' ounce = 480 Avoirdupois grains (31.1035 Grammes) in weight. There is no Troy POUND.

Jewellers' Weight.

The metric carat of 200 milligrammes is the legal standard of weight for precious stones and pearls.

Measures of Capacity.

4 gills = 1 pint.

2 pints = 1 quart.

4 quarts = 1 GALLON.

1 gallon = 277.274 cubic inches.

2 gallons = 1 peck.

8 gallons = 1 bushel.

8 bushels = 1 quarter.

A chaldron is 36 bushels = $4\frac{1}{2}$ quarters.

Measures of Length.

12 inches (in.) = 1 foot (ft.).

3 feet = 1 yard (yd.).

Thermometer Comparisons.

NOTE.—The normal temperature of the human body is 98.4° F., or 37° (36.5°) C., or 29.5° R. Freezing point = 32° F. = 0° C. = 0° R.; Boiling point = 212° F. = 100° C. = 80° R. "Absolute" temperature is Temperature reckoned from "Absolute Zero," which is at 273° C. below 0° C., 459.4° below 0° F., and 218.4° below 0° R., and is denoted by the letter "K."

CONVERSION.
Let F = Fahr.
" C = Cent.
" R = Réaum.

$$\left. \begin{aligned} & \frac{9}{5} F = \frac{9}{5} C + 32 \\ & \frac{5}{9} (F - 32) = C \end{aligned} \right\} \begin{aligned} & F = \frac{9}{5} C + 32 \\ & R = \frac{9}{5} (F - 32) \end{aligned}$$

6 feet = 1 fathom.
 5½ yards = 1 perch or rod or pole.
 22 yards = 1 chain = 100 links.
 10 chains = 1 furlong.
 8 furlongs = 1 mile = 1,760 yards.
 3 miles = 1 league (obsolete).

Height of Horses: Hand = 4 inches. Span = 9 inches.
A Cricket Pitch is 22 yards (one chain) between the stumps.

A Lawn Tennis Court is 78 × 36 feet (double) and 78 × 27 feet (single).

A Croquet Lawn is 105 × 84 feet (full size) or a smaller multiple of 5 × 4 feet.

A Badminton Court is 44 × 20 ft., with net 30 ins. deep and 5 ft. high at centre.

A Polo Ground is 300 × 160 yds.
A Football Ground (Association) is 130 × 100 yds. (full size) and 120 × 80 yds. for international matches; (Rugby) 120 × 75 yds. (full size).

Square or Surface Measure.

144 sq. inches = 1 sq. foot.
 9 sq. feet = 1 sq. yard.
 30½ sq. yards = 1 sq. perch, or rod, or pole.
 40 perches = 1 rood.
 4 roods = 1 acre.
 10 square chains = 1 acre = 4,840 sq. yards.
 640 acres = 1 square mile.

Dimensions of an Acre.—The acre is 4,840 sq. yards, or 220 × 22 yards. The length of a side of a square acre is 69.57 yards; an area 110 × 22 yards (or 220 × 11 yards) would be half an acre; an area 55 × 22 yards (or 110 × 11 yards) would be one quarter of an acre, and so on.

Decimal Parts of an Acre.—The following note is appended to Ordnance Maps: "To convert Decimal Parts of an Acre into Roods and Perches, multiply by 4, this will give Roods and Decimals of a Rood, multiply this Decimal by 40, thus obtaining Perches and Decimals of a Perch."

Cubic Measure.

1,728 cubic inches = 1 cubic foot.
 27 cubic feet = 1 cubic yard.

Angular or Circular Measure.

60 seconds (") = 1 minute (').
 60 minutes = 1 degree (°).
 30 degrees = 1 sign (of the Zodiac. See p. 164).
 90 degrees = 1 right angle or quadrant.
 12 signs (4 quadrants) = 1 circumference.
 Diameter of circle × 3.1416 = circumference.
 Diameter squared × .7854 = area of circle.
 Diameter squared × 3.1416 = surface of sphere.
 Diameter cubed × .5236 = solidity of sphere.
 One degree of circumference ÷ 57.3 = radius.*
 Diameter of cylinder × 3.1416; product by length or height, gives the surface.

Diameter squared × .7854; product by length or height, gives solid content.

* Or, one radian (the angle subtended at the centre of a circle by an arc of the circumference equal in length to the radius) = 57.3 degrees, nearly.

Note.—A circle of 7 yards diameter has, in practice, a circumference of 22 yards = 1 chain.

Water Measures.

Cubic inch. = 252.458 grains.
 Gallon (277.274 cu. in.) . . . = 10 lb. (distilled).
 Cubic foot. = 62.321 lb.
 35.943 cubic ft. (224 gals.) . . = 1 ton.
 Weat for Ships: Tun, 220 gals., Butt 120, Puncheon 72, Barrel 36, Kilderkin 18 gals.
 An Inch of Rain on the surface of an acre (43,560 sq. feet) = 3,630 cubic feet = 100.992 tons.

Cisterns: A cistern 4 feet by 2½ and 3 deep will hold brimful 186.963 gallons, weighing 16 cwt. 2 qrs. 21.6 lbs. in addition to its own weight.

Fuel and Power

British Thermal Unit (B. Th. U.)—The amount of heat required to raise 1 lb of water through 1 degree Fahrenheit at or near 39.1 degrees F.

Unit of electricity (kilowatt-hour)—Output of 1,000 watts for one hour. 1 k.w.h. = 3,413 B.Th.U.

Therm = 100,000 B.Th.U. = 29.3 k.w.h.

Atmosphere = pressure of 24.23 lb. per sq. in. = 1 kilogram per sq. cm.

Petroleum

Barrel = 35 Imperial gallons = 42 U.S. gallons.

By Weight.

Petroleum products are commonly quoted in metric tonnes, the conversion to barrels varying slightly according to the specific gravity of the product, e.g. the metric tonne in the major oil producing states (U.S.A., Venezuela, Persian Gulf, Saudi-Arabia, Iraq, etc.) varies from 7.0 barrels per metric tonne to 7.7 barrels, and in the smaller oil producing states (e.g., Albania) is as low as 6.7 barrels per tonne. Crude petroleum in the United Kingdom, 7.355 barrels per metric tonne (2,205 lbs.); 7.472 barrels per long ton (2,240 lbs.).

Shipping

Gross tonnage.—The total volume of all the enclosed spaces of a vessel, the unit of measurement being a ton of 100 cubic feet.

Net tonnage.—The gross tonnage less certain deductions for crew space, engine room, water ballast and other spaces not used for passengers or cargo.

METRIC WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

See also "Conversion Tables for Weights and Measures."

In addition to the Imperial standard weights and measures, the use of the Metric system of weights and measures was made permissive in Great Britain in 1897.

In the Metric system, the standard of length is the METRE, the standard of weight is the KILOGRAM, and the standard of capacity is the LITRE. Accurate copies of the Metre, Kilogram, and Litre are kept in the custody of the Standards Office of the Board of Trade.

1.—MEASURES OF LENGTH.

10 millimetres = 1 centimetre = 0.39370113 inch.
 (mm.) (cm.)

10 centimetres = 1 decimetre = 3.9370113 inches.
 (dm.)

10 decimetres = 1 METRE (m) = 1.0936143 yards.
 10 metres = 1 dekametre = 10.936143 yards.
 (dam.)

10 dekametres = 1 hectometre = 109.36143 yards.

10 hectometres = 1 kilometre = 0.62137 mile.
 (km.)

A kilometre is approximately five-eighths of a mile, so that 8 kilometres (4.97082 miles) may be regarded as 5 miles.

2.—MEASURES OF SURFACE.

1 sq. centimetre = 0.15498 sq. inch.
 1 sq. METRE = 10.76365 sq. feet = 1.19596 sq. yds.

1 are (a) = 0.0988 rood.

1 hectare (10,000 sq. metres) (ha) = 2.4711 acres.

1 sq. kilometre = 0.38611 sq. mile.

3.—MEASURES OF CAPACITY.

- 1 centilitre (cl.) = 0.0704 gill.
 1 decilitre (dl.) = 0.17598 pint.
 1 LITRE (1/1,000 cubic metre) (lit.) = 1.7598 pints = 0.88 Imp. quart = 0.22 Imp. gallon.
 1 hectolitre (hl.) = 21.9975 Imp. gallons = 26.4177 U.S. gallons = 2.7497 Imp. bushels = 2.8377 U.S. bushels.
 1 cubic metre = 35.31338 cu. ft. = 1.30794 cu. yds. (cbm. or m³.)
 1 cubic cm. (water) = 1 gram; 1,000 cubic cm. (water) or 1 litre = 1 kilogram; 1 cubic metre (1,000 litres, 1,000 kilograms) = 1 metric ton.

A new standard metric measure of 25 millilitres was introduced in 1959 following approval by Order in Council.

4.—MEASURES OF WEIGHT.

- 1 centigram (cg.) = 0.15432 grains.
 1 decigram (dg.) = 1.5432 grains.
 1 gramme (gm.) = 15.4323 grains.
 1 dekagram (dag.) = 5.6438 drams.
 1 hectogram (hg.) = 3.5274 oz.
 1 KILOGRAM kg. = 32.1507 oz. Troy = 35.2734 oz. Avoirdupois = 2.2046223 lb. Avoirdupois.
 1 myriagram = 22.046223 lb. Avoirdupois.
 1 quintal (q.) = 220.46 lb. Avoirdupois = 2.2046 Centals = 1.9684 cwt.
 1 tonne (t.) = 0.98421 long ton = 1.10231 short tons.

- 1 hectolitre = 2.75 bushels.
 1 hectolitre per hectare = 1.11 bushels per acre.
 1 quintal = 3.6743 bushels.
 1 quintal per hectare . . 1.49 bushels per acre.

NOTE.—Folio means a sheet folded in half, quarto folded into four, and so on; thus, a crown 8vo page is one-eighth the size of a crown sheet. Books are usually bound up in sheets of 16 or 32 pages. Octavo books are generally printed 64 pages at a time (32 pages on each side of a sheet of quad); a crown octavo book of 320 pages will therefore require 5 sheets of quad crown, or 10 reams per 1,000 copies, the odd 16 sheets in each ream being allowed as waste. Newspapers (and some books in editions of 50,000 or over) are printed on rotary presses, for which the paper is supplied in continuous reels.

Sizes of Types

The type size chiefly used in "Whitaker" is 5½ point, or Ruby, set on a 6 point "body." The column contains 78 lines, and is 12 Pica ems wide; on an average every column contains about 3,200 letters, or 720 words.

Today type up to 14 point size is usually set by a keyboard machine, and mechanically cast in single letters or in complete lines of type (e.g. Monotype and Linotype). All type is cast to one uniform height ("type high"), which is 1½ inch. Individual letters vary in breadth, but the "body" of each character is of uniform depth throughout the alphabet in each size. The unit of breadth is the Pica M (Em) 6 of which, side by side, occupy one inch of space. The unit of depth is the Point (72 Points = 1 inch), so that 6 lines of 12 Point occupy 1 inch in depth. The names of the various sizes are:—

Brilliant (3½ point). A column the size of this in "Whitaker," if set in Brilliant would contain 132 lines, and about 1,450 words.

Diamond (4½ point) is the next size; the column would contain 102 lines, and about 1,020 words.

CORRECTING FOR THE PRESS

Copyright by WILLIAM CLOWES & SONS, LTD., Printers of "WHITAKER'S ALMANACK."

The following extract is set up incorrectly in order to explain the conventional methods of correcting for the Press:—

¹o/ The process of printing, when compared with that of writing, is unquestionably a ~~slow~~ process; provided a ²cheap sufficient number of any particular book are printed, so ⁴# as to render the proportion of the first expense upon a ⁶— single copy inconsiderable. If, for example, it were required, even at the present ~~moment~~ time, to print a single copy, or even three ⁸9/ ¹⁰trs. copies or four, only of any production, the cost of printing would be greater than the cost of transcribing.

¹⁰run on It is when hundreds and especially thousands, of the same work are demanded that the great value of the printing press in making knowledge cheap is particularly shown. [It is probable that the first printers did not take off more than two or three hundred, if so many, of their works, and, therefore, the earliest printed books must have been still dear, on account of the ¹²trs. limited number of their readers. CAXTON, as it appears by a passage in one of his books, was a ¹³v. p. cautious printer; and required something like an assurance that he should sell enough of any particular book to repay the cost of producing it. In his 'Legends of Saints,' he says, "I have submised (submitted) myself to translate into English the ¹⁴;/ ¹⁵ital. Saints of Legend,' called 'Legenda aurea' in Latin; and William, Earl of Arundel, ¹⁶l.c. ¹⁷stet ¹⁸w. f. sent me a ²⁰s. caps. worshipful gentleman, promising that my said lord ²²trs. should, during my life, give and grant to me a yearly fee, ²⁶— that is to note, a buck in summer and a doe in winter. ²⁷27/

²⁴ desired me — and promised to take a reasonable quantity of them — and

13. To commence a new paragraph.
- 14, 19, 21, and 27. To insert points and marks of quotation.
15. To have any particular part printed in italic.
16. To have words or letters printed in 'lower case,' or small letters; Roman is always understood, unless otherwise directed.
17. To have a word remain, which has been accidentally or erroneously marked. stet is the Latin for 'let it stand.'

HALL MARKS ON PLATE*

ASSAY OFFICE MARKS.—Official marks stamped on gold and silver plate at Assay Offices in the United Kingdom until 1921 and thenceforward in Great Britain.

Assay Office Distinguishing Mark.
 London (Goldsmiths' Hall) Leopard's Head (uncrowned from 1300 to 1478-9, when it became crowned until 1821, since when it has been uncrowned). From 1697-1720 this mark was used in London, for gold only and not for silver.

Birmingham ... Anchor.
 Chester City Arms (3 Garbs and a Sword).
 Sheffield Crown.
 Edinburgh Castle. (Ring.
 Glasgow Tree, Salmon, Bell, Bird and Dublin Harp crowned.

The Assay Offices at Bristol, Exeter, Newcastle upon Tyne, Norwich and York have long been closed.

Makers' Mark (instituted in 1363).—This is impressed by the maker, and consists of initial letter (or letters) indicating the Surname (or Christian and Surname) of the maker.

Date Mark (instituted in 1478-9).—The year in which the article is marked at the Assay Office is indicated by a letter on a shield, the type of letter and the shape of the shield being changed in cycles of 20, 25 or 26 years. The "year" (at Goldsmiths' Hall) runs from May 20 to May 28. In 20-year cycles (London, invariably, Chester, alternately with 25, and Sheffield, alternately with 25), the letters J, V, W, X, Y, Z are omitted; in 25-year cycles (Birmingham, Edinburgh and Dublin, and alternately at Chester and Sheffield) the letter "f" is omitted from the alphabet; at Sheffield in the first two cycles, letters were used not alphabetically but arbitrarily, at Glasgow all the letters are employed in a 26-year cycle.

The Standard Mark (originally "The King's Mark.")—The "lion passant," for silver articles only, was first used in 1544, and has been in use ever since (except during the Higher Standard period, 1697-1720). From 1544-9 it was crowned; since then, uncrowned.

The Sovereign's Head.—The portrait of the reigning Sovereign was impressed on all plate chargeable to duty assayed from 1784-1880-90. The duty on plate was removed in 1890, and the Sovereign's head does not appear on plate assayed before 1784 or after 1890.

The Crown.—On gold articles only, of the two higher standards (22 and 18 carats); on the lower standards (14 and 9 carats) the decimal (14.585 and 9.375). It is used on all silver articles in lieu of the lion passant.

Britannia.—A full-length figure of Britannia was impressed on silver plate of a special standard of fineness (12 oz. 20 dwt. of fine metal to each 10 dwt. of alloy) during a short period only, 1697-1720; since that date the Britannia quality has been manufactured in small quantities, bearing the figure of Britannia, with the lion's head erased and the date mark.

Starling Silver.—Articles of silver plate marked at an assay office are guaranteed to be of the requisite standard of purity and to contain 22 oz. 2 dwt. of fine metal to each 18 dwt. of alloy.

Fine Gold.—Articles of gold plate marked at an assay office are guaranteed to contain such amount of pure gold as is marked thereon by the assaying office in carats and decimals thereof.

An article marked with the letter F 1721-2 can be distinguished from letter F 1801-2 by the difference in the shape of the respective shields; as also those containing the crowned leopard's head and the lion passant; the absence of the sovereign's head in the former as against its presence in the latter case; the different form of the leopard's head (which was "crowned" until 1821); and lastly, the irregularity of the stamp in the first case as compared with the uniformity of the latter stamp. These again can be distinguished from F 1881-2 as before, by the different shield of the date letter only (the shields of the remaining marks being the same as those of 1801-2); the absence of crown on leopard's head, and the presence of the Queen's vice the King's head.

Jubilee Mark on Silver, 1935.

In 1935 permission was granted to celebrate a National Event by a special mark on silver plate. The special mark was applicable to the year 1935; but for the convenience of the trade it was arranged that articles marked during the previous two years could also bear the mark, the marks, as shown above, being (1) Maker's initials, (2) Standard mark known as the "Town Mark," (3) Assay Office mark (Goldsmiths' Hall), (4) Date mark, and (5) Special Silver Jubilee mark.

Imported Plate.

Any gold or silver plate or article manufactured out of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and brought to be assayed, stamped or marked at a British Assay Office must be marked in the manner prescribed by the Order in Council of May 11, 1906, under which the mark for each Assay Office is ordained to be:—London, the sign of the Constellation Leo; Birmingham, Equilateral Triangle; Chester, Acorn and two leaves; Sheffield, the sign of the Constellation Libra; Edinburgh, St. Andrew's Cross; Glasgow, double block letter F inverted; Dublin, Boujet. For both gold and silver the decimal equivalent is used as the standard mark with thecarat in numerals with a decimal equivalent—e.g. 22.016 or 18.750. The annual date letter is to be added by the Assay Office, as for plate, etc., of home manufacture.

THE PERIODS OF ENGLISH ARCHITECTURE

Date	Style
I. Before 55 B.C.	Ancient British.
II. 55 B.C. to A.D. 420	Roman Period.
III. A.D. 449 to Norman Conquest (1066)	Anglo-Saxon.
IV. 1066-1189 (i.e. to end 12th cent.)	Norman.
V. 1189-1307 (i.e. 13th cent.)	Early English (Lancet, or Geometrical)
VI. 1307-1377 (i.e. 14th cent.)	Decorated (or Curvilinear).
VII. 1377-1485 (i.e. 15th cent.)	Perpendicular (or Rectilinear).
VIII. 1485-1558 (i.e. first half 16th cent.)	Tudor.
IX. A.D. 1558-1625. Early Renaissance.	Elizabeth (A.D. 1558-1603). Jacobean (A.D. 1603-1625).
X. A.D. 1625-1830. Late Renaissance.	Stuart (A.D. 1625-1702). Queen Anne and Georgian (A.D. 1702-1830).
XI. Modern Architecture (The Age of Revivals)	William IV. (A.D. 1830-1837). Victoria (A.D. 1837-1901). Edward VII. (A.D. 1901-1910). George V. (A.D. 1910-1935). Edward VIII. (A.D. 1935). George VI. (A.D. 1936-1952).
XII. Recent Architecture. 20th cent.

This Comparative Table (from "A History of Architecture," by the late Sir Banister Fletcher) shows the approximate period of each style. It must, however, be remembered that the transition from one style to the next was slow and gradual, and can often hardly be traced.

EQUIVALENT INVESTMENTS

Examples:—To ascertain the yield of Consols at a price of £83 6s. 8d. look in the column headed 2½ per cent. for 83½, and it will be seen that the yield (column headed Return Per Cent.) is £3 os. od. Similarly, shares paying a fixed dividend of 6 per cent., if purchased at £189, will yield £3 3s. 6d. per cent.; while 5 per cent. shares at £152 10s. od. yield £3 5s. 7d. per cent.

When the annuity is payable at the beginning instead of at the end of the year, the amount for the following year less £1, must be taken. Thus, for £1 at 2½ per cent. for 25 years, take 26 years, £36.012, and deduct £1 = £35.012.

CHARITABLE APPEALS

THEY LOOK TO YOU FOR HELP

There is still all too much hardship among ex-soldiers and bereaved wives and children. Many are in financial difficulties. They must rely on the benevolent funds of Corps and Regimental Associations—which in turn rely on the Army Benevolent Fund, the central fund of all military charities.

This is a really good cause that deserves your support. Through the Army Benevolent Fund you can give help where it is most needed.

Donations and Legacies should be made payable to :—

PRINCIPAL CHARITABLE BEQUESTS OF THE YEAR

A list of the principal charitable bequests recorded since the last issue of the Almanack is appended. The term residue refers to the balance of an estate after legacies, charges and estate duty have been met. The bequests shown here are not necessarily payable during the year, as they may be governed by directions of the testator in his Will, or by the necessity of executors to hold assets for a period in order to preserve the value of the estate. The problem of paying estate duty has also to be considered, and this may last for a lengthy period, as shown by the sale of some of the Westminster family treasures in the past year, including the Rubens 'Adoration of the Magi', which sold for a world record figure.

The bequests in the period under review have followed the pattern of previous years, with the national charities receiving the major portion of bequests. Specific legacies and calculable residues show that the following charities received the amounts shown under bequests recorded in this list. Other small legacies to these societies, which are not recorded here, will increase these totals. Dr. Barnardo's Homes £120,000, the Imperial Cancer Research Fund £55,000, St. Dunstan's £47,000, the R.A.F. Benevolent Fund £44,000, National Society for Cancer Relief £12,000, the British Empire Cancer Campaign £33,000, the Royal National Lifeboat Institution £44,000, the Missions to Seamen £12,500, the R.S.P.C.A. £26,000, the Royal National Institute for the Blind £22,000, the Salvation Army £31,000, the N.S.P.C.C. £21,000, the Children's Aid Society £10,000, the Distressed Gentlefolks Aid Association £32,000, the Church Army £18,500, and the Friends of the Poor £60,000.

Subject to a life interest the residue of the £239,673 estate of Miss Frances D. Hague is left to Kings College Hospital, and Miss Constance A. Grove-Grady left one-half of the residue of her £99,056 estate to The Florence Nightingale Hospital—two of the largest bequests to hospitals recorded since the introduction of the National Health Service.

The uneasy state of the world may have been in the thoughts of Miss Victoria M. Hartwell, who bequeathed the residue of her estate to the Society of Friends, to be applied in such manner "as will best serve the cause of international friendship and peace".

Mrs. Agnes Spencer, widow of the co-founder of Marks and Spencer, left the residue of her fortune to a Charitable Trust, and Sir Louis Sterling, who sold newspapers in the streets of New York as a boy and came to Britain in a cattle boat, left benefits for Jewish and other charities from his £667,250 estate, made in the gramophone and radio industries which he pioneered in this country.

Last year saw another attempt to restrict the publication of Wills in newspapers in the form of a Private Member's Bill, which was heavily opposed and amended out of existence.

Name	Gross Value
Mr. George Murray Andrews, of Redmarley d'Abitot, Gloucs.	£331,625	£10,000 to The Old Etonian Trust, 1/5th of the residue each to the Distressed Gentlefolks Aid Association and The Guild of Aid for Gentlefolks, and 2/5ths of the residue to The Friends of the Poor.
Mrs. Mary Ann Austin, of Rushden, Northants	£12,074	£5,000 and the residue to the Imperial Cancer Research Fund.
Mr. James Bayne, of Heaton Moor, Stockport	£105,015	Subject to life interests the residue for charities in England and Scotland as Trustees decide.
Dr. George Macdonald Bennett, C.B., F.R.S., of Worcester Park, Surrey.	£26,916	The residue to Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

Name	Gross Value
Mrs. Winifred Bryant, of Hoddesdon, Herts.	£21,218	The residue to The Royal National Institute for the Blind.
Mr. Robert James Cochran, of St. Andrews Hospital, Northampton.	£69,158	The residue equally between the Salvation Army and Dr. Barnardo's Homes.
Mr. Arthur James Cole, of Kingsland, Herefordshire.	£19,244	The residue to Dr. Barnardo's Homes.
Mrs. Elizabeth Edith Copper, of Hove.	£17,766	The residue to Dr. Barnardo's Homes.
Mrs. Mildred Cowern, of Wolverhampton.	£122,454	£10,000 each to the Imperial Cancer Research Fund and R.N.L.I. and the residue as to one-half to The London Association for the Blind, and one-fourth each to the British Home for Incurables, Streatham, and The Royal Hospital and Home for Incurables, Putney.
Mrs. Ellen Doyle, of Ilfracombe, Devon.	£19,038	The residue to St. Dunstan's.
Mr. William Joseph Ellis, of Southport, Lancs.	£44,159	Subject to annuities the residue to Dr. Barnardo's.
Mr. Thomas Henry Emberton, of Lea near Ellesmere, Salop.	£11,823	The residue to St. Dunstan's.

CENTRAL COUNCIL FOR THE CARE OF CRIPPLES

FOUNDED 1919

(Registered in accordance with the National Assistance Act, 1948)

* * *

The Central Council for the Care of Cripples has, for 40 years, since 1919, brought help to those suffering from crippling conditions.

The Council has set itself high targets and aims . . . typical of these is a completely new research programme launched this year for children suffering from hydrocephalus (water on the brain). £4,000 is needed to carry out this project.

Where the State services leave off the Council is at work—whether it is its Hesley Hall School for severely handicapped children or the travelling exhibition of simple aids which has brought a new concept of living to thousands of the disabled.

The Central Council carries out vital work for the nation entirely financed by bequests and gifts, and will be happy and proud to send full details of its work to well-wishers.

THE CLAPTON MISSION

is one of the foremost agencies in the east London Borough of Hackney for work among young people, with its strong uniformed organisations, and it cares especially for Old-age Pensioners with their many present-day needs.

Its Rest and Holiday Home at Herne Bay is a blessing to all who need a holiday but whose means are limited.

It has maintained with vigour through 75 years a ministry of evangelical witness and social welfare. It serves all regardless of class or creed.

Please help to maintain this great work. Gifts will be gratefully received by

They need more than sympathy!

The blind are full of enthusiasm and hope for the future. They are determined to find self-reliance and to make four senses do the work of five. But they must have the opportunity to learn and to become skilled in craft or trade. Teaching the blind is a highly specialised task. It needs instructors, premises, equipment, and it needs money. To do this vital job properly — as you would want it done for yourself or your family — voluntary help is still essential.

By Will or Codicil or Covenant...

May we suggest to Legal or Financial Advisers that when questions of their clients' benefactions arise the worthiness of the Royal Air Force Benevolent Fund may be wholeheartedly and deservedly commended.

Briefly, The Royal Air Force Benevolent Fund provides help to R.A.F. personnel disabled while flying or during other service. It assists the widows and dependants of those who lose their lives and helps with the children's education. It gives practical assistance to those suffering on account of sickness and general distress.

The need for help in nowise lessens in peace or war. Our immeasurable gratitude to that "Immortal Few" can hardly cease while memory itself endures.

FOUNDED BY THE LATE MISS SMALLWOOD

Patron: Her Majesty The Queen

LEGACIES, SUBSCRIPTIONS AND DONATIONS—Where are they?

Please remember our numerous poor ladies in want. Many elderly and suffering—trying to exist in these hard and difficult times. Will you help this very human cause? If you cannot give a donation now, will you kindly think of the Society when you make your Will? Donations and New Annual Subscriptions will be thankfully received.

Please make cheques payable to: tell me . . .

“Grown-ups

that this is the happiest time of my life. I think it must be, because I've never been so happy since Spurgeon's began to care for me.”

Two hundred boys and girls are fed, clothed and given every chance in life in the Christian atmosphere of Spurgeon's. These Homes cost £900 a week to maintain—and are dependent on voluntary contributions. There is no Government aid.

Please help by sending a gift to Mr. Percy Hide, Secretary.
